PREFACE.

IT is the fate of those who toil at the lower employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the prospect of good; to be exposed to censure, without hope of praise; to be disgraced by miscarriage, or punished for neglect, where success would have been without applause, and diligence without reward.

Among these unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries; whom mankind have considered, not as the pupil, but the slave of science, the pioneer of literature, doomed only to remove rubbish and clear obstructions from the paths through which Learning and Genius press forward to conquest and glory, without bestowing a smile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progress. Every other author may aspire to praise; the lexicographer can only hope to escape reproach, and even this negative recompense has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithstanding this discouragement, attempted a Dictionary of the English language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every species of literature, has itself been hitherto neglected; suffered to spread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance; resigned to the tyranny of time and fashion; and exposed to the corruptions of ignorance, and caprices of innovation.

When I took the first survey of my undertaking, I found our speech copious without order, and energetick without rules: wherever I turned my view there was perplexity to be disentangled, and confusion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundless variety, without any established principle of selection; adulterations were to be detected, without a settled test of purity; and modes of expression to be rejected or received, without the suffrages of any writers of classical reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no assistance but from general grammar, I applied myself to the perusal of our writers; and noting whatever might be of use to ascertain or illustrate any word or phrase, accumulated in time the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, establishing to myself, in the progress of the work, such rules as experience and analogy suggested to me; experience, which practice and observation were continually increasing; and analogy, which, though in some words obscure, was evident in others.

In adjusting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unsettled and fortuitous, I found it necessary to distinguish those irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which, though inconvenient, and in themselves once unnecessary, must be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which required only to be registered, that they may not be increased, and ascertained, that they may not be confounded: but every language has likewise its improprieties and absurdities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or proscribe.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of necessary or common use were spoken before they were written; and while they were unfixed by any visible signs, must have been spoken with great diversity, as we now observe those who cannot read to catch sounds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was first reduced to an alphabet, every penman endeavoured to express, as he could, the sounds which he was accustomed to pronounce or to receive, and vitiated in writing such words as were already vitiated in speech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, must have been vague and unsettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the same sound by different combinations.

and a drama is a dream; and who declares with a tone of defiance, that no man can fail to derive moan from μόνος, monos, single or solitary, who considers that grief naturally loves to be alone. *

Our knowledge of the northern literature is so scanty, that of words undoubtedly Teutonick, the original is not always to be found in any ancient language; and I have therefore inserted Dutch or German substitutes, which I consider not as radical, but parallel, not as the parents, but sisters of the English.

The words which are represented as thus related by descent or cognation, do not always agree in sense; for it is incident to words, as to their authors, to degenerate from their ancestors, and to change their manners when they change their country. It is sufficient, in etymological enquiries, if the senses of kindred words be found such as may easily pass into each other, or such as may both be referred to one general idea.

The etymology, so far as it is yet known, was easily found in the volumes where it is particularly and professedly delivered; and, by proper attention to the rules of derivation, the orthography was soon adjusted. But to COLLECT the WORDS of our language was a task of greater difficulty: the deficiency of dictionaries was immediately apparent; and when they were exhausted, what was yet wanting must be sought by fortuitous and unguided excursions into books, and gleaned as industry should find, or chance should offer it, in the boundless chaos of a living speech. My search, however, has been either skilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

As my design was a dictionary, common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names; such as Arian, Socinian, Calvinist, Benedictine, Mahometan; but have retained those of a more general nature, as Heathen, Pagan.

Of the terms of art I have received such as could be found either in books of science or technical dictionaries; and have often inserted, from philosophical writers, words which are supported perhaps only by a single authority, and which being not admitted into general use, stand yet as candidates or probationers, and must depend for their adoption on the suffrage of futurity.

The words which our authors have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonness, by compliance with fashion or lust of innovation, I have registered as they occured, though commonly only to censure them, and warn others against the folly of naturalizing useless foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by design, merely because they were unnecessary or exuberant; but have received those which by different writers have been differently formed, as viscid, and viscidity, viscous, and viscosity.

Compounded or double words I have seldom noted, except when they obtain a signification different from that which the components have in their simple state. Thus highwayman, woodman, and horse-course, require an explanation; but of thieflike or coachdriver no notice was needed, because the primitives contain the meaning of the compounds.

Words arbitrarily formed by a constant and settled analogy, like diminutive adjectives in ish, as greenish, bluish; adverbs in ly, as dully, openly; substantives in ness, as vileness, faultiness; were less diligently sought, and sometimes have been omitted, when I had no authority that invited me to insert them; not that they are not genuine and regular offsprings of English roots, but because their relation to the primitive being always the same, their signification cannot be mistaken.

The verbal nouns in ing, such as the keeping of the castle, the leading of the army, are always neglected, or placed only to illustrate the sense of the verb, except when they signify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwelling, living; or have an absolute and abstract signification, as colouring, painting, learning.

The participles are likewise omitted, unless, by signifying rather habit or quality than action, they take the nature of adjectives; as a thinking man, a man of prudence; a pacing horse, a horse that can pace: these I have ventured to call participial adjectives. But neither are these always inserted, because they are commonly to be understood, without any danger of mistake, by consulting the verb.

Obsolete words are admitted, when they are found in authors not obsolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deserve revival.

As composition is one of the chief characteristicks of a language, I have endeavoured to make some reparation for the universal negligence of my predecessors, by inserting great numbers of compounded words, as may be found under after, fore, new, night, fair, and many more. These, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that use and curiosity are here satisfied, and the frame of our language and modes of our combination amply discovered.

Of some forms of composition, such as that by which re is prefixed to note repetition, and un to signify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, because the use of these particles, if not wholly arbitrary, is so little limited, that they are hourly affixed to new words as occasion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of composition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which arises to foreigners the greatest difficulty. We modify the signification of many words by a particle subjoined; as to come off, to escape by a fetch; to fall on, to attack; to fall off, to apostatize; to break off, to stop abruptly; to bear out, to justify; to fall in, to comply; to give over, to cease; to set off, to embellish; to set in, to begin a continual tenour; to set out, to begin a course or journey; to take off, to copy; with innumerable expressions of the same kind, of which some appear widely irregular, being so far distant from the sense of the simple words, that no sagacity will be able to trace the steps by which they arrived at the present use. These I have noted with great care; and though I cannot flatter myself that the collection is complete, I believe I have so far assisted the students of our language, that this kind of phraseology will be no longer insuperable; and the combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be easily explained by comparison with those that may be found.

Many words yet stand supported only by the name of Bailey, Ainsworth, Philips, or the contracted Dict. for Dictionaries subjoined; of these I am not always certain that they are read in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of such I have omitted many, because I had never read them; and many I have inserted, because they may perhaps exist, though they have escaped my notice: they are, however, to be yet considered as resting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I considered as useful, or know to be proper, though I could not at present support them by authorities, I have suffered to stand upon my own attestation, claiming the same privilege with my predecessors, of being sometimes credited without proof.

The words, thus selected and disposed, are grammatically considered; they are referred to the different parts of speech; traced, when they are irregulary inflected, through their various terminations; and illustrated by observations, not indeed of great or striking importance, separately considered, but necessary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by English grammarians.

That part of my work on which I expect malignity most frequently to fasten, is the Explanation, in which I cannot hope to satisfy those, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleased, since I have not always been able to satisfy myself. To interpret a language by itself is very difficult; many words cannot be explained by synonimes, because the idea signified by them has not more than one appellation; nor by paraphrase, because simple ideas cannot be described. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unsettled and indefinite, and various in various minds, the words by which such notions are conveyed, or such things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And such is the fate of hapless lexicography, that not only darkness, but light, impedes and distresses it; things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illustrated. To explain, requires the use of terms less abstruse than that which is to be explained, and such terms cannot always be found; for as nothing can be proved but the supposing something intuitively known, and evident without proof, so nothing can be defined but by the use of words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the sense is too subtle and evanescent to be fixed in a paraphrase; such are all those which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and, in dead languages, are suffered to pass for empty sounds, of no other use than to fill a verse, or to modulate a period, but which are easily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphasis, though it be sometimes such as no other form of expression can convey.

My labour has likewise been much increased by a class of verbs too frequent in the English language, of which the signification is so loose and general, the use so vague and indeterminate, and the senses detorted so widely from the first idea, that it is hard to trace them through the maze of variation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumscribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of distinct and settled meaning; such are bear, break, come, cast, full, get, give, do, put, set, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of these the whole power is not accurately delivered, it must be remembered, that while our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every one that speaks it, these words are hourly shifting their relations, and can no more be ascertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a storm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations applied with so great latitude, that they are not easily reducible under any regular scheme of explication: this difficulty is not less, nor perhaps greater, in English, than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with success; such at least as can be expected in a task, which no man, however learned or sagacious, has yet been able to perform.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, because I do not understand them; these might have been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not so far indulge my vanity as to decline this confession: for when Tully owns himself ignorant whether lessus, in the twelve tables, means a funeral song, or mourning garment; and Aristotle doubts whether οὖρεις, in the Iliad, signifies a mule, or muleteer, I may surely, without shame, leave some obscurities to happier industry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, should be always reciprocal; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are seldom exactly synonimous; a new term was not introduced, but because the former was thought inadequate: names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then necessary to use the proximate word, for the deficiency of single terms can very seldom be supplied by circumlocution; nor is the inconvenience great of such mutilated interpretations, because the sense may easily be collected entire from the examples.

In every word of extensive use, it was requisite to mark the progress of its meaning, and show by what gradations of intermediate sense it has passed from its primitive to its remote and accidental signification; so that every foregoing explanation should tend to that which follows, and the series be regularly concatenated from the first notion to the last.

This is specious, but not always practicable; kindred senses may be so interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be disentangled, nor any reason be assigned why one should be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a consecutive series be formed of senses in their nature collateral? The shades of meaning sometimes pass imperceptibly into each other; so that though on one side they apparently differ, yet it is impossible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the same race, though not exactly alike, are sometimes so little different, that no words can express the dissimilitude, though the mind easily perceives it, when they are exhibited together; and sometimes there is such a confusion of acceptations, that discernment is wearied, and distinction puzzled, and perseverance herself hurries to an end, by crowding together what she cannot separate.

These complaints of difficulty will, by those that have never considered words beyond their popular use, be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his studies by involution and obscurity. But every art is obscure to those that have not learned it: this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to those who have joined philosophy with grammar; and if I have not expressed them very clearly, it must be remembered that I am speaking of that which words are insufficient to explain.

The original sense of words is often driven out of use by their metaphorical acceptations, yet must be inserted for the sake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is used for material heat, or whether flagrant, in English, ever signifies the same with burning; yet such are the primitive ideas of these words, which are therefore set first, though without examples, that the figurative senses may be commodiously deduced.

Such is the exuberance of signification which many words have obtained, that it was scarcely possible to collect all their senses; sometimes the meaning of derivatives must be sought in the mother term, and sometimes deficient explanations of the primitives may be supplied in the train of derivation. In any case of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the same race; for some words are slightly passed over to avoid repetition, some admitted easier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better understood, as they are considered in greater variety of structures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the same skill, or the same happiness: things equally easy in themselves, are not all equally easy to any single mind. Every writer of a long work commits errours, where there appears neither ambiguity to mislead, nor obscurity to confound him; and in a search like this, many felicities of expression will be casually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many seeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus some explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as hind, the female of the stag; stag, the male of the hind: sometimes easier words are changed into harder, as burial into sepulture or interment, drier into desiccative, dryness into siccity or aridity, fit into paroxysm; for the easiest word, whatever it be, can never be translated into one more easy. But easiness and difficulty are merely relative, and if the present prevalence of our language should invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be assisted by those words which now seem only to produce increase or obscurity. For this reason I have endeavoured frequently to join a Teutonick and Roman interpretation, as to CHEER, to gladden, or exhilarate, that every learner of English may be assisted by his own tongue.

The solution of all difficulties, and the supply of all defects, must be sought in the examples, subjoined to the various senses of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authors.

When I first collected these authorities, I was desirous that every quotation should be useful to some other end than the illustration of a word; I therefore extracted from philosophers principles of science; from historians remarkable facts; from chymists complete processes; from divines striking exhortations; and from poets beautiful descriptions. Such is design, while it is yet at a distance from execution. When the time called upon me to range this accumulation of elegance and wisdom into an alphabetical series, I soon discovered that the bulk of my volumes would fright away the student, and was forced to depart from my scheme of including all that was pleasing or useful in English literature, and reduce my transcripts very often to clusters of words, in which scarcely any meaning is retained; thus to the weariness of copying, I was condemned to add the vexation of expunging. Some passages I have yet spared, which may relieve the labour of verbal searches, and intersperse with verdure and flowers the dusty desarts of barren philology.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be considered as conveying the sentiments or doctrine of their authors; the word for the sake of which they are inserted, with all its appendant clauses, has been carefully preserved; but it may sometimes happen, by hasty detruncation, that the general tendency of the sentence may be changed: the divine may desert his tenets, or the philosopher his system.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as masters of elegance or models of style; but words must be sought where they are used; and in what pages, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found? Many quotations serve no other purpose, than that of proving the bare existence of words, and are therefore selected with less scrupulousness than those which are to teach their structures and relations.

PREFACE.

My purpose was to admit no testimony of living authors, that I might not be misled by partiality, and that none of my contemporaries might have reason to complain; nor have I departed from this resolution, but when some performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory supplied me, from late books, with an example that was wanting, or when my heart, in the tenderness of friendship, solicited admission for a favourite name.

So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have studiously endeavoured to collect examples and authorities from the writers before the restoration, whose works I regard as the wells of English undefiled, as the pure sources of genuine diction. Our language, for almost a century, has, by the concurrence of many causes, been gradually departing from its original Teutonick character, and deviating towards a Gallick structure and phraseology, from which it ought to be our endeavour to recal it, by making our ancient volumes the ground-work of style, admitting among the additions of later times, only such as may supply real deficiencies, such as are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate easily with our native idioms.

But as every language has a time of rudeness antecedent to perfection, as well as of false refinement and declension, I have been cautious lest my zeal for antiquity might drive me into times too remote, and crowd my book with words now no longer understood. I have fixed Sidney's work for the boundary, beyond which I make few excursions. From the authors which rose in the time of Elizabeth, a speech might be formed adequate to all the purposes of use and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the translation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge from Bacon; the phrases of policy, war, and navigation from Raleigh; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Spenser and Sidney; and the diction of common life from Shakespeare, few ideas would be lost to mankind, for want of English words, in which they might be expressed.

It is not sufficient that a word is found, unless it be so combined as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the sentence; such passages I have therefore chosen, and when it happened that any author gave a definition of a term, or such an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a supplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwise observed.

Some words, indeed, stand unsupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns, or adverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and constant analogy, or names of things seldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reason to doubt the existence.

There is more danger of censure from the multiplicity than paucity of example; authorities will sometimes seem to have been accumulated without necessity or use, and perhaps some will be found, which might, without loss, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not hastily to be charged with superfluities: those quotations, which to careless or unskilful perusers appear only to repeat the same sense, will often exhibit, to a more accurate examiner, diversities of signification, or, at least, afford different shades of the same meaning: one will shew the word applied to persons, another to things; one will express an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral sense; one will prove the expression genuine from an ancient author; another will shew it elegant from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit; an ambiguous sentence is ascertained by a passage clear and determinate; the word, how often soever repeated, appears with new associates and in different combinations, and every quotation contributes something to the stability or enlargement of the language.

When words are used equivocally, I receive them in either sense; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptation.

I have sometimes, though rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of sentiments, by shewing how one author copied the thoughts and diction of another: such quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might justly be censured, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual history.

The various syntactical structures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted; the licence or negligence with which many words have been hitherto used, has made our style capricious and indeterminate; when the different combinations of the same word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, and I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus have I laboured by settling the orthography, displaying the analogy, regulating the structures, and ascertaining the signification of English words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer: but I have not always executed my own scheme, or satisfied my own expectations. The work, whatever proofs of diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements: the orthography which I recommend is still controvertible, the etymology which I adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous; the explanations are sometimes too much contracted, and sometimes too much diffused, the significations are distinguished rather with subtilty than skill, and the attention is harassed with unnecessary minuteness.

The examples are too often injudicially truncated, and perhaps sometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a mistaken sense; for in making this collection I trusted more to memory, than, in a state of disquiet and embarrassment, memory can contain, and purposed to supply at the review what was left incomplete in the first transcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though necessary and significant, are undoubtedly omitted; and of the words most studiously considered and exemplified, many senses have escaped observation.

Yet these failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprize is above the strength that undertakes it: To rest below his own aim is incident to every one whose fancy is active, and whose views are comprehensive; nor is any man satisfied with himself because he has done much, but because he can conceive little. When first I engaged in this work, I resolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and pleased myself with a prospect of the hours which I should revel away in feasts of literature, the obscure recesses of northern learning which I should enter and ransack, the treasures with which I expected every search into those neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I should display my acquisitions to mankind. When I had thus enquired into the original of words, I resolved to shew likewise my attention to things; to pierce deep into every science, to enquire the nature of every substance of which I inserted the name, to limit every idea by a definition strictly logical, and exhibit every production of art or nature in an accurate description, that my book might be in place of all other dictionaries whether appellative or technical. But these were the dreams of a poet doomed at last to wake a lexicographer. I soon found that it is too late to look for instruments, when the work calls for execution, and that whatever abilities I had brought to my task, with those I must finally perform it. To deliberate whenever I doubted, to enquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end, and, perhaps, without much improvement; for I did not find by my first experiments, that what I had not of my own was easily to be obtained: I saw that one enquiry only gave occasion to another, that book referred to book, that to search was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that thus to pursue perfection, was, like the first inhabitants of Arcadia, to chase the sun, which, when they had reached the hill where he seemed to rest, was still beheld at the same distance from them.

I then contracted my design, determining to confide in myself, and no longer to solicit auxiliaries, which produced more incumbrance than assistance: by this I obtained at least one advantage, that I set limits to my work, which would in time be ended, though not completed.

Despondency has never so far prevailed as to depress me to negligence; some faults will at last appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and preserving activity. The nice and subtle ramifications of meaning were not easily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and convinced of the necessity of disentangling combinations, and separating similitudes. Many of the distinctions, which to common readers appear useless and idle, will be found real and important by men versed in the school philosophy, without which no dictionary can ever be accurately compiled, or skilfully examined.

Some senses however there are, which, though not the same, are yet so nearly allied, that they are often confounded. Most men think indistinctly, and therefore cannot speak with exactness; and consequently some examples might be indifferently put to either signification: this uncertainty is not to be imputed to me, who do not form, but register the language; who do not teach men how they should think, but relate how they have hitherto expressed their thoughts.

The imperfect sense of some examples I lamented, but could not remedy, and hope they will be compensated by innumerable passages selected with propriety, and preserved with exactness; some shining with sparks of imagination, and some replete with treasures of wisdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but because care will not always be successful, and recollection or information come too late for use.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, must be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable: I could not visit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my skill in the dialect of navigation, nor visit the warehouses of merchants, and shops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools and operations, of which no mention is found in books; what favourable accident, or easy enquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected; but it had been a hopeless labour to glean up words, by courting living information, and contesting with the sullenness of one, and the roughness of another.

To furnish the academicians della Crusca with words of this kind, a series of comedies called la Fiera, or the Fair, was professedly written by Buonaroti; but I had no such assistant, and therefore was content to want what they must have wanted likewise, had they not luckily been so supplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omissions. Of the laborious and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great measure casual and mutable; many of their terms are formed for some temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a state of increase or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore must be suffered to perish with other things unworthy of preservation.

Care will sometimes betray to the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which seldom occur, will suffer those to pass by unregarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is searching for rare and remote things, will neglect those that are obvious and familiar: thus many of the most common and cursory words have been inserted with little illustration, because in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy those which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified.

Thus it happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things easy from confidence; the mind, afraid of greatness, and disdainful of littleness, hastily withdraws herself from painful searches, and passes with scornful rapidity over tasks not adequate to her powers, sometimes too secure for caution, and again too anxious for vigorous effort; sometimes idle in a plain path, and sometimes distracted in labyrinths, and dissipated by different intentions.

A large work is difficult because it is large, even though all its parts might singly be performed with facility; where there are many things to be done, each must be allowed its share of time and labour, in the proportion only which it bears to the whole; nor can it be expected, that the stones which form the dome of a temple, should be squared and polished like the diamond of a ring.

Of the event of this work, for which, having laboured it with so much application, I cannot but have some degree of parental fondness, it is natural to form conjectures. Those who have been persuaded to think well of my design, will require that it should fix our language, and put a stop to those alterations which time and chance have hitherto been suffered to make in it without opposition. With this consequence I will confess that I flattered myself for a while; but now begin to fear that I have indulged expectation which neither reason nor experience can justify. When we see men grow old and die at a certain time one after another, from century to century, we laugh at the elixir that promises to prolong life to a thousand years; and with equal justice may the lexicographer be derided, who being able to produce no example of a nation that has preserved their words and phrases from mutability, shall imagine that his dictionary can embalm his language, and secure it from corruption and decay, that it is in his power to change sublunary nature, and clear the world at once from folly, vanity and affectation.

With this hope, however, academies have been instituted, to guard the avenues of their languages, to retain fugitives, and repulse intruders; but their vigilance and activity have hitherto been vain; sounds are too volatile and subtile for legal restraints; to enchain syllables, and to lash the wind, are equally the undertakings of pride, unwilling to measure its desires by its strength. The French language has visibly changed under the inspection of the academy; the style of Amelot's translation of father Paul is observed by Le Courayer to be un peu passé; and no Italian will maintain, that the diction of any modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Boccace, Machiavel, or Caro.

Total and sudden transformations of a language seldom happen; conquests and migrations are now very rare: but there are other causes of change, which, though slow in their operation, and invisible in their progress, are perhaps as much superiour to human resistance, as the revolutions of the sky, or intumescence of the tide. Commerce, however necessary, however lucrative, as it depraves the manners, corrupts the language; they that have frequent intercourse with strangers, to whom they endeavour to accommodate themselves, must in time learn a mingled dialect, like the jargon which serves the traffickers on the Mediterranean and Indian coasts. This will not always be confined to the exchange, the warehouse, or the port, but will be communicated by degrees to other ranks of the people, and be at last incorporated with the current speech.

There are likewise internal causes equally forcible. The language most likely to continue long without alteration, would be that of a nation raised a little, and but a little, above barbarity, secluded from strangers, and totally employed in procuring the conveniencies of life; either without books, or, like some of the Mahometan countries, with very few: men thus busied and unlearned, having only such words as common use requires, would perhaps long continue to express the same notions by the same signs. But no such constancy can be expected in a people polished by arts, and classed by subordination, where one part of the community is sustained and accommodated by the labour of the other. Those who have much leisure to think, will always be enlarging the stock of ideas; and every increase of knowledge, whether real or fancied, will produce new words, or combinations of words. When the mind is unchained from necessity, it will range after convenience; when it is left at large in the fields of speculation, it will shift opinions; as any custom is disused, the words that expressed it must perish with it; as any opinion grows popular, it will innovate speech in the same proportion as it alters practice.

As by the cultivation of various sciences a language is amplified, it will be more furnished with words deflected from their original sense; the geometrician will talk of a courtier's zenith, or the eccentrick virtue of a wild hero, and the physician of sanguine expectations and phlegmatick delays. Copiousness of speech will give opportunities to capricious choice, by which some words will be preferred, and others degraded; vicissitudes of fashion will enforce the use of new, or extend the signification of known terms. The tropes of poetry will make hourly encroachments, and the metaphorical will become the current sense: pronunciation will be varied by levity or ignorance, and the pen must at length comply with the tongue; illiterate writers will, at one time or other, by publick infatuation, rise into renown, who, not knowing the original import of words, will use them with colloquial licentiousness, confound distinction, and forget propriety. As politeness increases, some expressions will be considered as too gross and vulgar for the delicate, others as too formal and ceremonious for the gay and airy; new phrases are therefore adopted, which must, for the same reasons, be in time dismissed. Swift, in his petty treatise on the English language, allows that new words must sometimes be introduced, but proposes that none should be suffered to become obsolete. But what makes a word obsolete, more than general agreement to forbear it? and how shall it be continued, when it conveys an offensive idea, or recalled again into the mouths of mankind, when it has once become unfamiliar by disuse, and unpleasing by unfamiliarity?

There is another cause of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the present state of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a third distinct from both, and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the most conspicuous accomplishment, is skill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has long cultivated another language, will find its words and combinations crowd upon his memory; and haste and negligence, refinement and affectation, will obtrude borrowed terms and exotick expressions.

The great pest of speech is frequency of translation. No book was ever turned from one language into another, without imparting something of its native idiom; this is the most mischievous and comprehensive innovation; single words may enter by thousands, and the fabrick of the tongue continue the same; but new phraseology changes much at once; it alters not the single stones of the building, but the order of the columns. If an academy should be established for the cultivation of our style, which I, who can never wish to see dependence multiplied, hope the spirit of English liberty will hinder or destroy, let them, instead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, endeavour, with all their influence, to stop the licence of translators, whose idleness and ignorance, if it be suffered to proceed, will reduce us to babble a dialect of France.

If the changes that we fear be thus irresistible, what remains but to acquiesce with silence, as in the other insurmountable distresses of humanity? It remains that we retard what we cannot repel, that we palliate what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthened by care, though death cannot be ultimately defeated: tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration; we have long preserved our constitution, let us make some struggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of philology, without a contest, to the nations of the continent. The chief glory of every people arises from its authors: whether I shall add any thing by my own writings to the reputation of English literature, must be left to time: much of my life has been lost under the pressures of disease; much has been trifled away; and much has always been spent in provision for the day that was passing over me; but I shall not think my employment useless or ignoble, if by my assistance foreign nations, and distant ages, gain access to the propagators of knowledge, and understand the teachers of truth; if my labours afford light to the repositories of science, and add celebrity to Bacon, to Hooker, to Milton, and to Boyle.

When I am animated by this wish, I look with pleasure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the spirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will immediately become popular I have not promised to myself: a few wild blunders, and risible absurdities, from which no work of such multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furnish folly with laughter, and harden ignorance in contempt; but useful diligence will at last prevail, and there never can be wanting some who distinguish desert; who will consider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, since while it is hastening to publication, some words are budding, and some falling away; that a whole life cannot be spent upon syntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be sufficient; that he, whose design includes whatever language can express, must often speak of what he does not understand; that a writer will sometimes be hurried by eagerness to the end, and sometimes faint with weariness under a task, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mine; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always present; that sudden fits of inadvertency will surprize vigilance, slight avocations will seduce attention, and casual eclipses of the mind will darken learning; and that the writer shall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yesterday he knew with intuitive readiness, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morrow.

In this work, when it shall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewise is performed; and though no book was ever spared out of tenderness to the author, and the world is little solicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns; yet it may gratify curiosity to inform it, that the English Dictionary was written with little assistance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great; not in the soft obscurities of retirement, or under the shelter of academick bowers, but amidst inconvenience and distraction, in sickness and in sorrow. It may repress the triumph of malignant criticism to observe, that if our language is not here fully displayed, I have only failed in an attempt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and comprized in a few volumes, be yet, after the toil of successive ages, inadequate and delusive; if the aggregated knowledge, and co-operating diligence of the Italian academicians did not secure them from the censure of Beni; if the embodied critics of France, when fifty years had been spent upon their work, were obliged to change its œconomy, and give their second edition another form, I may surely be contented without the praise of perfection, which, if I could obtain, in this gloom of solitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till most of those whom I wished to please have sunk into the grave, and success and miscarriage are empty sounds: I therefore dismiss it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from censure or from praise.

THE

OF THE

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THOUGH the Britains or Welsh were the first possessors of this island, whose names are recorded, and are therefore in civil history always considered as the predecessors of the present inhabitants; yet the deduction of the English language, from the earliest times of which we have any knowledge to its present state, requires no mention of them: for we have so few words which can, with any probability, be referred to British roots, that we justly regard the Saxons and Welsh as nations totally distinct. It has been conjectured, that when the Saxons seized this country, they suffered the Britains to live among them in a state of vassalage, employed in the culture of the ground, and other laborious and ignoble services. But it is scarcely possible, that a nation, however depressed, should have been mixed with another in considerable numbers without some communication of their tongue, and therefore, it may, with great reason, be imagined, that those, who were not sheltered in the mountains, perished by the sword.

The whole fabrick and scheme of the English language is Gothick or Teutonick: it is a dialect of that tongue, which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except those where the Sclavonian is spoken. Of these languages Dr. Hickes has thus exhibited the genealogy.

GOTHICK.

ANGLO-SAXON,	FRANCICK,	CIMBRICK,
Dutch, Frisick, English.	German.	Islandick, Norwegian, Swedish, Danish.

Of the Gothick, the only monument remaining is a copy of the gospels somewhat mutilated, which, from the silver with which the characters are adorned, is called the silver book. It is now preserved at Upsal, and having been twice published before, has been lately reprinted at Oxford, under the inspection of Mr. Lye, the editor of Junius. Whether the diction of this venerable manuscript be purely Gothick, has been doubted; it seems however to exhibit the most ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonick race; and the Saxon, which is the origin of the present English, was either derived from it, or both have descended from some common parent.

What was the form of the Saxon language, when, about the year 450, they first entered Britain, cannot now be known. They seem to have been a people without learning, and very probably without an alphabet; their speech, therefore, having been always cursory and extemporaneous, must have been artless and unconnected, without any modes of transition or involution of clauses; which abruptness and inconnection may be observed even in their later writings. This barbarity may be supposed to have continued during their wars with the Britains, which for a time left them no leisure for softer studies; nor is there any reason for supposing it abated, till the year 570, when Augustine came from Rome to convert them to Christianity. The Christian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning; they then became by degrees acquainted with the Roman language, and so gained, from time to time, some knowledge and elegance, till in three centuries they had formed a language capable of expressing all the sentiments of a civilised people, as appears by king Alfred's paraphrase or imitation of Boethius, and his short preface, which I have selected as the first specimen of ancient English.

This may perhaps be considered as a specimen of the Saxon in its highest state of purity, for here are scarcely any words borrowed from the Roman dialects.

Of the following version of the gospels the age is not certainly known, but it was probably written between the time of Alfred and that of the Norman conquest, and therefore may properly be inserted here.

Translations seldom afford just specimens of a language, and least of all those in which a scrupulous and verbal interpretation is endeavoured, because they retain the phraseology and structure of the original tongue; yet they have often this convenience, that the same book, being translated in different ages, affords opportunity of marking the gradations of change, and bringing one age into comparison with another. For this purpose I have placed the Saxon version and that of Wickliffe, written about the year 1380, in opposite columns, because the convenience of easy collation seems greater than that of regular chronology.

27. To bewedduðre wæmman anum were wæs nama wæs Ioseb. of Dauides huse. ⁊ hære wæmman nama wæs Maria:·

28. Ða cwæð se engel inzangende. Hal wes þu mid gýfe zefýlled. Drihten mid þe. Ðu eart zebletsud on wifum:·

11. For he schal be great before the Lord: and he schal not drinke wyn ne sydyr, and he schal be fulfild with the holy gost yit of his modir wombe.

12. And he schal converte manye of the children of Israel to her Lord God.

13. And he schal go bifore in the spiryte and vertu of Helye: and he schal turne the hertis of the fadris to the sonis, and men out of beleeve: to the prudence of just men, to make redy a perfyt puple to the Lord.

14. And Zacarye seyde to the aungel: wherof schal Y wyte this? for Y am old: and my wyf hath gon fer in hir dayes.

15. And the aungel answerde and seyde to him, for Y am Gabriel that stonde nygh bifore God, and Y am sent to thee to speke and to evangelise to thee these thingis, and lo thou schalt be doumbe.

16. And thou shalt not mowe speke, till into the day in which these thingis schulen be don, for thou hast not beleved to my wordis, whiche schulen be fulfild in her tyme.

17. And the puple was abidynge Zacary: and thei wondriden that he taryede in the temple.

18. And he gede out and myghte not speke to hem: and thei knewen that he hadde seyn a visioun in the temple, and he bekenide to hem: and he dwellide stille doumbe.

19. And it was don whanne the dayes of his office weren fulfillid: he wente into his hous.

20. And aftir these dayes Elizabeth his wif conseyvede and hidde hir fyve monethis and seyde.

21. For so the Lord dide to me in the dayes in whiche he biheld to take awey my reproof among men.

22. But in the sixte monethe the aungel Gabriel was sent from God: into a cytee of Galilee whos name was Nazareth.

23. To a maydun weddid to a man: whos name was Joseph of the hous of Dauith, and the name of the maydun was Marye.

24. And the aungel entride to hir, and sayde, heil ful of grace the Lord be with thee: blessid be thou among wymmen.

26. And the aungel seid to hir, ne drede not thou Marye: for thou hast founden grace anentis God.

27. Lo thou schalt conseyve in wombe, and schalt bere a sone: and thou schalt clepe his name Jhesus.

28. This shall be gret: and he schal be clepid the sone of higheste, and the Lord God schal geve to him the seete of Dauith his fadir.

29. And he schal regne in the hous of Jacob withouten ende, and of his rewme schal be noon ende.

30. And Marye seyde to the aungel, on what maner schal this thing be don? for Y knowe not man.

31. And the aungel answerde and seyde to hir, the holy Gost schal come fro above into thee: and the vertu of the higheste schal ouer schadowe thee: and therfore that holy thing that schal be borun of thee: schal be clepide the sone of God.

32. And to Elizabeth thi cosyn, and sche also hath conseyved a sone in hir eelde, and this monethe is the sixte to hir that is clepid bareyn.

33. For every word schal not be impossyble anentis God.

34. And Marye seide to the hond maydun of the Lord: be it doon to me aftir thi word; and the aungel departide fro hir.

35. And Marye roos up in tho dayes and wente with haste into the mountaynes into a citee of Judee.

36. And sche entride into the hous of Zacarye and grette Elizabeth.

37. And it was don as Elizabeth herde the salutacioun of Marye the young childe in hir wombe gladide, and Elizabeth was fulfild with the holy Gost

38. And cryede with a gret voice and seyde, blessid be thou among wymmen, and blessid be the fruyt of thy wombe.

39. And whereof is this thing to me, that the modir of my Lord come to me?

40. For lo as the vois of thi salutacioun was maad in myn eeris: the yong child gladide in joye in my wombe.

62. And alle men that herden puttiden in her herte, and seiden what manner child schal this be, for the hond of the Lord was with him.

63. And Zacarye his fadir was fulfillid with the holy Gost, and profeciede and seide.

64. Blessid be the Lord God of Israel, for he has visited and maad redempcioun of his puple.

65. And he has rered to us an horn of helthe in the hous of Dauith his child.

66. As he spak by the mouth of hise holy prophetis that weren fro the world.

67. Helth fro oure enemyes, and fro the hond of alle men that hatiden us.

68. To do mersy with our fadris, and to have mynde of his holy testament.

69. The great ooth that he swoor to Abraham our fadir.

70. To geve himself to us, that we without drede delyvered fro the hond of our enemyes serve to him.

71. In holynesse and rightwisnesse before him, in alle our dayes.

72. And thou child schalt be clepid the profete of the higheste, for thou schalt go before the face of the Lord to make redy hise weyes:

73. To geve science of heelth to his puple into remissioun of her synnes.

74. By the inwardeness of the mersy of oure God, in the which he springyng up fro on high hath visited us.

75. To geve light to them that sitten in derknessis, and in schadowe of deeth, to dresse our feet into the weye of pees.

76. And the child wexide, and was confortid in spiryt, and was in desert placis till to the day of his schewing to Ysrael.

Of the Saxon poetry some specimen is necessary, though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their syllables, which it would be very difficult, perhaps impossible, to recover, excludes us from that pleasure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries.

The first poetry of the Saxons was without rhyme, and consequently must have depended upon the quantity of their syllables; but they began in time to imitate their neighbours, and close their verses with correspondent sounds.

The two passages, which I have selected, contain apparently the rudiments of our present lyrick measures, and the writers may be justly considered as the genuine ancestors of the English poets.

About the year 1150, the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the present English may be plainly discovered; this change seems not to have been the effect of the Norman conquest, for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the first hundred years after it; the language must therefore have been altered by causes like those which, notwithstanding the care of writers and societies instituted to obviate them, are even now daily making innovations in every living language. I have exhibited a specimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle, of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates.

Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry seem to have been written, of which I have inserted only short fragments; the first is a rude attempt at the present measure of eight syllables, and the second is a natural introduction to Robert of Gloucester, being composed in the same measure, which, however rude and barbarous it may seem, taught the way to the Alexandrines of the French poetry.

In these fragments, the adulteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not so much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes of its own forms and terminations; for which no reason can be given.

Hitherto the language used in this island, however different in successive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be assigned, when the Saxon may be said to cease, and the English to commence. Robert of Gloucester, however, who is placed by the criticks in the thirteenth century, seems to have used a kind of intermediate diction, neither Saxon nor English; in his work therefore we see the transition exhibited, and, as he is the first of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extensive quotation is extracted. He writes apparently in the same measure with the foregoing author of St. Margarite, which, polished into greater exactness, appeared to our ancestors so suitable to the genius of the English language, that it was continued in use almost to the middle of the seventeenth century.

After ys deth he wos ỳbured at Wỳncheſtre atte laſte.

Sir John Mandeville wrote, as he himself informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which comprising a relation of many different particulars, consequently required the use of many words and phrases, may be properly specified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have chosen the first, because it shows, in some measure, the state of European science as well as of the English tongue; and the second, because it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expression.

IN that lond, ne in many othere bezonde that, no man may see the sterre transmontane, that is clept the sterre of the see, that is unmevable, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode sterre. But men seen another sterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the Southe, that is clept Antartyk. And right as the schip men taken here avys here, and governe hem be the lode sterre, right so don schip men bezonde the parties, be the sterre of the Southe, the which sterre apperethe not to us. And this sterre, that is toward the Northe, that wee clepen the lode sterre, ne apperethe not to hem. For whiche cause, men may wel perceyve, that the londe and the see ben of rownde schapp and forme. For the partie of the firmament schewethe in o contree, that schewethe not in another contree. And men may well preven be experience and fotyle compassement of wytt, that zif a man fond passages be schippes, that wolde go to serchen the world, men myghte go be schippe alle aboute the world, and aboven and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, aftre that I have seyn. For I have been toward the parties of Braban, and beholden the Astrolabre, that the sterre that is clept the transmontayne, is 53 degrees highe. And more forthere in Almayne and Bewme, it hathe 58 degrees. And more forthe toward the parties septemtrioneles, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certyne mynutes. For I my self have mesured it by the Astrolabre. Now schulle ze knowe that azen the Transmontayne, is the tother sterre, that is clept Antartyk; as I have seyd before. And tho 2 sterres ne meeven nevere. And be hem turnethe alle the firmament, righte as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tree: so that tho sterres beren the firmament in 2 egalle parties; so that it hathe als mochel aboven, as it hath benethen. Aftre this, I have gon toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the Southe: and I have founden that in Lybye, men seen first the sterre Antartyk. And so fer I have gon more in tho contrees, that I have founde that sterre more highe; so that towarde the highe Lybye, it is 18 degrees of heghte, and certeyn minutes (of the which, 60 minutes maken a degree) aftre goynge be see and be londe, toward this contree, of that I have spoke, and to other yles and londes bezonde that contree, I have founden the sterre Antartyk of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And zif I hadde had companye and schippynge, for to go more bezonde, I trowe wel in certyn, that wee scholde have seen alle the roundnesse of the firmament alle aboute. For as I have seyd zou be forn, the half of the firmament is between tho 2 sterres: the whiche halfondelle I have seyn. And of the tother halfondelle, I have seen toward the Northe, undre the Transmontane 62 degrees and 10 mynutes; and toward the partie meridionalle, I have seen undre the Antartyk 33 degrees and 16 mynutes: and thanne the halfondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180, I have seen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that other part, that ben 95 degrees, and nyghe the halfondelle of a degree; and so there ne faylethe but that I have seen alle the firmament, saf 84 degrees and the halfondelle of a degree; and that is not the fourthe part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundnesse of the firmament holt 90 degrees: so there faylethe but 5 degrees and an half of the fourthe partie. And also I have seen the 3 parties of alle the roundnesse of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I seye zou certeynly, that men may envirowne alle the erthe of alle the world, as wel undre as aboven, and turnen azen to his contree, that hadde companye and schippynge and conduyt: and alle weyes he scholde fynde men, londes, and yles, als wel as in this contree. For zee wyten welle, that thei that ben toward the Antartyk, thei ben streghte, feet azen feet of hem, that dwellen undre the transmontane; als wel as wee and thei that dwellyn undre us, been feet azenst feet. For alle the parties of see and of lond han here appositees, habitables or trepassables, and thei of this half and bezond half. And wytethe wel, that aftre that, that I may parceyve and comprehende, the londes of Prestre John, emperour of Ynde ben undre us. For in goynge from Scotlond or from Englond toward Jerusalem, men gon upward alweys. For oure lond is in the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the West: and the lond of Prestre John is the low partie of the erthe, toward the Est: and thei han there the day, whan wee have the nyghte, and also highe to the contrarie, thei han the nyghte, whan wee han the day. For the erthe and the see ben of round forme and schapp, as I have seyd beforn. And than that men gon upward to o cost, men gon dounward to another cost. Also zee have herd me seye, that Jerusalem is in the myddes of the world; and that may men preven and schewen there, be a spere, that is pighte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, whan it is equenoxium, that schewethe no schadwe on no syde. And that it scholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wytnessethe it in the Psautre, where he seythe, Deus operatus est salute in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten fro the parties of the West for to go toward Jerusalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon fro Jerusalem, unto other confynyes of the superficialtie of the erthe bezonde. And whan men go bezonde tho iourneys, towarde Ynde and to the foreyn yles, alle is envyronynge the roundnesse of the erthe and of the see, undre oure contrees on this half. And therefore hathe it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd cownted, whan I was zong; how a worthi man departed sometyme from our countrees, for to go serche the worlde. And so he passed Ynde, and the yles bezonde Ynde, where ben mo than 5000 yles: and so longe he wente be see and lond, and so enviround the world be many seysons, that he fond an yle, where he herde speke his own langage, callynge on oxen in the plowghe, suche wordes as men speken to bestes in his owne contree: whereof he hadde gret mervayle: for he knewe not how it myghte be. But I seye, that he had gon so longe, be londe and be see, that he had envyround alle the erthe, that he was comen azen envirounynge, that is to seye, goynge aboute, unto his owne marches, zif he wolde have passed forthe, til he had founden his contree and his owne knouleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whens he was come fro; and so he lost moche peynesulle labour, as him self seyde, a gret while after, that he was comen hom. For it befelle aftre, that he wente in to Norweye; and there tempest of the see toke him; and he arryved in an yle; and whan he was in that yle, he knew wel, that it was the yle where he had herd speke his owne langage before, and the callynge of the oxen at the plowghe: and that was possible thinge. But how it seemethe to symple men unlerned, that men ne mowe not go undre the erthe, and also that men scholde falle toward the hevene, from undre! But that may not be, upon lesse, than wee mowe falle toward hevene, fro the erthe, where wee ben. For fro what partie of the erthe that men duelle, outher aboven or benethen, it semethe alweyes to hem that duellen, that thei gon more righte than ony other folk. And righte as it semethe to us, that thei ben undre us, righte so it semethe hem, that wee ben undre hem. For zif a man myghte falle fro the erthe unto the firmament; be grettere resoun, the erthe and the see, that ben so grete and so hevy, scholde fallen to the firmament: but that may not be: and therfore seithe oure Lord God, Non timeas me, qui suspendi terra ex nichilo? And alle be it, that it be possible thing, that men may so envyronne alle the world, natheless of a 1000 persones, on ne myghte not happen to returnen in to his contree. For, for the gretnesse of the erthe and of the see, men may go be a 1000 and a 1000 other weyes, that no man cowde reyde him perfitely toward the parties that he cam fro, but zif it were be aventure and happ, or be the grace of God. For the erthe is fulle large and fulle gret, and holt in roundnesse and aboute envyroun, be aboven and be benethen 20425 myles, aftre the opynyoun of the old wise astronomers. And here seyenges I repreve noughte. But aftre my lytylle wyt, it semethe me, savynge here reverence, that it is more. And for to have bettere understondynge, I seye thus, be ther ymagyned a figure, that hathe a gret compas; and aboute the poynt of the gret compas, that is clept the centre, be made another litille compas: than aftre, be the gret compas devised be lines in manye parties; and that alle the lynes meeten at the centre; so that in als manye parties, as the grete compas schal be departed, in als mayne, schalle be departed the litille, that is aboute the centre, alle be it, that the spaces ben lesse. Now thanne, be the gret compas represented for the firmament, and the litille compas represented for the erthe. Now thanne the firmament is devysed, be astronomeres, in 12 signes; and every signe is devysed in 30 degrees, that is 360 degrees, that the firmament hathe aboven. Also, be the erthe devysed in als manye parties, as the firmament; and let every partye answere to a degree of the firmament: and wytethe it wel, that aftre the auctoures of astronomye, 700 furlonges of erthe answeren to a degree of the firmament; and tho ben 87 miles and 4 furlonges. Now be that here multiplyed be 360 sithes; and than thei ben 31500 myles, every of 8 furlonges, aftre myles of oure contree. So moche hathe the erthe in roundnesse, and of heghte enviroun, aftre my opynyoun and myn undirstondynge. And zee schulle undirstonde, that aftre opynyoun of olde wise philosophres and astronomeres, our contree ne Irelond ne Wales ne Scotlond ne Norweye ne the other yles costynge to hem, ne ben not in the superficyalte cownted aboven the erthe; as it schewethe be alle the bokes of astronomye. For the superficialtee of the erthe is departed in 7 parties, for the 7 planetes: and tho parties ben clept clymates. And oure parties be not of the 7 clymates: for thei ben descendynge toward the West. And also these yles of Ynde, which beth evene azenst us, beth noght reckned in the clymates: for thei ben azenst us, that ben in the lowe contree. And the 7 clymates strecchen hem envyrounynge the world.

II. And I John Maundeville knyghte abovesceyd, (alle thoughe I be unworthi) that departed from our contrees and passed the see, the zeer of grace 1322. that have passed manye londes and manye yles and contrees, and cerched manye fulle straunge places, and have ben in manye a fulle gode honourable companye, and at manye a faire dede of armes, (alle be it that I dide none myself, for myn unable insuffisance) now I am comen hom (mawgree my self) to reste; for gowtes, artetykes, that me distreynen, tho diffynen the ende of my labour, azenst my wille (God knowethe.) And thus takynge solace in my wrecched reste, recordynge the tyme passed, I have fulfilled theise thinges and putte hem wryten in this boke, as it wolde come in to my mynde, the zeer of grace 1356 in the 34 zeer that I departede from our contrees. Wherfore I preye to alle the rederes and hereres of this boke, zif it plese hem, that thei wolde preyen to God for me: and I schalle preye for hem. And alle tho that seyn for me a Pater noster, with an Ave Maria, that God forzeve me my synnes, I make hem partneres and graunte em part of alle the gode pilgrymages and of alle the gode dedes, that I have don, zif ony be to his plesance: and noghte only of tho, but of alle that evere I schalle do unto my lyfes ende. And I beseche Almyghty God, fro whom alle godenesse and grace comethe fro, that he voucehsaf, of his excellent mercy and habundant grace, to fulle fylle hire soules with inspiracioun of the Holy Gost, in makynge defence of alle hire gostly enemyes here in erthe, to hire salvacioun, both of body and soule; to worschipe and thankynge of him, that is three and on, withouten begynnynge and withouten endynge; that is, withouten qualitee, good, and withouten quantytee, gret; that in alle places is present, and alle thinges contenynge; the whiche that no goodnesse may amende, ne non evelle empeyre; that in perfeyte trynytee lyvethe and regnethe God, be alle worldes and be alle tymes. Amen, Amen, Amen.

The first of our authours, who can be properly said to have written English, was Sir John Gower, who, in his Confession of a Lover, calls Chaucer his disciple, and may therefore be considered as the father of our poetry.

NOWE for to speke of the commune,
It is to drede of that fortune,
Which hath befalle in sondrye londes:
But ofte for defaute of bondes
All sodeinly, er it be wist,
A tunne, when his lie arist
Tobreketh, and renneth all aboute,
Which els shulde nought gone out.
And eke full ofte a littell skare
Vpon a bank, er men be ware,
Let in the streme, whiche with gret peine,
If any man it shall restreine.
Where lawe failleth, errour groweth.
He is not wise, who that ne troweth.
For it hath proued oft er this.
And thus the common clamour is
In euery londe, where people dwelleth:
And eche in his complainte telleth,
How that the worlde is miswent,
And thervpon his argument
Yeueth euery man in sondrie wise:
But what man wolde him selfe auise
His conscience, and nought misuse,
He maie well at the first excuse
His God, whiche euer stant in one,
In him there is defaute none

CHAUCER.

ALAS! I wepyng am constrained to begin verse of sorowfull matter, that whilom in florishyng studie made delitable ditees. For lo! rendyng muses of Poetes editen to me thinges to be writen, and drerie teres. At laste no drede ne might overcame tho muses, that thei ne weren fellowes, and folowe-den

So must it stand vpon vs selue,
Nought only vpon ten ne twelue,
But plenarly vpon vs all.
For man is cause of that shall fall.

The history of our language is now brought to the point at which the history of our poetry is generally supposed to commence, the time of the illustrious Geoffry Chaucer, who may, perhaps, with great justice, be stiled the first of our versifiers who wrote poetically. He does not, however, appear to have deserved all the praise which he has received, or all the censure that he has suffered. Dryden, who, mistaking genius for learning, and in confidence of his abilities, ventured to write of what he had not examined, ascribes to Chaucer the first refinement of our numbers, the first production of easy and natural rhymes, and the improvement of our language, by words borrowed from the more polished languages of the continent. Skinner contrarily blames him in harsh terms for having vitiated his native speech by whole cartloads of foreign words. But he that reads the works of Gower will find smooth numbers and easy rhymes, of which Chaucer is supposed to have been the inventor, and the French words, whether good or bad, of which Chaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does not allow us to discover with particular exactness; but the works of Gower and Lydgate sufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries; and some improvements he undoubtedly made by the various dispositions of his rhymes, and by the mixture of different numbers, in which he seems to have been happy and judicious. I have selected several specimens both of his prose and verse; and among them, part of his translation of Boetius, to which another version, made in the time of queen Mary, is opposed. It would be improper to quote very sparingly an author of so much reputation, or to make very large extracts from a book so generally known.

COLVILE.

I THAT in tyme of prosperite, and floryshyng studye, made pleasaunte and delectable dities, or verses: alas now beyng heauy and sad ouerthrown in aduersitie, am compelled to fele and tast heuines and greif. Beholde the muses Poeticall, that is to saye: the pleasure that is in poetes verses, den my waie, that is to saie, when I was exiled, thei that weren of my youth whilom welfull and grene, comforten now sorowfull wierdes of me olde man: for elde is comen unwarely upon me, hasted by the harmes that I have, and sorowe hath commaunded his age to be in me. Heres hore aren shad overtimeliche upon my hed: and the slacke skinne tremblethe of mine empted bodie. Thilke deth of men is welefull, that he ne cometh not in yeres that be swete, but cometh to wretches often icleped! Alas! alas! with how defe an ere deth cruell turneth awaie fro wretches, and naieth for to close wepyng eyen. While fortune unfaithfull favoured me with light godes, that sorowfull houre, that is to saie, the deth, had almoste drent myne hedde: but now for fortune cloudie hath chaunged her decevable chere to mewarde, myne unpitous life draweth along ungreable dwellynges. O ye my frendes, what, or whereto avaunted ye me to ben welfull? For he that hath fallin, stode in no stedfast degre.

IN the mean while, that I still record these thynges with my self, and marked my wepelie complainte with office of poinctell: I saugh stondyng aboven the hight of myn hed a woman of full grete reverence, by semblaunt. Her eyen brennyng, and clere, seyng over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with soche vigour and strength that it ne might not be nempned, all were it so, that she were full of so grete age, that menne woulden not trowen in no manere, that she were of our elde.

The stature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for sometyme she constrained and shronke her selven, like to the common mesure of menne: And sometyme it seemed, that she touched the heven with the hight of her hedde. And when she hove her hedde higher, she perced the self heven, so that the ses, do appoynt me, and compel me to writ these verses in meter, and the sorrowfull verses do wet my wretched face with very waterye teares, yssuinge out of my eyes for sorowe. Whiche muses no feare without doute could ouercome, but that they wold folow me in my iourney of exile or banishment. Sometyme the ioye of happy and lusty delectable youth dyd conifort me, and nowe the course of sorowfull olde age causeth me to reioyse. For hasty old age vnloked for is come vpon me with al her incommodities and euyls, and sorowe hath commaunded and broughte me into the same old age, that is to say: that sorowe causeth me to be olde, before my time come of olde age. The hoer heares do growe vntimely vpon my heade, and my reuiled skynne trembleth my flesh, cleane consumed and wasted with sorowe. Mannes death is happy, that cometh not in youth, when a man is lustye, and in pleasure or welth: but in time of aduersitie, when it is often desyred. Alas Alas howe dull and deffe be the cares of cruel death vnto men in misery that would fayne dye: and yet refusythe to come and shutte vp theyr carefull wepyng eyes. Whiles that false fortune fauoryed me with her transitorye goodes, then the howre of death had almost ouercome me. That is to say, deathe was redy to oppresse me when I was in prosperitie. Nowe for by cause that fortune beynge turned, from prosperitie into aduersitie (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaungyd her deceyuable countenaunce; my wretched life is yet prolonged, and doth continue in dolour. O my frendes, why haue you so often bosted me, sayinge that I was happy when I had honour possessions riches, and authoritie whych be transitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no stedefast degre.

WHYLES that I considerydde pryuylye with my selfe the thynges before sayd, and descrybed my wofull complaynte after the maner and offyce of a wrytter, me thought I sawe a woman stand ouer my head of a reuerend countenaunce, hauyng quycke and glysteryng clere eye, aboue the common sorte of men in lyuely and delectable coloure, and ful of strength, although she semed so olde by no meanes she is thought to be one of this oure tyme, her stature is of douteful knowledge, for nowe she shewethe herselfe at the common length or statur of men, and other whiles she semeth so high, as though she touched heuen with the crown of her hed. And when she wold stretch fourth her hed hygher, it also perced thorough heauen, so that mens sygnt coulde not attaine to behold the sight of menne lokyng was in ydell: her clothes wer maked of right delie thredes, and subtel craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes she had woven with her own handes, as I knewe well after by her self declaryng, and shewyng to me the beautie: The whiche clothes a darknesse of a forleten and dispised elde had dusked and darked, as it is wonte to darke by smoked images.

In the netherest hemme and border of these clothes menne redde iwoven therein a Grekishe A. that signifieth the life active, and above that letter, in the hiest bordure, a Grekishe C. that signifieth the life contemplatife. And betwene these two letters there were seen degrees nobly wrought, in maner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the netherest letter to the upperest: nathelesse handes of some men hadden kerve that clothe, by violence or by strength, and everiche manne of hem had borne awaie soche peces, as he might getten. And forsothe this forsaied woman bare smale bokes in her right hande, and in her lefte hande she bare a scepter. And when she sawe these Poeticall muses approchyng about my bed, and endityng wordes to my wepynges, she was a little amoved, and glowed with cruell eyen. Who (q'ð she) hath suffered approchen to this sike manne these commen strompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne asswagen not his sorowes with remedies, but thei would feden and norishe hym with swete venime? Forsothe, that ben tho that with thornes, and prickynges of talentes of affeccions, whiche that ben nothyng fructuous nor profitable, distroien the Corne, plentuous of fruites of reson. For thei holden hertes of men in usage, but thei ne deliver no folke fro maladie. But if ye muses had withdrawen fro me with your flatteries any unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wonte to finde commenly emong the peple, I would well suffre the lasse grevously. For why, in soche an unprofitable man myne ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrowen fro me this man, that hath ben nourished in my studies or scoles of Eleaticis, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that ben swete, till it be at the last, and suffreth this man to be cured and heled by my muses, that is to say, by my notefull sciences. And thus this companie of muses iblamed casten wrothly the chere dounward to the yerth, and shewing by rednesse ther shame, thei passeden sorowfully the thresholde. And I of whom the sight plounged in teres was darked, so that I ne might not know what that woman was, of so Imperial behold her. Her vestures or cloths were perfyt of the finyste thredes, and subtyll workemanshyp, and of substaunce permanent, whych vestures she had wouen with her own hands as I perceyued after by her owne saiynge. The kynde or beawtye of the whyche vestures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignorance of oldenes forgotten hadde obscuryd and darkened, as the smoke is wont to darken images that stand nyghe the smoke. In the lower part of the said vestures was read the Greke letter P. wouen whych signifyeth practise or actyffe, and in the hygher parte of the vestures the Greke letter T. whych estandeth for theorica, that signifyeth speculacion or contemplation. And betwene both the sayd letters were sene certayne degrees, wrought after the maner of ladders, wherein was as it were a passage or waye in steppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter P. was which is vnderstand from practys or actyf, unto the hygher parte wher the letter T. was whych is vnderstand speculacion or contemplacion. Neuertheles the handes of some vyolente persones had cut the sayde vestures and had taken awaye certayne pecis thereof, such as euery one coulde catch. And she her selfe dyd bare in her ryght hand litel bokes, and in her lefte hande a scepter, which foresayd phylosophy (when she saw the muses poetycal present at my bed, spekyng sorowfull wordes to my wepynges) beyng angry sayd (with terrible or frownynge countenaunce) who suffred these crafty harlottes to com to thys sycke man? whych can help hym by no meanes of hys griefe by any kind of medicines, but rather increase the same with swete poyson. These be they that doo dystroye the fertile and plentious commodytyes of reason and the fruytes therof wyth their pryckynge thornes, or barren affectes, and accustome or subdue mens myndes with sickenes, and heuynes, and do not delyuer or heale them of the same. But yf your flatterye had conueyed or withdrawen from me, any vnlernyd man as the comen sorte of people are wonte to be, I coulde haue ben better contentyd, for in that my worke shoulde not be hurt or hynderyd. But you haue taken and conueyed from me thys man that hath ben broughte vp in the studyes of Aristotel and of Plato. But yet get you hence maremaids (that seme swete untyll you haue brought a man to deathe) and suffer me to heale thys my man wyth my muses or sceyences that be holsome and good. And after that philosophy had spoken these wordes the sayd companye of the musys poeticall beynge rebukyd and sad, caste down their countenaunce to the grounde, and by blussyng confessed their

perial aucthoritie, I woxe all abashed and stonied, and cast my sight doune to the yerth, and began still for to abide what she would doen afterward. Then came she nere, and set her doune upon the utterest corner of my bed, and she beholdyng my chere, that was cast to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with these words (that I shall saine) the perturbacion of my thought.

The conclusions of the ASTROLABIE.

This book, (written to his son in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) standeth so good at this day, especially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, says an Edit. of Chaucer.

LYTEL Lowys my sonne, I perceve well by certaine evidences thyne abylyte to lerne scyences, touching nombres and proporcions, and also well consydre I thy besye prayer in especyal to lerne the tretyse of the astrolabye. Than for as moche as a philosopher saithe, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condiscendeth to the ryghtfull prayers of his frende: therfore I have given the a sufficient astrolabye for our orizont, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the whiche by mediacion of this lytell tretise, I purpose to teche the a certaine nombre of conclusions, pertainynge to this same instrument. I say a certaine nombre of conclusions for thre causes, the first cause is this. Truste wel that al the conclusions that have be founden, or ells possiblye might be founde in so noble an instrument as in the astrolabye, ben unknowen perfitely to anye mortal man in this region, as I suppose. Another cause is this, that sothely in any cartes of the astrolabye that I have ysene, ther ben some conclusions, that wol not in al thinges perfourme ther behestes: and some of hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceve. This tretise divided in five partes, wil I shewe the wondir light rules and naked wordes in Englishe, for Latyne ne canst thou nat yet but smale, my litel sonne. But nevertheless sufficeth to the these trewe conclusyons in Englishe, as well as suffiseth to these noble clerkes Grekes these same conclusyons in Greke, and to the Arabines in Arabike, and to the Jewes in Hebrewe, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke had hem firste out of other divers langages, and write hem in ther owne tongue, that is to saine in Latine.

And God wote that in all these langages and in manye mo, have these conclusyons ben sufficientlye lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome.

Now wol I pray mekely every person discrete, that redeth or hereth this lityl tretise to have my rude ententing excused, and my superfluite of wordes, for two causes. The first cause is, for that curious endityng and harde sentences is ful hevy at ones, for soch a childe to lerne. And the seconde cause is this, that sothely me semeth better to writen unto a childe twise a gode sentence, that he foriete it ones. And, Lowis, if it be so that I shewe the in my lith Englishe, as trewe conclusions touching this mater, and not only as trewe but as many and subtil conclusions as ben yshewed in Latin, in any comon tretise of the astrolabye, conne me the more thanke, and praye God save the kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him saith bereth, and obeieth everiche in his degree, the more and the lasse. But consydreth well, that I ne usurpe not to have founden this werke of my labour or of myne engin. I n'ame but a leude compilatour of the laboure of olde astrologiens, and have it translated in myn Englishe onely for thy doctrine: and with this swerde shal I slene envy.

The first party.

The first partye of this tretise shal reherce the figures, and the membres of thyne astrolaby, bycause that thou shalt have the greter knowinge of thine owne instrument.

The seconde party.

The seconde partye shal teche the to werken the very practike of the foresaid conclusions, as ferforthe and also narowe as may be shewed in so smale an instrument portatife aboute. For well wote every astrologien, that smallest fractions ne wol not be shewed in so smal an instrument, as in subtil tables calculed for a cause.

The PROLOGUE of the TESTAMENT of LOVE.

MANY men ther ben, that with eres openly sprad so moche swallowen the deliciousnesse of jestes and of ryme, by queint knittinge coloures, that of the godenesse or of the badnesse of the sentence take they litel hede or else none.

Sothelye dulle witte and a thoughtfulle soule so sore have mined and graffed in my spirites, that soche craft of enditinge woll nat ben of mine acquaintance. And for rude wordes and boistous percen the herte of the herer to the inrest point, and planten there the sentence of thinges, so that with litel helpe it is able to spring, this boke, that nothinge hath of the grete flode of wytte, ne of semelyche colours, is dolven with rude wordes and boistous, and so drawe togiðer to maken the catchers therof ben the more redy to hent sentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and some with wers, as with red inke, and some with coles and chalke: and yet is there gode matter to the leude peple of thylke chalkye purtreyture, as 'hem thinketh for the time, and afterward the syght of the better colours yeven to 'hem more joye for the first leudenesse. So sothly this leude clowdy occupacyon is not to prayse, but by the leude, for comenly leude leudenesse commendeth. Eke it shal yeve sight that other precyous thynges shall be the more in reverence. In Latin and French hath many soveraine wittes had grete delyte to endite, and have mady noble thinges fulfilde, but certes there ben some that speken ther poise mater in Frenche, of whiche speche the Frenche men have as gode a santasye as we have in heryng of Frenche mens Englishe. And many termes there ben in Englyshe, whiche unneth we Englishe men connen declare the knowleginge; howe should than a Frenche man borne? soche termes connejumpere in his matter, but as the jay chatereth Englishe. Right so truely the understandyn of Englishmen woll not stretche to the privie termes in Frenche, what so ever we bosten of straunge langage. Let then clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the propertie of science and the knowinge in that facultie: and let Frenche men in ther Frenche also enditen ther queint termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthes; and let us shewe our fantasies in such wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke be lytel 'hank worthy for the leudenesse in travaile, yet soch writing exiten men to thilke thinges that ben necessarie; for every man thereby may as by a perpetual myrrour sene the vices or vertues of other, in whyche thynge lightly may be conceved to eschue perils, and necessaries to catch, after as aventures have fallen to other peple or persons.

Certes the soverainst thinge of desire and most creture resonable, have or els shuld have full appetite to ther perfeccyon: unresonable bestes mowen not, sithe reson hath in 'hem no workinge: than resonable that wol not, is comparisoned to unresonable, and made lyke 'hem. Forsothe the most soveraine and finall perfeccion of man is in knowynge of a sothe, withouten any entent decevable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to knowe, and love his creatour.

Nowe principally the mene to brynge in knowleging and lovynge his creatour, is the consideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylke thinges that ben made, understandynge here to our wyttes, arne the unsene pryvities of God made to us syghtfull and knowinge, in our contemplacion and understondinge. These thinges than forsothe moche bringen us to the ful knowleginge sothe, and to the parfyte love of the maker of hevenly thinges. Lo! David saith: thou hast delited me in makinge, as who saith, to have delite in the tune how God hat lent me in consideracion of thy makinge. Wherof Aristotle in the boke de Animalibus, saith to naturell philosophers: it is a grete likynge in love of knowinge ther cretoure: and also in knowinge of causes in kindelye thynges, considrid forsothe the formes of kyndelye thynges and the shap, a gret kyndelye love we shulde have to the werkman that 'hem made. The crafte of a werkman is shewed in the werk. Herefore truhe the philosophers with a lyvely studie manie noble thinges, righte precious, and worthy to memorye, writen, and by a gret swet and travaille to us laften of causes the properties in natures of thinges, to whiche therfore philosophers it was more joy, more lykinge, more herty lust in kindely vertues and matters of reson the perfeccion by busy study to knowe, than to have had all the tresour, al the richesse, al the vaine glory, that the passed emperours, princes, or kinges hadden. Therfore the names of 'hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and pece arne writen; and in the contrarie, that is to in Styxe the foule pitte of helle arne thilke pressed that soch godenes hated. And bicause this boke shall be of love, and the prime causes of stering in that doinge with passions and diseses for wantinge of desire, I will that this boke be cleped the testament of love.

But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not in scorne laughe, to here a dwarfe or els halfe a man, say he will rende out the swerde of Hercules handes, and also he shulde set Hercules Gades a mile yet ferther, and over that he had power of strength to pull up the spere, that Alisander the noble myght never wagge, and that passinge al thinge to ben mayster of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edwarde the thirde for al his grete prowesse in victories ne might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote well, ther shall be made more scorne and jape of me, that I so unworthely clothed altogither in the cloudie cloude of unconning, wil putten me in prees to speke of love, or els of the causes in that matter, sithen al the grettest clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who saith gathered up clene toforne 'hem, and with ther sharp sithes of conning al mowen and made therof grete rekes and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many an other. Envye forsothe commendeth noughte his reson, that he hath in hain, be it never so trusty. And although these noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy ther hier, han al draw and bounde up in the sheves, and made many shockes, yet have I ensample to gaðer the smale crommes, and fullin ma walet of tho that falled from the bourde among the smalle houndes, notwithstanding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remissailes, as trenchours, and the relefe to here to the almesse. Yet also heve I leve of the noble husbande Boece, although I be a straunger of conninge to come after his doctrine, and these grete workmen, and glene my handfuls of the shedynge after ther handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encrese my porcion with that I shall drawe by privyties out of shockes; a slye servaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in causes of thynges, was more hardier in the firste sechers, and so sayth Aristotle, and lighter in us that han folowed after. For ther passing study han freshed our wittes, and oure understandynge han excited in consideracion of trouth by sharpenes of ther resons. Utterly these thinges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouth, and as they me betiden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whan the wether out of mesure was boistous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as his kind asketh, with dryinge coldes maked the wawes of the ocean se so to arise unkindely over the commune bankes that it was in point to spill all the erthe.

The Prologues of the Canterbury Tales of CHAUCER, from the MSS.

WHEN that Aprilis with his shouris sote,
The drought of March had percid to the rote,
And bathid every veyn in such licour,
Of which vertue engendrid is the flour.
When Zephyrus eke, with his swete breth
Enspirid hath, in every holt and heth
The tender croppis; and that the yong Sunn
Hath in the Ramm his halvè cours yrunn:
And smalè foulis makin melodye,
That slepin allè night with opin eye,
(So prickith them nature in ther corage)
Then longin folk to go on pilgrimage:
And palmers for to sekin strangè strondes,
To servin hallowes couth in sondry londes:
And specially fro every shir'is end
Of England, to Canterbury they wend,
The holy blisfull martyr for to seke,
That them hath holpin, whan that they were seke.

Befell that in that seson on a day
In Southwerk at the Tabberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devote corage,
At night wer come into that hostery
Wele nine and twenty in a cumpany
Of sundrie folk, by aventure yfall
In felaship: and pilgrimes wer they all:
That toward Canterbury wouldin ride.

The chambers and the stablis werin wide,
And well we werin esid at the best:
And shortly whan the sunnè was to rest,
So had I spokin with them everych one,
That I was of ther felaship anone;
And madè forward erli for to rise,
To take our weye, ther as I did devise.

But nathless while that I have time and space,
Er' that I farther in this talè pace,
Methinkith it accordaunt to reson,
To tell you allè the condition
Of ech of them, so as it semid me,
And which they werin, and of what degree,
And eke in what array that they wer in;
And at a knight then woll I first begin.

The Knight.

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the timè that he first began
To ridin out, he lovid Chevalrie,
Trouth and honour, fredome and curtesy.
Full worthy was he in his lordis werre,
And thereto had he riddin nane more ferre

As well in Christendom, as in Hethness;
And evyr honoured for his worthiness.
At Alessandre he was whan it was won;
Full oft timis he had the bord begon
Abovin allè naciouns in Pruce;
In Lettow had he ridden, and in Luce,
No Christen-man so oft of his degree
In Granada; in the sege had he be
Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary;
At Leyis was he, and at Sataly,
Whan that they wer won; and in the grete see
At many'a noble army had he be:
At mortàl battails had he ben fiftene,
And foughtin for our feith at Tramesene,
In listis thrys, and alwey slein his fo.
This ilke worthy knight had been also
Sometimis with the lord of Palathy,
Ayens anothir hethin in Turky;
And evirmore he had a sov'rane prize;
And though that he was worthy, he was wise;
And of his port as meke as is a maid,
Ne nevir yet no villany he said
In all his life unto no manner wight:
He was a very parfit gentil knight.
But for to tellin you of his array,
His hors wer good; but he was nothing gay,
Of fustian he werid a gipon,
Allè besmottrid with his haburgeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wentè for to do his pilgrimage.

The House of FAME.

The First Boke.

NOW herken, as I have you saied,
What that I mette or I abraied,
Of December the tenith daie,
When it was night, to slepe I laie,
Right as I was wont for to doen,
And fill aslepè wondir sone,
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimagè milis two
To the corps of sainct Leonarde,
To makin lith that erst was harde.
But as me slept me mette I was
Within a temple' imade of glas,
In whiche there werin mo images
Of golde, standyng in sondrie stages,
Sette in mo riche tabirnacles,
And with perrè mo pinnacles,
And mo curious portraituris,
And queint manir of figuris
Of golde worke, then I sawe evir.
But certainly I n'ist nevir
Where that it was, but well wist I
It was of Venus redily
This temple, for in purtreiture
I sawe anone right her figure
Nakid yfletyng in a se,
And also on her hedde parde
Her rosy garland white and redde,
And her combe for to kembe her hedde,
Her dovis, and Dan Cupido
Her blindè sonne, and Vulcano,
That in his face ywas full broune.
But as I romid up and doune,
I founde that on the wall there was
Thus writtin on a table' of bras.
I woll now syng, if that I can,
The armis, and also the man,
That first came through his destine
Fugitife fro Troye the countre
Into Italie, with full moche pine,
Unto the strondis of Lavine,
And tho began the storie' anone,
As I shall tellin you echone.
First sawe I the distruccion
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his false untrue forswerynges,
And with his chere and his lesynges,
That made a horse, brought into Troye,
By whiche Trojans loste all their joye.
And aftir this was graved, alas!
How Ilions castill assailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus slain,
And Polites his sonne certain,
Dispitously of Dan Pyrrhus.
And next that sawe I howe Venus,
When that she sawe the castill brende,
Doune from hevin she gan discende,
And bade her sonne Æneas fle,
And how he fled, and how that he
Escapid was from all the pres,
And toke his fathre', old Anchises,
And bare hym on his back awaie,
Crying alas and welawaie!
The whiche Anchises in his hande,
Bare tho the goddis of the lande
I mene thilke that unbrennid were.
Then sawe I next that all in fere
How Creusa, Dan Æneas wife,
Whom that he lovid all his life,
And her yong sonne clepid Julo,
And eke Ascanius also,
Fleddin eke, with full drerie chere,
That it was pite for to here,

And in a forest as thei went
How at a tournyng of a went
Creusa was iloste, alas!
That rede not I, how that it was
How he her sought, and how her ghoste
Bad hym to flie the Grekis hoste,
And saied he must into Itaile,
As was his destinie, sauns faile,
That is was pitie for to here,
When that her spirite gan appere
The wordis that she to hym saied,
And for to kepe her sonne hym praied.
There sawe I gravin eke how he
His fathir eke, and his meinè,
With his shippis began to saile
Toward the countrey of Itaile,
As streight as ere they mightin go.
There sawe I eke the, cruill Juno,
That art Dan Jupiter his wife,
That hast ihated all thy life
Merciless all the Trojan blode,
Rennin and crie as thou were wode
On Æolus, the god of windes,
To blowin out of allè kindes
So loudè, that he should ydrenche
Lorde, and ladie, and grome, and wenche
Of all the Trojanis nacion,
Without any' of their salvacion.
There sawe I soche tempest arise,
That evèry herte might agrise,
To se it paintid on the wall.
There sawe I eke gravin withall,
Venus, how ye, my ladie dere,
Ywepyng with full wofull chere
Yprayid Jupiter on hie,
To save and kepin that navie
Of that dere Trojan Æneas,
Sithins that he your sonne ywas.

Gode counsaile of CHAUCER.

FLIE fro the prese and dwell with sothfastnesse,
Suffise unto thy gode though it be small,
For horde hath hate, and climbyng tikilnesse,
Prece hath envie, and wele it brent oer all,
Savour no more then the behovin shall,
Rede well thy self, that othir folke canst rede,
And trouthe the shall delivir it 'is no drede.
Painè the not eche crokid to redresse,
In trust of her that tournith as a balle,
Grete rest standith in litel businesse,
Beware also to spurnè against a nalle,
Strive not as doith a crocke with a walle,
Demith thy self that demist othir's dede.
And trouthe the shall deliver it 'is no drede.
That the is sent receve in buxomenesse;
The wrastlyng of this worlde askith a fall·
Here is no home, here is but wildirnesse,
Forthe pilgrim, forthe o best out of thy stall,
Loke up on high, and thanke thy God of all,
Weivith thy luste and let thy ghost the lede,
And trouthe the shall deliver it 'is no drede.

Balade of the village without paintyng.

THIS wretchid world'is transmutacion
As wele and wo, nowe pore, and now honour,
Without ordir or due discrecion
Govirnid is by fortune'is errour,
But nathèlesse the lacke of her favour
Ne maie not doe me syng though that I die,
J'ay tout perdu, mon temps & mon labeur
For finally fortune I doe defie,
Yet is me left the sight of my resoun
To knowin frende fro foe in thy mirrour,
So moche hath yet thy tournyng up and doun,
I taughtin me to knowin in an hour,
But truily no force of thy reddour
To hym that ovir hymself hath maistrie,
My suffisaunce yshal be my succour,
For finally fortune I do defie.
O Socrates, thou stedfast champion,
She ne might nevir be thy turmentour,
Thou nevir dreddist her oppression,
Ne in her chere foundin thou no favour,
Thou knewe wele the disceipt of her colour,
And that her moste worship is for to lie,
I knowe her eke a false dissimulour.
For finally fortune I do defie.

The answere of Fortune.

NO man is wretchid but hymself it wene,
He that yhath hymself hath suffisaunce,
Why saiest thou then that I am to the so kene,
That hast thy self out of my govirnaunce?
Saie thus grant mercie of thin habundaunce,
That thou hast lent or this, thou shalt not strive,
What wost thou yet how I the woll avaunce?
And eke thou hast thy bestè frende alive.
I have the taught division betwene
Frende of effecte, and frende of countinaunce,
The nedith not the gallè of an hine,
That curith eyin derke for ther penaunce,
Now seest thou clere that wer in ignoraunce,
Yet holt thine anker, and thou maiest arive
There bountie bereth the key of my substaunce,
And eke thou haste thy bestè frende alive.

How many have I refused to sustene,
Sith I have the fostrid in thy plesaunce?
Wolt thou then make a statute on thy quene,
That I shall be aie at thine ordinaunce?
Thou born art in my reign of variaunce,
About the whele with othir must thou drive
My lore is bet, then wicke is thy grevaunce,
And eke thou hast bestè frende alive.

The answere to Fortune.

THY lore I dampne, it is adversitie,
My frend maist thou not revin blind goddesse.
That I thy frendis knowe I thanke it the,
Take 'hem again, let 'hem go lie a presse,
The nigardis in kepyng ther richesse
Pronostike is thou wolt ther tour assaile,
Wicke appetite cometh aie before sickenesse,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Fortune.

THOU pinchist at my mutabilitie,
For I the lent a droppe of my richesse,
And now me likith to withdrawin me,
Why shouldist thou my roialtie oppresse?
The se maie ebbe and flowin more and lesse,
The welkin hath might to shine, rain, and haile,
Right so must I kithin my brotilnesse,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

The Plaintiffe.

LO, the' execucion of the majestie,
That all purveighith of his rightwisenesse,
That samè thyng fortune yclepin ye,
Ye blindè bestis full of leudènesse!
The heven hath propirtie of sikirness,
This worldè hath evir restlesse travaile,
The last daie is the ende of myne entresse,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Th' envoye of Fortune.

PRINCES I praie you of your gentilnesse,
Let not this man and me thus crie and plain,
And I shall quitin you this businesse,
And if ye liste releve hym of his pain,
Praie ye his best frende of his noblenesse
That to some bettir state he maie attain.

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the same time with Chaucer. Out of his prologue to his third book of The Fall of Princes a few stanzas are selected, which, being compared with the style of his two contemporaries, will show that our language was then not written by caprice, but was in a settled state.

LIKE a pilgrime which that goeth on foote,
And hath none horse to relieue his trauayle,
Whote, drye and wery, and may finde no bote
Of wel cold whan thrust doth hym assayle
Wine nor licour, that may to him auayle,
Right so fare I which in my businesse,
No succour fynde my rudenesse to redresse.
I meane as thus, I haue no fresh licour
Out of the conduites of Calliope,
Nor through Clio in rhetorike no floure,
In my labour for to refresh me
Nor of the susters in noumber thrise three,
Which with Cithera on Parnaso dwell,
They neuer me gaue drinke once of their wel.
Nor of theyr springes clere and christaline,
That sprange by touchyng of the Pegase,
Their fauour lacketh my making ten lumine
I fynde theyr bawme of so great scarcitie,
To tame theyr tunnes with some drop of plentie
For Poliphemus throw his great blindnes,
Hath in me derked of Argos the brightnes.
Our life here short of wit the great dulnes
The heuy soule troubled with trauayle,
And of memorye the glasyng brotelnes
Drede and vncunning haue made a strong batail
With werines my spirite to assayle,
And with their subtil creping in most queint
Hath made my spirit in makyng for to feint.
And ouermore, the ferefull forwardnes
Of my stepmother called obliuion,
Hath a bastyll of forȝetfulnes,
To stoppe the passage, and shadow my reason
That I might haue no clere direccion,
In translating of new to quicke me,
Stories to write of olde antiquite.
Thus was I set and stode in double werre
At the metyng of feareful wayes tweyne,
The one was this, who euer list to leue,
Whereas good wyll gan me constrayne,
Bochas taccomplish for to doe my payne,
Came ignoraunce, with a menace of drede,
My penne to rest I durst not procede.

Fortescue was chief justice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of king Henry VI. He retired in 1471, after the battle of Tewkesbury, and probably wrote most of his works in his privacy. The following passage is selected from his book of The Difference between an absolute and limited Monarchy.

HYT may peraventure be marvelid by some men, why one Realme is a Lordshyp only Royall, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, called Jus Regale; and another Knygdome is a Lordschip, Royall and Politike, and the Prince thereof rulyth by a Lawe, called Jus Politicum & Regale; sythen thes two Princes beth of egall Astate.

To this dowte it may be answeryd in this manner; The first Institution of thes twoo Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the cause of this diversyte.

When Nembroth by Might, for his owne Glorye, made and incorporate the first Realme, and subduyd it to hymself by Tyrannye, he would not have it governyd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accomplishment thereof he made it. And therfor, though he had thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyid to cal hym a Kyng, Quia Rex dicitur a Regendo; Whych thyng he dyd not, but oppressyd the People by Myght, and therfore he was a Tyrant, and callid Primus Tyrannorum. But holy Writ callith hym Robustus Venator coram Deo. For as the Hunter takyth the wyld beste for to scle and eate hym: so Nembroth subduyed to him the People with Might, to have their service and their goods, using upon them the Lordschip that is callid Dominium Regale tantum. After hym Belus that was callid first a Kyng, and after hym his Sone Nynus, and after hym other Panyms; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmys, would not have them rulyd by other Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys ben right good under good Princes; and their Kyngdoms a then most resemblyd to the Kyngdome of God, which reynith upon Man, rulyng him by hys own Will. Wherfor many Crystyn Princes usen the same Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys sayen, Quod Principi placuit Legis habet vigorem. And thus I suppose first beganne in Realmys, Dominium tantum Regale. But afterward, whan Mankynd was more mansuete, and better disposyd to Vertue, Grete Communalties, as was the Felishyp, that came into this Lond with Brute, wyllyng to be unyed and made a Body Politike callid a Realme, havyng an Heed to governe it; as after the Saying of the philosopher, every Communaltie unyed of many parts must needs have an heed; than they chose the same Brute to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Institution, and onyng of themself into a Realme, ordeynyd the same Realme so to be rulyd and justyfyd by such Lawys, as they al would assent unto; which Law therefor is callid Politicum; and bycause it is mynystrid by a Kyng, it is callid Regale. Dominium Politicum dicitur quasi Regimen, plurium Scientia, sive Consilio ministratum. The Kyng of Scotts reynith upon his People by his Lawe, videlicet, Regimine Politico & Regali. And as Diodorus Syculus saith, in his Boke de priscis Historiis, The Realme of Egypte is rulid by the same Lawe, and therfor the King therof chaungith not his Lawes, without the Assent of his People. And in like forme as he saith is ruled the Kyngdome of Saba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Libie; And also the more parte of al the Realmys in Afrike. Which manner of Rule and Lordship, the sayd Diodorus in that Boke, praysith gretely. For it is not only good for the Prince, that may thereby the more sewerly do Justice, than by his owne Arbitriment; but it is also good for his People that receyve therby, such Justice as they desyer themself. Now as me seymth, it ys shewyd opinly ynough, why one Kyng rulyth and reynith on his People Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali: For that one Kyngdom beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and that other beganne, by the Desier and Institution of the People of the same Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was necessary to give a large specimen, both because our language was then in a great degree formed and settled, and because it appears from Ben Jonson, that his works were considered as models of pure and elegant style. The tale, which is placed first, because earliest written, will show what an attentive reader will, in perusing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being diffused among those classes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty, has suffered very little change. There is another reason why the extracts from this author are more copious: his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better trusted than any other edition of the English books of that, or the preceding ages

A merry iest how a sergeant would learne to playe the frere. Written by maister Thomas More in hys youth.

WYSE men alway,
Affyrme and say,
That best is for a man:
Diligently,
For to apply,
The business that he can,
And in no wyse,
To enterpryse,
An other faculte,
For he that wyll,
And can no skyll,
Is neuer lyke to the.
He that hath lafte,
The hosiers crafte,
And falleth to making shone,
The smythe that shall,
To payntyng fall,
His thrift is well nigh done.
A blacke draper,
With whyte paper,
To goe to writyng scole,
An olde butler,
Becum a cutler,
I wene shall proue a fole.
And an olde trot,
That can I wot.
Nothyng but kisse the cup,
With her phisick,
Wil kepe one sicke,
Tyll she haue soused hym vp.
A man of lawe,
That neuer sawe,
The wayes to bye and sell,
Wenyng to ryse,
By marchaundise,
I wish to spede hym well.
A marchaunt eke,
That wyll go seke.
By all the meanes he may,
To fall in sute,
Tyll he dispute,
His money clene away,
Pletyng the lawe,
For euery strawe,
Shall proue a thrifty man,
With bate and strife,
But by my life,
I cannot tell you whan.

Whan an hatter
Wyll go smatter,
In philosophy,
Or a pedlar
Ware a medlar,
In theology,
All that ensue,
Suche craftes new,
They driue so farre a cast,
That euermore,
They do therfore,
Beshrewe themselfe at last.
This thing was tryed
And verefyed,
Here by a sergeaunt late,
That thrifty was,
Or he coulde pas,
Rapped about the pate,
Whyle that he would
See howe he could,
A little play the frere:
Now yf you wyll,
Knowe howe it fyll,
Take hede and ye shall here.
It happed so,
Not long ago,
A thrifty man there dyed,
An hundred pounde,
Of nobles rounde,
That had he layd a side:
His sonne he wolde,
Should haue this golde,
For to beginne with all:
But to suffise
His chylde, well thrise,
That money was to smal,
Yet or this day
I have hard say,
That many a man certesse,
Hath with good cast,
Be ryche at last,
That hath begonne with lesse.
But this yonge manne,
So well beganne,
His money to employ,
That certainly,
His policy.
To see it was a joy,
For lest sum blast,
Myght ouer cast,
His ship, or by mischaunce,
Men with sum wile,
Myght hym begyle,
And minish his substaunce,

For to put out,
Al maner dout,
He made a good puruay,
For euery whyt,
By his owne wyt,
And toke an other way:
First fayre and wele,
Therof much dele,
He dygged it in a pot,
But them him thought,
That way was nought,
And there he left it not.
So was he faine,
From thence agayne,
To put it in a cup,
And by and by,
Couetously,
He supped it fayre vp,
In his owne brest,
He thought it best,
His money to enclose,
Then wist he well,
What euer fell,
He coulde it neuer lose.
He borrowed then,
Of other men,
Money and marchaundise:
Nauer payd it,
Up he laid it,
In like maner wyse.
Yet on the gere,
That he would were,
He reight not what he spent,
So it were nyce,
As for the price,
Could him not miscontent.
With lusty sporte,
And with resort,
Of ioly company,
In mirth and play,
Full many a day,
He liued merely.
And men had sworne,
Some men is borne,
To haue a lucky howre,
And so was he,
For such degre,
He gat and suche honour,
That without dout,
Whan he went out,
A sergeaunt well and fayre,
Was redy strayte,
On him to wayte,
As sone as on the mayre.

But he doubtlesse,
Of his mekenesse,
Hated such pompe and pride,
And would not go,
Companied so,
But drewe himself a side,
To saint Katharine,
Streight as a line,
He gate him at a tyde,
For deuocion,
Or promocion,
There would he nedes abyde.
There spent he fast,
Till all were past,
And to him came there meny,
To aske theyr det,
But none could get,
The valour of a peny.
With visage stout,
He bare it out,
Euen vnto the harde hedge,
A month or twaine,
Tyll he was fayne.
To laye his gowne to pledge.
Than was he there,
In greater feare,
Than ere that he came thither,
And would as fayne,
Depart againe,
But that he wist not whither.
Than after this,
To a frende of his,
He went and there abode,
Where as he lay,
So sick alwey,
He myght not come abrode.
It happed than,
A marchaunt man,
That he ought money to,
Of an officere,
That can enquere,
What him was best to do.
And he answerde,
Be not afrayd,
Take an accion therfore,
I you beheste,
I shall hym reste,
And than care for no more.
I feare quod he,
It wyll not be,
For he wyll not come out.
The sergeaunt said,
Be not afrayd,
It shall be brought about.

In many a game,
Lyke to the same,
Have I bene well in vre,
And for your sake,
Let me be bake,
But yf I do this cure.
Thus part they both,
And foorth then goth,
A pace this officere,
And for a day,
All his array,
He chaunged with a frere.
So was he dight,
That no man might,
Hym for a frere deny,
He dopped and dooked,
He spake and looked,
So religiously.
Yet in a glasse,
Or he would passe.
He toted and he peered,
His harte for pryde,
Lepte in his syde
To see how well he freered.
Than forth a pace,
Unto the place,
He goeth withouten shame
To do this dede,
But now take hede
For here begynneth the game.
He drew hym ny,
And softely,
Streyght at the dore he knocked:
And a damsell,
That hard hym well,
There came and it vnlocked.
The frere sayd
Good spede fayre mayd,
Here lodgeth such a man,
It is told me:
Well syr quod she,
And yf he do what than.
Quod he maystresse,
No harm doutlesse:
It longeth for our order,
To hurt no man,
But as we can,
Euery wight to forder.
With hym truly,
Fayne speake would I,
Sir quod she by my fay,
He is so sike,
Ye be not lyke,
To speake with hym to day.

Quod he fayre may,
Yet I you pray
This much at my desire,
Vouchesafe to do,
As go hym to,
And say an austen frere
Would with hym speke,
And matters breake,
For his auayle certayn.
Quod she I wyll,
Stonde ye here styll,
Tyll I come downe agayn.
Vp is she go,
And told hym so,
As she was bode to say,
He mistrustyng,
No maner thyng,
Sayd mayden go thy way
And fetch him hyder,
That we togyder,
May talk. A downe she gothe,
Vp she hym brought,
No harme she thought,
But it made some folke wrothe.
This officere,
This fayned frere,
Whan he was come aloft,
He dopped than,
And grete this man,
Religiously and oft.
And he agayn,
Ryght glad and fayn,
Toke hym there by the hande
The frere than sayd,
Ye be dismayd,
With trouble I understande.
In dede quod he,
It hath with me,
Bene better than it is.
Syr quod the frere,
Be of good chere,
Yet shall it after this.
But I would now,
Comen with you,
In counsayle yf you please,
Or ellys nat
Of matters that
Shall set your heart at ease.
Downe went the mayd,
The marchaunt sayd,
Now say on gentle frere,
Of thys tydyng,
That ye me bryng,
I long full sore to here.

Whan there was none,
But they alone,
The frere with euyll grace,
Sayd, I rest the,
Come on with me,
And out he toke his mace:
Thou shalt obay,
Come on thy way,
I have the in my clouche,
Thou goest not hence,
For all the pense,
The mayre hath in his pouche.
This marchaunt there,
For wrath and fere,
He waxyng welnygh wood,
Sayd horson thefe,
With a mischefe,
Who hath taught the thy good.
And with his fist,
Vpon the lyst,
He gaue hym such a blow,
That backward downe,
Almost in sowne,
The frere is ouerthrow.
Yet was this man,
Well fearder than,
Lest he the frere had slayne,
Tyll with good rappes,
And heuy clappes,
He dawde hym vp agayne.
The frere took harte,
And vp he starte.
And well he layde about,
And so there goth,
Betwene them both,
Many a lusty clout.

Then rent and tere,
Eche others here,
And claue togyder fast,
Tyll with luggyng,
And with tuggyng,
They fell downe bothe at last.
Than on the grounde,
Togyder rounde,
With many a sadde stroke,
They roll and rumble,
They turne and tumble,
As pygges do in a poke.
So long aboue,
They heue and shoue,
Togider that at last,
The mayd and wyfe,
To breake the strife,
Hyed them vpward fast.
And whan they spye,
The captaynes lye,
Both waltring on the place,
The freres hood,
They pulled a good,
Adowne about his face.
Whyle he was blynde,
The wenche behynde,
Lent him leyd on the flore,
Many a ioule,
About the noule,
With a great batyldore.
The wyfe came yet,
And with her fete,
She holpe to kepe him downe.
And with her rocke,
Many a knocke,
She gaue hym on the crowne.

They layd his mace,
About his face,
That he was wood for payne:
The fryre frappe,
Gate many a swappe,
Tyll he was full nygh slayne.
Vp they hym lift,
And with yll thrift,
Hedlyng a long the stayre,
Downe they hym threwe,
And sayde adewe,
Commende us to the mayre.
The frere arose,
But I suppose,
Amased was his hed,
He shoke his eares,
And from grete feares,
He thought hym well yfled.
Quod he now lost,
Is all this cost,
We be neuer the nere.
Ill mote he be,
That caused me,
To make my self a frere.
Now masters all,
Here now I shall
Ende there as I began,
In any wyse,
I would anyse,
And counsayle euery man,
His owne craft vse,
All newe refuse,
And lyghtly let them gone:
Play not the frere,
Now make good chere,
And welcome euerych one.

A ruful lamentacion (writen by master Thomas More in his youth) of the deth of quene Elisabeth mother to king Henry the eight, wife to king Henry the seuenth, and eldest daughter to king Edward the fourth, which quene Elisabeth dyed in childbed in February in the yere of our Lord 1503, and in the 18 yere of the raigne of king Henry the seuenth.

O YE that put your trust and confidence,
In worldly ioy and frayle prosperite,
That so lyue here as ye should neuer hence,
Remember death and loke here vppon me.
Ensaumple I thynke there may no better be.
Your selfe wotte well that in this realme was I,
Your quene but late, and lo now here I lye.

Was I not borne of olde worthy linage?
Was not my mother queene, my father kyng?
Was I not a kinges fere in marriage?
Had I not plenty of euery pleasaunt thing?
Mercifull God this is a straunge reckenyng:
Rychesse, honour, welth, and auncestry,
Hath me forsaken, and lo now here I ly.
If worship myght haue kept me, I had not gone.
If wyt myght haue me saued, I neded not fere.
If money myght haue holpe, I lacked none.
But O good God what vayleth all this gere.
When deth is come thy mighty messangere,
Obey we must there is no remedy,
Me hath he sommoned, and lo now here I ly.
Yet was I late promised otherwyse,
This yere to liue in welth and delice.

With her is Byas, whose countrey lackt defence,
And whylom of their foes stode so in dout,
That eche man hastely gan to cary thence,
And asked hym why he nought caryed out.
I bere quod he all myne with me about:
Wisedom he ment, not fortunes brotle fees.
For nought he counted his that he might leese.

Heraclitus eke, lyst felowship to kepe
With glade pouertee, Democritus also:
Of which the fyrst can neuer cease but wepe,
To see how thicke the blynded people go,
With labour great to purchase care and wo.
That other laugheth to see the foolysh apes,
How earnestly they walk about theyr capes.

Of this poore sect, it is comen vsage,
Onely to take that nature may sustayne,
Banishing cleane all other surplusage.
They be content, and of nothyng complayne.
No nygarde eke is of his good so fayne.
But they more pleasure haue a thousande folde,
The secrete draughtes of nature to beholde.

Set fortunes servauntes by them and ye wull,
That one is free, that other euer thrall,
That one content, that other neuer full,
That one in suretye, that other lyke to fall.
Who lyst to aduise them bothe, parceyue he shall,
As great difference between them as we see,
Betwixte wretchednes and felicite.

Now haue I shewed you bothe: these whiche ye lyst,
Stately fortune, or humble pouertee:
That is to say, nowe lyeth it in your fyst,
To take here bondage, or free libertee.
But in thys poynte and ye do after me,
Draw you to fortune, and labour her to please,
If that ye thynke your selfe to well at ease.

And fyrst vppon the louely shall she smile,
And frendly on the cast her wandering eyes,
Embrace the in her armes, and for a whyle,
Put the and kepe the in a fooles paradise:
And foorth with all what so thou lyst deuise,
She wyll the graunt it liberally perhappes:
But for all that beware of after clappes.

Recken you neuer of her fauoure sure:
Ye may in clowds as easily trace an hare,
Or in drye lande cause fishes to endure,
And make the burnyng fyre his heate to spare,
And all thys worlde in compace to forfare,
As her to make by craft or engine stable,
That of her nature is euer variable.

Serue her day and nyght as reuerently,
Vppon thy knees as any seruaunt may,
And in conclusion, that thou shalt winne thereby
Shall not be worth thy servyce I dare say.
And looke yet what she geueth the to day,
With labour wonne she shall happly to morow
Plucke it agayne out of thyne hand with sorow.

Wherefore yf thou in suretye lyst to stande,
Take pouerties parte and let prowde fortune go,
Receyue nothyng that commeth from her hande.
Loue maner and vertue: they be onely tho
Whiche double fortune may not take the fro.
Then mayst thou boldly defye her turnyng chaunce:
She can the neyther hynde nor auaunce.

But and thou wylt nedes medle with her treasure,
Trust not therein, and spende it liberally.
Beare the not proude, nor take not out of measure,
Bylde not thyne house on heyth vp in the skye,
Nonne falleth farre, but he that climbeth hye.
Remember nature sent the hyther bare,
The gyftes of fortune count them borowed ware.

Thomas More to them that seke Fortune.

WHO so delyteth to prouen and assay,
Of waveryng fortune the vncertayne lot,
If that the aunswere please you not alway,
Blame ye not me: for I commaunde you not
Fortune to trust, and eke full well ye wot,
I haue of her no brydle in my fist,
She renneth loose, and turneth where she lyst.

The rollyng dyse in whome your lucke doth stande,
With whose vnhappy chaunce ye be so wroth,
Ye knowe your selfe came neuer in myne hande.
Lo in this ponde be fyshe and frogges both.
Cast in your nette: but be you liefe or lothe,
Hold you content as fortune lyst assyne:
For it is your owne fyshyng and not myne.

And though in one chaunce fortune you offend,
Grudge not there at, but beare a mery face.
In many an other she shall it amende.
There is no manne so farre out of her grace,
But he sometyme hath comfort and solace:
Ne none agayne so farre foorth in her fauour,
That is full satisfyed with her behauiour.

Fortune is stately, solemne, prowde, and hye:
And rychesse geueth, to haue seruyce therefore.
The nedy begger catcheth an halfpeny:
Some manne a thousande pound, some lesse some more.
But for all that she kepeth euer in store,
From euery manne some parcell of his wyll,
That he may pray therfore and serue her styll.

Some manne hath good, but chyldren hath he none.
Some manne hath both, but he can get none health.

Some hath al thre, but vp to honours trone,
Can he not crepe, by no maner of stelth.
To some she sendeth, children, ryches, welthe,
Honour, woorshyp, and reuerence all hys lyfe:
But yet she pyncheth hym with a shrewde wyfe.
Then for asmuch as it is fortunes guyse,
To graunt to manne all thyng that he wyll axe,
But as her selfe lyst order and deuyse,
Doth euery manne his parte diuide and tax,
I counsayle you eche one trusse vp your packes,
And take no thyng at all, or be content,
With suche rewarde as fortune hath you sent.
All thynges in this boke that ye shall rede,
Does as ye lyst, there shall no manne you bynde,
Them to beleue, as surely as your crede.
But notwithstandyng certes in my mynde,
I durst well swere, as true ye shall them fynde,
In euery poynt eche answere by and by,
As are the iudgementes of astronomye.

The Descripcion of RICHARD the thirde.

RICHARDE the third sonne, of whom we nowe entreate, was in witte and courage egall with either of them, in bodye and prowesse farre vnder them bothe, little of stature, ill fetured of limmes, croke backed, his left shoulder much higher than his right, hard fauoured of visage, and such as is in states called warlye, in other menne otherwise, he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth, euer frowarde. It is for trouth reported, that the duches his mother had so much a doe in her trauaile, that shee could not bee deliuered of hym uncutte: and that he came into the worlde with the feete forwarde, as menne bee borne outwarde, and (as the fame runneth) also not vntothed, whither menne of hatred reporte aboue the trouthe, or elles that nature chaunged her course in hys beginninge, whiche in the course of his lyfe many thinges vnnaturallye committed. None euill captaine was hee in the warre, as to whiche his disposicion was more metely then for peace. Sundrye victories hadde hee, and sommetime ouerthrowes, but neuer in defaulte as for his owne parsone, either of hardinesse or polytike order, free was hee called of dyspence, and sommewhat aboue hys power liberall, with large giftes hee get him vnstedfaste frendeshippe, for whiche hee was fain to pil and spoyle in other places, and get him stedfast hatred. Hee was close and secrete, a deepe dissimuler, lowlye of counteynaunce, arrogant of heart, outwardly coumpinable where he inwardely hated, not letting to kisse whome he thoughte to kyll: dispitious and cruell, not for euill will alway, but after for ambicion, and either for the suretie and encrease of his estate. Frende and foo was muche what indifferent, where his aduauntage grew, he spared no mans deathe, whose life withstoode his purpose. He slewe with his owne handes king Henry the sixt, being prisoner in the Tower, as menne constantly saye, and that without commaundement or knowledge of the king, whiche woulde vndoubtedly yf he had entended that thinge, haue appointed that boocherly office, to some other then his owne borne brother.

Somme wise menne also weene, that his drift couertly conuayde, lacked not in helping furth his brother of Clarence to his death: whiche hee resisted openly, howbeit somwhat (as menne deme) more faintly then he that wer hartley minded to his welth. And they that thus deme, thinke that he long time in king Edwardes life, forethought to be king in that case the king his brother (whose life hee looked that euil dyete shoulde shorten) shoulde happen to decease (as in dede he did) while his children wer yonge. And thei deme, that for thys intente he was gladde of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whose life must nedes haue hindered hym so entendynge, whither the same duke of Clarence hadde kepte him true to his nephew the yonge king, or enterprised to be kyng himself. But of al this pointe, is there no certaintie, and whoso diuineth vppon coniectures, maye as wel shote too farre as to short. Howbeit this haue I by credible informacion learned, that the selfe nighte in whiche kyng Edwarde died, one Mystlebrooke longe ere mornynge, came in greate haste to the house of one Pottyer dwellyng in Reddecrosse strete without Crepulgate: and when he was with hastye rappyng quickly letten in, hee shewed vnto Pottyer that kynge Edwarde was departed. By my trouthe manne quod Pottyer then wyll my mayster the duke of Gloucester bee kynge. What cause hee hadde soo to thynke harde it is to saye, whyther hee being toward hym, anye thynge knewe that hee suche thynge purposed, or otherwyse had anye inkelynge thereof: for hee was not likely to speake it of noughte.

But nowe to returne to the course of this hystorye, were it that the duke of Gloucester hadde of old fore-minded this conclusion, or was nowe at erste thereunto moued, and putte in hope by the occasion of the tender age of the younge princes, his nephues (as opportunitye and lykelyhoode of spede, putteth a manne in courage of that hee neuer entended) certayne is it that hee contriued theyr destruccion, with the vsurpacion of the regal dignitye vppon hymselfe. And for as muche as hee well wiste and holpe to mayntayn, a long continued grudge and hearte brennynge betwene the quenes kinred and the kinges blood eyther partye enuying others authoritye, he nowe thought that their deuision shoulde bee (as it was in dede) a fortherlye begynnynge to the pursuite of his intente, and a sure ground for the foundacion of al his building yf he might firste vnder the pretext of reuengynge of olde displeasure, abuse the anger and ygnoraunce of the tone partie, to the destruccion of the tother: and then wynne to this purpose as manye as he coulde: and those that coulde not be wonne, myght be loste ere they looked therefore. For of one thynge was hee certayne, that if his entente were perceiued, he shold soone haue made peace beetwene the bothe parties, with his owne bloude.

Kynge Edwarde in his life, albeit that this discencion beetwene hys frendes sommewhat yrked hym: yet in his good healthe he sommewhat the lesse regarded it, because hee thought whatsoeuer busines shoulde falle beetwene them, hymselfe should alwaye bee hable to rule bothe the parties.

But in his last sicknesse, when hee receiued his naturall strengthe soo sore enfebled, that hee dyspayred all recouerye, then hee consyderynge the youthe of his chyldren, albeit hee nothynge lesse mistrusted then that that happened, yet well forseynge that manye harmes myghte growe by theyr debate, whyle the youth of hys children shoulde lacke discrecion of themself and good counsayle of their frendes, of whiche either party shold counsayle for their owne commodity and rather by pleasaunte aduyse too wynne themselfe fauour, then by profitable aduertisement to do the children good, he called some of them before him that were at variaunce, and in especyall the lorde marques Dorsette the quenes sonne by her fyrste housebande, and Richarde the lord Hastynges, a noble man, than lorde chamberlayne agayne whome the quene specially grudged, for the great fauoure the kyng bare hym, and also for that shee thoughte hym secretlye familyer with the kynge in wanton coumpanye. Her kynred also bare hym sore, as well for that the kynge hadde made hym captayne of Calyce (which office the lorde Ryuers, brother to the quene, claimed of the kinges former promyse) as for diuerse other great giftes which he receyued, that they loked for. When these lordes with diuerse other of bothe the parties were comme in presence, the kynge liftinge vppe himselfe and vndersette with pillowes, as it is reported on this wyse sayd vnto them, My lordes, my dere kinsmenne and alies, in what plighte I lye you see, and I feele. By whiche the lesse whyle I looke to lyue with you, the more depelye am I moued to care in what case I leaue you, for such as I leauve you, suche bee my children lyke to fynde you. Whiche if they shoulde (that Godde forbydde fynde you at varyaunce, myght happe to fall them selfe at warre ere their discrecion woulde serue to sette you at peace. Ye se their youthe, of whiche I recken the onely suretie to reste in your concord. For it suffiseth not al you loue them, yf eche of you hate other. If they wer menne, your faithfulnesse happelye woulde suffise. But childehood must be maintained by mens authoritye, and slipper youth vnderpropped with elder counsayle, which neither they can haue, but ye geue it, nor ye geue it, yf ye gree not. For wher eche laboureth to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of eche of others parson, impugneth eche others counsayle, there must it nedes bee long ere anye good conclusion goe forwarde. And also while either partye laboureth to be chiefe, flattery shall haue more place then plaine and faithfull aduyse, of whyche muste needes ensure the euyll bringing vppe of the prynce, whose mynd in tender youth infect, shal redily fal to mischief and riot, and drawe down with this noble relme to ruine, but if grace turn him to wisdom, which if God send, then thei that by euill menes before pleased hym best, shal after fall farthest out of fauour, so that euer at length euill driftes dreue to nought, and good plain wayes prosper. Great variaunce hath ther long bene betwene you, not alway for great causes. Sometime a thing right wel intended, our misconstruccion turneth vnto worse or a smal displeasure done vs, eyther our owne affeccion or euil tongues agreueth. But this wote I well ye neuer had so great cause of hatred, as ye have of loue. That we be al men, that we be christen men, this shall I leave for prechers to tel you (and yet I wote nere whither any prechers wordes ought more to moue you, then his that is by and by gooying to the place that thei all preache of.) But this shal I desire you to remember, that the one parte of you is of my bloode, the other of myne alies, and eche of yow with other, eyther of kinred or affinitie, whiche spirytuall kynred of affynyty, if the sacramentes of Christes churche, beare that weyghte with vs that woulde Godde thei did, shoulde no lesse moue vs to charitye, then the respecte of fleshlye consanguinitye. Oure Lorde forbydde, that you loue together the worse, for the selfe cause that you ought to loue the better. And yet that happeneth. And no where fynde wee so deadlye debate as amonge them, whyche by nature and lawe moste oughte to agree together. Suche a pestilente serpente is ambicion and desyre of vaine glorye and souereintye, whiche amonge states where he once entreth crepeth foorth so farre, tyll with deuision and variaunce hee turneth all to mischiefe. First longing to be nexte the best, afterwarde egall with the beste, and at laste chiefe and aboue the beste. Of which immoderate appetite of woorship, and thereby of debate and dissencion what losse, what sorowe, what trouble hathe within these fewe yeares growen in this realme, I praye Godde as wel forgeate as wee wel remember.

Whiche thinges yf I coulde as well haue foresene, as I haue with my more payne then pleasure proued, by Goddes blessed Ladie (that was euer his othe) I woulde neuer haue won the courtesye of mennes knees, with the losse of soo many heades. But sithen thynges passed cannot be gaine called, muche oughte wee the more beware, by what occasion we haue taken soo greate hurt afore, that we eftesoones fall not in that occasion agayne. Nowe be those griefes passed, and all is (Godde be thanked) quiete, and likelie righte wel to prosper in wealthfull peace under youre coseyns my children, if Godde send them life and you loue. Of whiche twoo thinges, the lesse losse wer they by whome thoughe Godde dydde hys pleasure, yet shoulde the realme alway finde kinges and peraduenture as good kinges. But yf you among your selfe in a childes reygne fall at debate, many a good man shall perish and happely he to, and ye to, ere thys land finde peace again. Wherfore in these laste wordes that euer I looke to speake with you: I exhort you and require you al, for the loue that you haue euer borne to me, for the loue that I haue euer borne to you, for the loue that our Lord beareth to vs all, from this time forwarde, all grieues forgotten, eche of you loue other. Whiche I verelye truste you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, either Godde or your king, affinitie or kinred, this realme, your owne countrey, or your owne surety. And therewithal the king no longer enduring to sitte vp, laide him down on his right side, his face towarde them: and none was there present that coulde refrain from weping. But the lordes recomforting him with as good wordes as they could, and answering for the time as thei thought to stand with his pleasure, there in his presence (as by their wordes appered) eche forgaue other, and ioyned their hands together, when (as it after appeared by their dedes) their hearts wer far a sonder. As sone as the king was departed, the noble prince his sonne drew toward London, which at the time of his decease, kept his houshold at Ludlow in Wales. Which countrey being far of from the law and recourse to iustice, was begon to be farre oute of good wyll and waxen wild, robbers and riuers walking at libertie vncorrected. And for this encheason the prince was in the life of his father sente thither, to the ende that the authoritie of his presence should refraine euill disposed parsons fro the baldness of their former outerages, to the gouernaunce and ordering of this yong prince at his sending thyther, was there appointed Sir Anthony Woduille lord Riuers and brother unto the quene, a right honourable man, as valiaunte of hande as politike in counsayle. Adioyned wer there vnto him other of the same partie, and in effect euery one as he was nerest of kin vnto the quene, so was planted next about the prince. That drifte by the quene not unwisely deuised, whereby her bloode mighte of youth be rooted in the princes fauor, the duke of Gloucester turned vnto their destruccion, and upon that grounde set the foundacion of all his vnhappy building. For whom soeuer he perceiued, either at variance with them, or bearing himself their fauor, hee brake vnto them, som by mouth, som by writing or secret messengers, that it neyther was reason nor in any wise to be suffered, that the yong king their master and kinsmanne, shoode bee in the handes and custodye of his mothers kinred, sequestred in maner from theyr compani, and attendance, of which cueri one ought him as faithful seruice as they, and manye of them far more honorable part of kin then his mothers side: whose blood (quod he) sauing the kinges pleasure, was ful vnmetely to be matched with his: whiche nowe to be as who say remoued from the kyng, and the lesse noble to be left aboute him, is (quod he) neither honorable to hys magestie, nor vnto vs, and also to his grace no surety to haue the mightiest of his frendes from him, and vnto vs no little ieopardy, to suffer our welproued euil willers, to grow in ouergret authoritie with the prince in youth, namely which is lighte of beliefe and sone perswaded. Ye remember I trow king Edward himself, albeit he was a manne of age and of discrecion, yet was he in manye thynges ruled by the bende, more then stode either with his honour, or our profite, or with the commoditie of any manne els, except onely the immoderate aduauncement of them selfe. Whiche whither they sorer thristed after their owne weale, or our woe, it wer harde I wene to gesse. And if some folkes frendship had not holden better place with the king, then any respect of kinred, thei might peraduenture easily have be trapped and brought to confusion somme of vs ere this. Why not as easily as they haue done some other alreadye, as neere of his royal bloode as we. But our Lord hath wrought his wil, and thanke be to his grace that peril is paste. Howe be it as great is growing, yf wee suffer this yonge kyng in oure enemyes hande, whiche without his wyttyng, might abuse the name of his commaundements, to ani of our vndoing, which thyng God and good prouision forbyd. Of which good prouision none of vs hath any thing the lesse nede, for the late made attonemente, in whiche the kinges pleasure hadde more place then the parties willes. Nor none of vs I beleue is so vnwyse, ouersone to truste a newe frende made of an olde foe, or to think that an houerly kindnes, sodainely contract in one houre continued, yet scant a fortnight, shold be deper setled in their stomackes: then a long accustomed malice many yeres rooted.

With these wordes and wrytinges and suche other, the duke of Gloucester sone set a fyre, them that where of themself ethe to kindle, and in especiall twayne, Edwarde duke of Buckingham, and Richarde lorde Hastinges and chaumberlayn, both men of honour and of great power. The tone by longe succession from his ancestrie, the tother by his office and the kinges fauor. These two not bearing eche to other so muche loue, as hatred bothe vnto the quenes partie: in thys poynt accorded together wyth the duke of Gloucester, that they wolde vtterlye amoue fro the kinges companye, all his mothers frendes, vnder the name of their enemyes. Vpon this concluded, the duke of Gloucester vnderstandyng, that the lordes whiche at that tyme were aboute the kyng, entended to bryng him vppe to his coronacion, accoumpanied with suche power of theyr frendes, that it shoulde bee harde for hym to bryng his purpose to passe, without the gathering and great assemble of people and in maner of open warre, wherof the ende he wiste was doubtous, and in which the kyng being on their side, his part should haue the face and name of a rebellion: he secretly therefore by diuers meanes, caused the quene to be perswaded and brought in the mynd, that it neither wer nede, and also shold be ieopardous, the king to come vp strong. For where as nowe euery lorde loued other, and none other thing studyed vppon, but aboute the coronacion and honoure of the king: if the lordes of her kinred shold assemble in the kinges name muche people, thei should geue the lordes atwixte whome and them hadde bene sommetyme debate, to feare and suspecte, leste thei shoulde gather thys people, not for the kynges sauegarde whome no manne empugned, but for theyr destruccion, hauying more regarde to their olde variaunce, then their newe attonement. For whiche cause thei shoulde assemble on the other partie muche people agayne for their defence, whose power she wyste wel farre stretched. And thus should al the realme fall on a rore. And of al the hurte that therof should ensue, which was likely not to be litel, and the most harme there like to fal wher she lest would, al the worlde woulde put her and her kinred in the wyght, and say that thei had vnwysely and vntrewlye also, broken the amitie and peace that the kyng her husband so prudentelye made, betwene hys kinne and hers in his death bed, and whiche the other party faithfully obserued.

The quene being in this wise perswaded, suche woorde sent vnto her sonne, and vnto her brother being aboute the kynge, and ouer that the duke of Gloucester hymselfe and other lordes the chiefe of hys bende, wrote vnto the kynge soo reuerentlye, and to the queenes frendes, there soo louyngelye, that they nothynge earthelye mystrustynge, broughte the kynge vppe in greate haste, not in good spede, with a sober coumpanye. Nowe was the king in his waye to London gone, from Northampton, when these dukes of Gloucester and Buckyngham came thither. Where remained behynd, the lorde Ryuers the kynges vncle, entendyng on the morrowe to folow the kynge, and bee with hym at Stonye Stratforde miles thence, earely or hee departed. So was there made that nyghte muche frendely chere betwene these dukes and the lorde Riuers a greate while. But incontinente after that they were oppenlye with greate courtesy departed, and the lorde Riuers lodged, the dukes secretelye with a fewe of their moste priuye frendes, sette them downe in counsayle, wherin they spent a great parte of the nyght. And at their risinge in the dawyng of the day, thei sent about priuily to their seruantes in the innes and lodgynges about, geuinge them commaundemente to make them selfe shortely readye, for their lordes wer to horsebackward. Vppon whiche messages, manye of their folke were attendaunt, when manye of the lorde Riuers seruantes were vnreadye. Nowe hadde these dukes taken also into their custodye the kayes of the inne, that none shoulde passe foorth without theyr licence.

And ouer this in the hyghe waye towarde Stonye Stratforde where the kynge laye, they hadde beestowed certayne of theyr folke, that shoulde sende

backe agayne, and compell to retourne, anye manne that were gotten oute of Northampton toward Stonye Stratforde, tyll they should geue other lycence. For as muche as the dukes themselfe entended for the shewe of theire dylygence, to bee the fyrste that shoulde that daye attende vppon the kynges highnesse oute of that towne; thus bare they folke in hande. But when the lorde Ryuers vnderstode the gates closed, and the wayes on euerye side besette, neyther hys seruauntes nor hymselfe suffered to go oute, perceiuyng well so greate a thynge without his knowledge not begun for noughte, comparyng this maner present with this last nightes chere, in so few houres so gret a chaunge maruelouslye misliked. How be it sithe hee could not get awaye, and keep himselfe close, hee woulde not, leste he shoulde seeme to hyde himselfe for some secret feare of hys owne faulte, whereof he saw no such cause in hym self: he determined vppon the suretie of his own conscience, to goe boldelye to them, and inquire what thys matter myghte meane. Whome as soone as they sawe, they beganne to quarrell with hym, and saye, that hee intended to sette distaunce betweene the kynge and them, and to brynge them to confusion, but it shoulde not lye in hys power. And when hee beganne (as hee was a very well spoken manne) in goodly wise to excuse himself, they taryed not the ende of his aunswere, but shortely tooke him and putte him in warde, and that done, foorthwyth wente to horsebacke, and tooke the waye to Stonye Stratforde. Where they founde the kinge with his companie readye to leape on horsebacke, and departe forwarde, to leaue that lodging for them, because it was to streighte for bothe coumpanies. And as sone as they came in his presence, they lighte adowne with all their companie aboute them. To whome the duke of Buckingham saide, goe afore gentlemenne and yeomen, kepe your rowmes. And thus in goodly arraye, thei came to the kinge, and on theire knees in very humble wise, salued his grace; whiche receyued them in very ioyous and amiable maner, nothinge earthlye knowing nor mistrustinge as yet. But euen by and by in his presence, they piked a quarrell to the lorde Richarde Graye, the kynges other brother by his mother, sayinge that hee with the lorde marques his brother and the lorde Riuers his vncle, hadde coumpassed to rule the kinge and the realme, and to sette variaunce, among the states, and to subdewe and destroye the noble blood of the realm. Toward the accoumplishinge whereof, they sayde that the lorde Marques hadde entered into the Tower of London, and thence taken out the kinges treasor, and sent menne to the sea. All whiche thinge these dukes wiste well were done for good purposes and necessari by the whole counsaile at London, sauing that sommewhat thei must sai. Vnto whiche woordes, the king aunswered, what my brother Marques hath done I cannot saie. But in good faith I dare well aunswere for myne vncle Riuers and my brother here, that thei be innocent of any such matters. Ye my liege quod the duke of Buckingham thei haue kepte theire dealing in these matters farre fro the knowledge of your good grace. And foorthwith thei arrested the lord Richarde and Sir Thomas Waughan knighte, in the kinges presence, and broughte the king and all backe vnto Northampton, where the tooke agayne further counsaile. And there they sent awaie from the kinge whom it pleased them, and sette newe seruantes aboute him, such as lyked better them than him. At whiche dealinge hee wepte and was nothing contente, but it booted not. And at dyner the duke of Gloucester sente a dishe from his owne table to the lord Riuers, prayinge him to be of good chere, all should be well inough. And he thanked the duke, and prayed the messenger to beare it to his nephewe the lorde Richarde with the same message for his comfort, who he thought had more nede of coumfort, as one to whom such aduersitie was straunge. But himself had been al his dayes in vre therewith, and therefore coulde beare it the better. But for al this coumfortable courtesye of the duke of Gloucester he sent the lorde Riuers and the lorde Richarde with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the Northe countrey into diuers places to prison, and afterward al to Pomfrait, where they were in conclusion beheaded.

A letter written with a cole by SIR THOMAS MORE to hys doughter maistres MARGARET ROPER, within a whyle after he was a prisoner in the Tower.

MYNE own good doughter, our lorde be thanked I am in good helthe of bodye and in good quiet of minde: and of worldly thynges I no more desyer then I haue. I besech hym make you all mery in the hope of heauen. And such thynges as I somewhat longed to talke with you all, concerning the worlde to come, our Lorde put theim into your myndes, as I truste he dothe and better to by hys holy spirite: who blesse you and preserue you all. Written wyth a cole by your tender louing father, who in hys pore prayers forgetteth none of you all, nor your babes, nor your nurses, nor your good husbandes, nor your good husbandes shrewde wyues, nor your fathers shrewde wyfe neither, nor our other frendes. And thus fare ye hartely well for lacke of paper.

THOMAS MORE, knight.

Two short ballettes which Sir THOMAS MORE made for hys pastime while he was prisoner in the Tower of London.

LEWYS the lost louer.

EY flattering fortune, loke thou neuer so fayre,
Or neuer so plesantly begin to smile,
As though thou wouldst my ruine all repayre,
During my life thou shalt not me begile.
Trust shall I God, to entre in a while.
Hys hauen or heauen sure and vniforme
Euer after thy calme, loke I for a storme.

DAUY the dycer.

LONG was I lady Lucke your seruing man,
And now haue lost agayne all that I gat,
Wherfore whan I thinke on you nowe and than,
And in my mynde remember this and that,
Ye may not blame me though I beshrew your cat,
But in fayth I blesse you agayne a thousand times,
For lending me now some laysure to make rymes.

At the same time with Sir THOMAS MORE lived SKELTON, the poet laureate of HENRY VIII. from whose works it seems proper to insert a few stanzas, though he cannot be said to have attained great elegance of language.

The Prologue to the Bouge of Courte.

IN Autumpne when the sonne in vyrgyne
By radyante hete enryped hath our corne
Whan Luna full of mutabylyte
As Emperes the dyademe hath worne
Of our pole artyke, smylynge halfe in ascorne
At our foly, and our vnstedfastnesse
The time whan Mars to warre hym dyd dres.
I callynge to mynde the greate auctoryte
Of poetes olde, whiche full craftely
Vnder as couerte termes as coulde be
Can touche a trouth, and cloke subtylly
With fresshe vtteraunce full sentencyously
Dyuerse in style some spared not vyce to wryte
Some of mortalitie nobly did endyte
Whereby I rede, theyr renome and theyr fame
Maye neuer dye, but euermore endure
I was sore moued to a forse the same
But ignoraunce full soone dyd me dyscure
And shewed that in this arte I was not sure
For to illumine she sayd I was to dulle
Aduysynge me my penne awaye to pulle
And not to wryte, for he so wyll atteyne
Excedyng ferther than his connynge is
His heed maye be harde, but feble is brayne
Yet haue I knowen suche er this
But of reproche surely he maye not mys
That clymmeth hyer than he may fotinge haue
What and he slyde downe, who shall hym saue?
Thus vp and downe my mynde was drawen and cast
That I ne wyste what to do was beste
So sore enwered that I was at the laste
Enforsed to slepe, and for to take some reste
And to lye downe as soone as I my dreste
At Harwyche porte slumbrynge as I laye
In myne hostes house called powers keye.

Of the wits that flourished in the reign of HENRY VIII. none has been more frequently celebrated than the earl of SURRY; and this history would therefore have been imperfect without some specimens of his works, which yet it is not easy to distinguish from those of Sir THOMAS WYAT and others, with which they are confounded in the edition that has fallen into my hands. The three first are, I believe, SURRY's; the rest, being of the same age, are selected, some as examples of different measures, and one as the oldest composition which I have found in blank verse.

Descripcion of Spring, wherein eche thing renews, save only the lover.

THE soote season that bud, and bloom fourth bringes,
With grene hath cladde the hyll, and eke the vale,
The Nightingall with fethers new she singes;
The turtle to her mate hath told the tale:
Somer is come, for every spray now springes,
The hart hath hunge hys olde head on the pale,
The bucke in brake his winter coate he flynges;
The fishes flete with newe repayred scale:
The adder all 'er slough away she flynges,
The swift swallow pursueth the flyes smalle,
The busy bee her honey how she mynges;
Winter is worne that was the floures bale.
And thus I see among these pleasant thynges
Eche care decayes, and yet my sorrow sprynges.

Descripcion of the restless estate of a lover.

WHEN youth had led me half the race,
That Cupides scourge had made me runne:
I looked back to meet the place,
From whence my weary course begunne:
And then I saw howe my desyre
Misguiding me had led the waye.
Myne eyne to greedy of theyre hyre,
Had made me lose a better prey.
For when in sighes I spent the day,
And could not cloake my grief with game;
The boyling smoke dyd still bewray,
The present heat of secret flame:
And when salt teares do bayne my breast,
Where love his pleasant traynes hath sown,
Her beauty hath the fruytes opprest,
Ere that the buddes were spronge and blowne.
And when myne eyen dyd still pursue,
The flying chase of theyre request;
Theyre greedy looks did oft renew,
The hydden wounde within my breste.
When every loke these cheekes might stayne,
From dedly pale to glowing red;
By outward signes appeared playne,
To her for helpe my harte was fled.
But all to late Love learneth me,
To paynt all kynd of Colours new;
To blynd theyre eyes that else should see
My speckled chekes with Cupides hew.
And now the covert brest I clame,
That worshipt Cupide secretely;
And nourished hys sacred flame,
From whence no blairing sparks do flye.

Descripcion of the fickle Affections, Pangs, and Sleightes of Love.

SUCH wayward wayes hath Love, that most part in discord
Our willes do stand, whereby our hartes but seldom do accord:
Decyte is hys delighte, and to begyle and mocke
The simple hartes which he doth strike with froward divers stroke.
He causeth th' one to rage with golden burning darte,
And doth alay with Leaden cold, again the others harte,
Whose gleames of burning fyre and easy sparkes of flame,
In balance of unequal weyght he pondereth by ame
From easye ford where I myghte wade and pass full well,
He me withdrawes and doth me drive, into a depe dark hell:
And me witholdes where I am calde and offred place,
And willes me that my mortal foe I do beseke of Grace;
He lettes me to pursue a conquest welnere wonne
To follow where my paynes were lost, ere that my sute begunne.
So by this means I know how soon a hart may turne
From warre to peace, from truce to stryfe, and so agayne returne.
I know how to content myself in others lust,
Of little stuffe unto my self to weave a webbe of trust:
And how to hyde my harmes with sole dyssembling chere,
Whan in my face the painted thoughtes would outwardly appeare.
I know how that the bloud forsakes the face for dred,
And how by shame it staynes agayne the Chekes with flaming red:
I know under the Grene, the Serpent how he lurkes:
The hammer of the restless forge I wote eke how it workes.
I know and con by roate the tale that I woulde tell
But ofte the wordes cyme fourth awrye of him that loveth well.
I know in heate and colde the Lover how he shakes,
In synging howe he doth complayne, in sleeping how he wakes
To languish without ache, sickelesse for to consume,
A thousand thynges for to devise, resolvynge of his fume;
And though he lyste to see his Ladyes Grace full sore
Such pleasures as delyght his Eye, do not his helthe restore.
I know to seke the tracte of my desyred foe,
And fere to fynde that I do seek, but chiefly this I know,
That Lovers must transfourme into the thynge beloved,
And live (alas! who would believe?) with sprite from Lyfe removed.

I knowe in harty sighes and laughters of the spleene,
At once to chaunge my state, my will, and eke my colour clene,
I know how to deceyve my self wythe others helpe,
And how the Lyon chastised is, by beatyng of the whelpe.
In standynge nere the fyre, I know how that I frease;
Farre of I burne, in bothe I waste, and so my Lyfe I leese.
I know how Love doth rage upon a yeylding mynde,
How smalle a nete may take and mase a harte of gentle kynde:
Or else with seldom swete to season hepes of gall,
Revived with a glympse of Grace old sorrowes to let fall.
The hydden traynes I know, and secret snares of Love,
How soone a loke will prynte a thoughte that never may remove.
The slypper state I know, the sodein turnes from welthe
The doubtfull hope, the certaine wooe, and sure despaired helthe.

A praise of his ladie.

GEVE place you ladies and be gone,
Boast not your selves at all,
For here at hande approacheth one,
Whose face will stayne you all.
The vertue of her lively lookes
Excel the precious stone,
I wishe to have none other bookes
To reade or look upon.
In eche of her two christall eyes,
Smyleth a naked boy;
It woulde you all in heart suffise
To see that lampe of joye.
I think nature hath lost the moulde,
Where she her shape did take;
Or else I dnubte if nature coulde
So fayre a creature make.
She may be well comparde
Unto the Phenix kinde,
Whose like was never seene nor heard,
That any man can fynde.
In lyfe she is Diana chast
In trouth Penelopey,
In woord and eke in dede stedfast;
What will you more we say:
If all the world were sought so farre,
Who could finde suche a wight,
Her beauty twinkleth lyke a starre
Within the frosty night.

The Lover refused of his love, embraceth vertue.

MY youthfull yeares are past,
My joyfull dayes are gone,
My lyfe it may not last,
My grave and I am one.
My myrth and joyes are fled,
And I a Man in wo,
Desirous to be ded,
My mischiefe to forgo.
I burne and am a colde,
I freese amyddes the fyer,
I see she doth witholde
That is my honest desyre.
I see my helpe at hande,
I see my lyfe also,
I see where she doth stande
That is my deadly fo.
I see how she doth see,
And yet she will be blynde,
I see in helpyng me,
She sekes and wil not fynde.
I see how she doth wrye,
When I begynne to mone,
I see when I come nye,
How fayne she would be gone.
I see what wil ye more,
She will me gladly kill,
And you shall see therfore
That she shall have her will.
I cannot live with stones,
It is too hard a foode,
I wil be dead at ones
To do my Lady good.

The death of ZOROAS, an Egiptian astronomer, in the first fight that Alexander had with the Persians.

NOW clattring armes, now raging broyls of warre,
Gan passe the noys of dredfull trumpets clang,
Shrowded with shafts, the heaven with cloude of dartes,
Covered the ayre. Against full fatted bulles,
As forceth kyndled yre the lyons keene,
Whose greedy guts the gnawing hunger prickes;
So Macedons against the Persians fare,

Now corpses hyde the purpurde soyle with blood:
Large slaughter on eche side, but Perses more,
Moyst fieldes bebled, theyr heartes and numbers bate
Fainted while they gave backe, and fall to flighte.
The litening Macedon by swordes, by gleaves,
By bandes and troupes of footmen, with his garde,
Speedes to Dary, but hym his merest kyn,
Oxate preserves with horsemen on a plumpe
Before his carr, that none his charge should give.
Here grunts, here groans, eche where strong youth is spent:
Shaking her bloudy hands, Bellone among
The Perses soweth all kind of cruel death:
With throte yrent he roares, he lyeth along
His entrailes with a launce through gryded quyte,
Hym smytes the club, hym woundes farre stryking bowe,
And hym the sling, and him the shining sword;
He dyeth, he is all dead, he pantes, he restes.
Right over stoode in snowwhite armour brave,
The Memphite Zoroas, a cunnyng clarke,
To whom the heaven lay open as his booke;
And in celestiall bodies he could tell
The moving meeting light, aspect eclips,
And influence, and constellations all;
What earthly chaunces would betyde, what yere,
Of plenty storde, what singe forewarned death,
How winter gendreth snow, what temperature
In the prime tyde doth season well the soyle,
Why summer burnes, why autumne hath ripe grapes,
Whither the circle quadrate may become,
Whether our tunes heavens harmony can yelde
Of four begyns among themselves how great
Proportion is; what sway the erring lightes
Doth send in course gayne that fyrst movyng heaven;
What grees one from another distance be,
What starr doth lett the hurtfull fyre to rage,
Or him more mylde what opposition makes,
What fyre doth qualifye Mavorses fyre,
What house eche one doth seeke, what plannett raignes
Within this heaven sphere, nor that small thynges
I speake, whole heaven he closeth in his brest.
This sage then in the starres hath spyed the fates
Threatned him death without delay, and, sith,
He saw he could not fatall order chaunge,
Foreward he prest in battayle, that he might
Mete with the rulers of the Macedons,
Of his right hand desirous to be slain,
The bouldest borne, and worthiest in the feilde;
And as a wight, now wery of his lyfe,
And seking death, in fyrst front of his rage,
Comes desperately to Alexanders face,
At him with dartes one after other throwes,
With recklesse wordes and clamour him provokes,
And sayth, Nectanaks bastard shamefull stayne
Of mothers bed, why losest thou thy strokes,
Cowardes among, Turn thee to me, in case
Manhood there be so much left in thy heart,
Come fight with me, that on my helmet weare
Apollo's laurell both for learninges laude,
And eke for martiall praise, that in my shielde
The seven fold Sophie of Minerve contein,
A match more mete, Syr King, then any here.
The noble prince amoved takes ruth upon
The wilfull wight, and with soft words ayen,
O monstrous man (quoth he) what so thou art,
I pray thee live, ne do not with thy death
This lodge of Lore, the Muses mansion marre;
That treasure house this hand shall never spoyle,
My sword shall neuer bruise that skilfull brayne,
Long gather'd heapes of science sone to spill;
O how fayre fruites may you to mortall men
From Wisdoms garden give; how many may
By you the wiser and the better prove:
What error, what mad moode, what frenzy thee
Perswades to be downe, sent to depe Averne,
Where no artes flourish, nor no knowledge vailes
For all these sawes. When thus the Sovereign said,
Alighted Zoroas with sword unsheathed,
The careless king there smoate above the greve,
At th' opening of his quishes wounded him,
So that the blood down trailed on the ground;
The Macedon perceiving hurt, gan gnashe,
But yet his mynde he bent in any wise
Hym to forbeare, sett spurrs upon his stede,
And turnde away, lest anger of his smarte
Should cause revenger hand deale balefull blowes.
But of the Macedonian chieftaines knights,
One Meleager could not bear this sight,
But ran upon the said Egyptian rude,
And cutt him in bothe knees: he fell to ground,
Wherewith a whole rout came of souldiours sterne,
And all in pieces hewed the sely seg,
But happely the soule fled to the starres,
Where, under him, he hath full sight of all,
Whereat he gazed here with reaching looke.
The Persians waild such sapience to forgoe,
The very fone the Macedonians wisht
He would have lived, king Alexander selfe
Demde him a man unmete to dye at all;
Who wonne like praise for conquest of his Yre

As for stoute men in field that day subdued,
Who princes taught how to discerne a man,
That in his head so rare a jewel beares,
But over all those same Camenes, those same,
Divine Carmenes, whose honour he procurde,
As tender parent doth his daughters weale,
Lamented, and for thankes, all that they can,
Do cherish hym deceast, and sett him free,
From dark oblivion of devouring death.

BARCLAY wrote about 1550; his chief work is the SHIP OF FOOLES, of which the following extract will shew his style.

Of Mockers and Scorners, and false Accusers.

O HEARTLESS fooles, haste here to our doctrine,
Leaue off the wayes of your enormitie,
Enforce you to my preceptes to encline,
For here shall I shewe you good and veritie:
Encline, and ye finde shall great prosperitie,
Ensuing the doctrine of our fathers olde,
And godly lawes in valour worth great golde.
Who that will follow the graces manyfolde
Which are in vertue, shall find auauncement:
Wherfore ye fooles, that in your sinne are bolde,
Ensue ye wisdome, and leaue your lewde intent,
Wisdome is the way of men most excellent:
Therfore haue done, and shortly spede your pace,
To quaynt your self and company with grace.
Learne what is vertue, therin is great solace,
Learne what is truth, sadnes and prudence,
Let grutche be gone, and grauitie purchase,
Forsake your folly and inconuenience,
Cease to be fooles, and ay to sue offence,
Followe ye vertue, chiefe roote of godlynes,
For it and wisedome is ground of clenlynes.
Wisedome and vertue two thinges are doubtles,
Whiche man endueth with honour speciall,
But suche heartes as slepe in foolishnes
Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all:
But in this little barge in principall
All foolish mockers I purpose to repreue,
Clawe he his backe that feeleth itche or greue.
Mockers and scorners that are harde of beleue,
With a rough combe here will I clawe and grate,
To proue if they will from their vice remeue,
And leaue their folly, which causeth great debate:
Suche caytiues spare neyther poore man nor estate,
And where their selfe are most worthy derision,
Other men to scorne is all their most condition.
Yet are mo fooles of this abusion,
Whiche of wise men despiseth the doctrine,
With mowes, mockes, scorne, and collusion,
Rewarding rebukes for their good discipline:
Shewe to suche wisdome, yet shall they not encline
Unto the same, but set nothing therby,
But mocke thy doctrine, still or openly.
So in the worlde it appeareth commonly,
That who that will a foole rebuke or blame,
A mocke or mowe shall he haue by and by:
Thus in derision haue fooles their speciall game.
Correct a wise man that would eschue ill name,
And fayne woulde learne, and his lewde life amende,
And to thy wordes he gladly shall intende.
If by misfortune a rightwise man offende,
He gladly suffereth a iuste correction,
And him that him teacheth taketh for his frende,
Him selfe putting mekely unto subiection,
Folowing his preceptes and good direction:
But yf that one a foole rebuke or blame,
He shall his teacher hate, slaunder and diffame.
Howbeit his wordes oft turne to his own shame,
And his owne dartes retourne to him agayne,
And so is he sore wounded with the same,
And in wo endeth, great misery and payne.
It also proued full often is certayne,
That they that on mockers alway their mindes cast,
Shall of all other be mocked at the last.
He that goeth right, stedfast, sure, and fast,
May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame,
And he that is white may well his scornes cast
Agaynst a man of Inde: but no man ought to blame
Anothers vice, while he vseth the same.
But who that of sinne is cleane in deede and thought,
May him well scorne whose liuing is starke nought.
The scornes of Naball full dere should haue been bought,
If Abigayl his wife discrete and sage,
Had not by kindnes right crafty meanes sought,
The wrath of Dauid to temper and asswage.
Hath not two beares in their fury and rage
Two and fortie children rent and torne,
For they the prophet Helyseus did scorne.
So might they curse the time that they were borne,
For their mocking of this prophete diuine:
So many other of this sort often mourne
For their lewde mockes, and fall into ruine.
Thus it is foly for wise men to incline,
To this lewde flocke of fooles, for see thou shall
Them moste scorning that are most bad of all.

The Lenuoy of Barclay to the fooles.

YE mocking fooles that in scorne set your ioy,
Proudly despising [illegible] punished:
Take ye exaumple by Cham the sonne of Noy,
Which laughed his fathir vnto derision,
Which him after cursed for his transgression,
And made him seruaunt to all his lyne and stocke.
So shall ye caytifs at the conclusion,
Since ye are nought, and other scorne and mocke.

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. WILSON, a man celebrated for the politeness of his style, and the extent of his knowledge: what was the state of our language in his time, the following may be of use to show.

PRONUNCIATION is an apte orderinge both of the voyce. countenaunce, and all the whole bodye, accordynge to the worthines of suche woordes and matter as by speache are declared. The vse hereof is suche for anye one that liketh to haue prayse for tellynge his tale in open assemblie, that hauing a good tongue, and a comelye counte naunce, he shal be thought to passe all other that haue the like vtteraunce: thoughe they haue much better learning. The tonge geueth a certayne grace to euerye matter, and beautifieth the cause in like maner, as a swete soundynge lute muche setteth forthe a meanne deuised ballade. Or as the sounde of a good instrumente styrreth the hearers, and moueth much delite, so a cleare soundyng voice comforteth muche our deintie eares with muche swete melodie, and causeth vs to allowe the matter rather for the reporters sake, then the reporter for the matters sake. Demosthenes therfore, that famouse oratour, beyng asked what was the chiefest point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praise to Pronunciation; being demaunded, what was the seconde, and the thirde, he still made aunswere, Pronunciation, and would make none other aunswere, till they lefte askyng, declaryng hereby that arte without vtteraunce can dooe nothyng, vtteraunce without arte con dooe right muche. And no doubte that man is in outwarde appearaunce half a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue, and a comely gesture of his body. Æschines lykwyse beyng bannished his countrie through Demosthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demosthenes aunswere thereunto, by force whereof he was bannished, and all they marueiled muche at the excellencie of the same: then (q d Æschines) you would have marueiled muche more if you had heard hymselfe speak it. Thus beyng cast in miserie and bannished for euer, he could not but geue suche greate reporte of his deadly and mortal ennemy.

Thus have I deduced the ENGLISH language from the age of ALFRED to that of ELIZABETH; in some parts imperfectly for want of materials; but I hope, at least, in such a manner that its progress may be easily traced, and the gradations observed, by which it advanced from its first rudeness to its present elegance.

A

ENGLISH TONGUE.

GRAMMAR, which is the art of using words properly, comprises four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.

In this division and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common grammarians, without enquiring whether a fitter distribution might not be found. Experience has long shown this method to be so distinct as to obviate confusion, and so comprehensive as to prevent any inconvenient omissions. I likewise use the terms already received, and already understood, though perhaps others more proper might sometimes be invented. Sylburgius, and other innovators, whose new terms have sunk their learning into neglect, have left sufficient warning against the trifling ambition of teaching arts in a new language.

ORTHOGRAPHY is the art of combining letters into syllables, and syllables into words. It therefore teaches previously the form and sound of letters.

The letters of the English language are,

To these may be added certain combinations of letters frequently used in printing; as ct, ſt, fl, ſl, ſb, ſk, ff, ſſ, fi, ffi, fi, ffl, ffl, and &, or and per see, and ct, ſt, ſl, ſl, ſb, ſb, ſk, ſſ, ſſ, ſi, ffi, ſi, ffi, ſſi, ffl, ſſl, & ct, ct, ſt, fl, ſl, ff, ff, ct, fi, ſb, ffl, ffl, ffi, ct.

Our letters are commonly reckoned twenty-four, because anciently i and j, as well as u and v, were expressed by the same character; but as those letters, which had always different powers, have now different forms, our alphabet may be properly said to consist of twenty-six letters.

None of the small consonants have a double form, except ſ, s; of which ſ is used at the beginning and middle, and s at the end.

Vowels are five, a, e, i, o, u.

Such is the number generally received; but for i it is the practice to write y in the ends of words, as thy, holy; before i, as from die, dying; from beautify, beautifying; in the words says, days, eyes; and in words derived from the Greek, and written originally with υ, as system, σύστημα; sympathy, συμπάθεια.

For u we often write w after a vowel, to make adiphthong; as raw, grew, view, vow, flowing, lowness.

The sounds of all the letters are various.

In treating on the letters, I shall not, like some other grammarians, enquire into the original of their form, as an antiquarian; nor into their formation and prolation by the organs of speech, as a mechanick, anatomist, or physiologist; nor into the properties and gradation of sounds, or the elegance or harshness of particular combinations, as a writer of universal and transcendental grammar. I consider the English alphabet only as it is English; and even in this narrow disquisition, I follow the example of former grammarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, because by writing in English I suppose my reader already acquainted with the English language, and consequently able to pronounce the letters, of which I teach the pronunciation; and because of sounds in general it may be observed, that words are unable to describe them. An account therefore of the primitive and simple letters is useless almost alike to those who know their sound, and those who know it not.

Of VOWELS.

A.

A has three sounds, the slender, open and broad.

A slender is found in most words, as face, mane; and in words ending in ation, as creation, salvation, generation.

The a slender is the proper English a, called very justly by Erpenius, in his Arabick Grammar, a Anglicum cum e mistum, as having a middle sound between the open a and the e. The French have a simila. sound in the word pais, and in their e masculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly resembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, glass.

A broad resembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as fault, mault; and we still say fault, vault. This was probably the Saxon sound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the rustick pronunciation; as maun for man, haund for hand.

The short a approaches to the a open, as grass.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always slender, as graze, fame.

A forms a diphthongonly with i or y, and u or w. Ai or ay, as in plain, wain, gay, clay, has only the sound of the long and slender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, wane.

Au or aw has the sound of the German a, as raw, naughty.

Ae is sometimes found in Latin words not completely naturalised or assimilated, but is no Englishdiphthong; and is more properly expressed by single e, as Cesar, Eneas.

E.

E is the letter which occurs most frequently in the English language.

E is long, as in scēne; or short, as in cĕllar, sĕparate, cĕlebrate, mĕn, thĕn.

It is always short before a double consonant, or two consonants, as in ebb, pĕrplex, rĕbel, rĕbuke, mĕdler, rĕptile, sĕrpent, cĕllar, cĕssation, blĕssing, fĕll, fĕlling, dĕlf.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monosyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names as Penelope, Phœbe, Derbe; being used to modify the foregoing consonant, as since, once, hedge, chĕrge; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as băn, bāne; căn, cāne; pĭn, pīne; tŭn, tūne; rŏb, rōbe; pŏp, pōpe; fĭr, fīre; cŭr, cūre; tŭb, tūbe.

Almost all words which now terminate in consonants ended anciently in e, as yeer, yeere; wildnes, wildnese; which e probably had the force of the French e feminine, and constituted a syllable with its associate consonant; for, in old editions, words are sometimes divided thus, clea-re, fel-le, knowled-ge. This e was perhaps for a time vocal or silent in poetry, as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden in his Remains calls it the silent e.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel as glŏve, lĭve, gĭve.

It has sometimes in the end of words a sound obscure, and scarcely perceptible, as open, shapen, shotten, thistle, participle, lucre.

This faintness of sound is found when e separates a mute from a liquid, as in rotten; or follows a mute and liquid, as in cattle.

E forms a diphthong with a, as near; with i, as deign, receive; and with u or w, as new, flew.

Ea sounds like e long, as mean; or like ee, as dear, clear, near.

Ei is sounded like e long, as seize, perceiving.

Eu sounds as u long and soft.

E, a, u, are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the sound of u.

E may be said to form a dipthong by reduplication, as agree, sleeping.

Eo is found in yeoman, where it is sounded as e short; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a sound, long, as fīne; and short as fĭn.

That is eminently observable in i, which may be likewise remarked in other letters, that the short sound is not the long sound contracted, but a sound wholly different.

The long sound in monosyllables is always marked by the e final, as thĭn, thīne.

I is often sounded before r as a short u; as flirt, first, shirt.

It forms a diphthong only with e, as field, shield, which is sounded as the double ee; except friend, which is sounded as frĕnd.

I is joined with eu in lieu, and ew in view; which tripthongs are sounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bōne, ōbedient, cōrroding; or short, as blŏck, knŏck, ŏblique, lŏll.

Women is pronounced wimen.

The short o has sometimes the sound of a close u, as son, come.

O coalesces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the sound of o long.

O is united to e in some words derived from Greek, as economy, but oe being not an English diphthong they are better written as they are sounded, with only e, economy.

With i, as oil, soil, moil, noisome.

This coalition of letters seems to unite the sounds of the two letters as far as two sounds can be united without being destroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With o, as boot, hoot, cooler; oo has the sound of the Italian u.

With u or w, as our, power, flower; but in some words has only the sound of o long, as in soul, bowl, sow, grow. These different sounds are used to distinguish different significations, as bow, an instrument for shooting; bow, a depression of the head: sow, the she of a boar; sow, to scatter seed: bowl, an orbicular body; bowl, a wooden vessel.

Ou is sometimes pronounced like o soft, as court; sometimes like o short, as cough; sometimes like u close, as could; or u open, as rough, tough; which use only can teach.

Ou is frequently used in the last syllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made English; as honour, labour, favour, from honor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have ejected the u, without considering that the last syllable gives the sound neither of or nor ur, but a sound between them, if not compounded of both; besides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honeur, faveur.

U.

U is long in ūse, confūsion; or short, as ŭs, concŭssion.

It coalesces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in these combinations the force of the w, as quaff, quest, quit, quite, languish; sometimes in ui the i loses its sound, as in juice. It is sometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, guest, guise, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no sound.

Ue is sometimes mute at the end of a word, in imitation of the French, as prorogue, synagogue, plague, vague, harangue.

Y.

Y is a vowel, which, as Quintilian observes of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It supplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i, as dying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as destroy, destroyer; betray, betrayed, betrayer; pray, prayer; say, sayer; day, days.

Y being the Saxon vowel y, which was commonly used where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

General Rules.

A vowel in the beginning or middle syllable, before two consonants, is commonly short, as ŏppŏrtunity.

In monosyllables a single vowel before a single consonant is short, as stăg, frŏg.

Many is pronounced as if it were wrote manny.

Of CONSONANTS.

B.

B has one unvaried sound, such as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, subtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is used before l and r, as black, brown.

C.

C has before e and i the sound of s; as sincerely, centrick, century, circular, cistern, city, siccity: before a, o, and u, it sounds like k, as calm, concavity, copper, incorporate, curiosity, concupiscence.

C might be omitted in the language without loss, since one of its sounds might be supplied by s, and the other by k, but that it preserves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captive from captivus.

Ch has a sound which is analysed into tsh, as church, chin, crutch. It is the same sound which the Italians give to the c simple before i and e, as citta, cerro.

Ch is sounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymist, scheme, choler. Arch is commonly sounded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the English sound of ch before a consonant, as archbishop.

Ch, in some French words not yet assimilated, sounds like sh, as machine, chaise.

C, having no determinate sound, according to English orthography, never ends a word; therefore we write stick, block, which were originally sticke, blocke, in such words. C is now mute.

It is used before l and r, as cleck, cross.

D.

D is uniform in its sound; as death, diligent.

It is used before r, as draw, dross; and w, as dwell

F.

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, is numbered by the grammarians among the semi-vowels; yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiously sounded before a liquid, as flask, fly, freckle. It has an unvariable sound, except that of is sometimes spoken nearly as ov.

G.

G has two sounds, one hard, as in gay, go, gun; the other soft, as in gem, giant.

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, snug, song, frog.

Before e and i the sound is uncertain.

G before e is soft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, geese, get, gewgaw, and derivatives from words ending in g, as singing, stronger, and generally before er at the end of words, as finger.

G is mute before n, as gnash, sign, foreign.

G before i is hard, as give, except in giant, gigantick, gibbet, gibe, giblets, Giles, gill, gilliflower, gin, ginger, gingle, to which may be added Egypt, and gypsey.

Gh, in the beginning of a word, has the sound of the hard g, as ghostly; in the middle and sometimes at the end, it is quite silent, as though, right, sought, spoken tho', rite, soute.

It has often at the end the sound of f, as laugh, whence laughter retains the same sound in the middle; cough, trough, sough, tough, enough, slough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a consonant, deeply guttural, which is still continued among the Scotch.

G is used before h, l, and r.

H.

H is a note of aspiration, and shows that the following vowel must be pronounced with a strong emission of breath, as hat, horse.

It seldom begins any but the first syllable, in which it is always sounded with a full breath, except in heir, herb, holster, honour, humble, honest, humour, and their derivatives.

It sometimes begins middle or final syllables in words compounded, as blockhead; or derived from the Latin, as comprehended.

J.

J consonant sounds uniformly like the soft g, and is therefore a letter useless, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jester, jocund, juice.

K.

K has the sound of hard c, and is used before e and i, where, according to English analogy, c would be soft, as kept, king, skirt, skeptick, for so it should be written, not sceptick, because sc is sounded like s, as in scene.

It is used before n, as knell, knot, but totally loses its sound in modern pronunciation.

K is never doubled; but c is used before it to shorten the vowel by a double consonant, as căckle, pickle.

L.

L has in English the same liquid sound as in other languages.

The custom is to double the l at the end of monosyllables, as kill, will, full. These words were originally written kille, wille, fulle, and when the e first grew silent, and afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is sometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, calves, could, would, should, psalm, talk, salmon, falcon.

The Saxons who delighted in guttural sounds, sometimes aspirated the l at the beginning of words, as hlaF a loaf, or bread, hlaford a lord, but this pronunciation is now disused.

l.e at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almost mute, as table, shuttle.

M.

M has always the same sound, as murmur, monumental.

N.

N has always the same sound, as [illegible], manners.

N is sometimes mute after m, as [illegible], condemn, hymn.

P.

P has always the same sound, which the Welsh and Germans confound with B.

P is sometimes mute, as in psalm, and between m and t, as tempt.

Ph is used for f in words derived from the Greek, as philosopher, philanthropy, Philip.

Q.

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a sound which our Saxon ancestors well expressed by cp, cw, as quadrant, queen, equestrian, quilt, enquiry, quire, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is sometimes sounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, risque, chequer.

R.

R has the same rough snarling sound as in other tongues.

The Saxons used often to put h before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rh is used in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrhine, catarrhous, rheum, rheumatick, rhyme.

Re at the end of some words derived from the Latin or French, is pronounced like a weak er, as theatre, sepulchre.

S.

S has a hissing sound, as sibilation, sister.

A single s seldom ends any word, except in the third person of verbs, as loves, grows; and the plurals of nouns, as trees, bushes, distresses; the pronouns this, his, ours, yours, us, the adverb thus, and words derived from Latin, as rebus, surplus, the close being always either in se, as house, horse, or in ss, as grass, dress, bliss, less, anciently grasse, dresse.

S single, at the end of words, has a grosser sound, like that of z, as trees, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, surplus.

It sounds like z before ion, if a vowel goes before, as intrusion; and like s, if it follows a consonant, as conversion.

It sounds like z before e mute, as refuse, and before y final, as rosy; and in those words bosom, desire, wisdom, prison, prisoner, présent, present, damsel, casement.

It is the peculiar quality of s that it may be sounded before all consonants, except x and z, in which s is comprised, x being only ks, and z a hard or gross s This s is therefore termed by grammarians suæ potestatis litera, the reason of which the learned Dr. Clarke erroneously supposed to be, that in some words it might be doubled at pleasure. Thus we find in several languages

Σϛίνυμι, scatter, sdegno, sarucciolo, sfavillare, σφίγξ, sgombrare, sgranare, shake, slumber, smell, snipe, space, splendour, spring, squeeze, shrew, step, strength, stramen, stupe, sventura, swell.

T.

T has its customary sound, as take, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the sound of si, as salvation, except an s goes before, as question; excepting likewise derivatives from words ending in ty, as mighty, mightier.

Th has two sounds; the one soft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The sound is soft in these words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds; and in that, these, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this, those, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is softened at the end of a word, an e silent must be added, as breath, breathe; cloth, clothe.

V.

V has a sound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f, in the Islandick alphabet, v is only distinguished by a diacritical point.

W.

W, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, some grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a consonant; and not rather, as it is called, a double u or ou, as water may be resolved into ouater; but letters of the same sound are always reckoned consonants in other alphabets: and it may be observed, that w follows a vowel with any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as frosty winter.

Wh has a sound accounted peculiar to the English, which the Saxons better expressed by hp, hw, as what, whence, whiting; in whore only, and sometimes in wholesome, wh is sounded like a simple h.

X.

X begins no English word; it has the sound of ks, as axle, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a consonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either a vowel or diphthong, is a consonant, ye, young. It is thought by some to be in all cases a vowel. But it may be observed of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as rosy, youth.

The chief argument by which w and y appear to be always vowels is, that the sounds which they are supposed to have as consonants, cannot be uttered after a vowel, like that of all other consonants: thus we say, tu, ut; do, odd; but in wed, dew, the two sounds of w have no resemblance to each other.

Z.

Z begins no word originally English; it has the sound, as its name izzard or s hard expresses, of an s uttered with closer compression of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, froze.

In orthography I have supposed orthoepy, or just utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expressing certain sounds by proper characters. I have therefore observed in what words any of the letters are mute.

Most of the writers of English grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwise than they are written, and seem not sufficiently to have considered, that of English, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one cursory and colloquial, the other regular and solemn. The cursory pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unskilfulness, or affectation. The solemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always less remote from the orthography, and less liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the cursory speech of those with whom they happen to converse; and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often established the jargon of the lowest of the people as the model of speech.

For pronunciation, the best general rule is to consider those of the most elegant speakers who deviate least from the written words.

There have been many schemes offered for the emendation and settlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earliest writers in rude ages, was at first very various and uncertain, and is yet sufficiently irregular. Of these reformers some have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without considering that this is to measure by a shadow, to take that for a model or standard which is changing while they apply it. Others, less absurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelihood of success, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of sounds, that every sound may have its own character, and every character a single sound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a synod of grammarians upon principles of science. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books useless? or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confusion and perplexity of such an alteration?

Some of these schemes I shall however exhibit, which may be used according to the diversities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or terrour to innovators.

One of the first who proposed a scheme of regular orthography, was Sir Thomas Smith, secretary of state to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and much practised in grammatical disquisitions. Had he written the following lines according to his scheme, they would have appeared thus:

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
The glory of the priesthood, and the shame,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
The glory of the priesthood, and the shame,
Stemmd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gill, the celebrated master of St. Paul's school in London; which I cannot represent exactly for want of types, but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in use, so as to make it understood, exhibiting two stanzas of Spenser in the reformed orthography.

Spenser, book iii. canto 5.

Untnankful wretch, said he, is this the meed,
With which her sovereign mercy thou dost quite?
Thy life she saved by her gracious deed;
But thou dost ween with villainous despight,
To blot her honour, and her heav'nly light.
Die, rather die, than so disloyally
Deem of her high desert, or seem so light.
Fair death it is to shun more shame; then die.
Die, rather die, than ever love disloyally.
But if to love disloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her, that from deathes door
Me brought? ah! far be such reproach from me.
What can I less do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot restore?
Die, rather die, and dying do her serve,
Dying her serve, and living her adore.
Thy life she gave, thy life she doth deserve;
Die, rather die, than ever from her service swerve.

Vnθankful wrεθ, said hj, iz θis θe mjd,
Wiθ wiɔ hεr sovrain mεrsi θou dust qujt?
Di ljf rj saɯd bj hεr grasius djd;
But θou dust wen wiθ vilsnus dispjt.
Tu blot hεr honor, and hεr hevnlj liht
Dj, raθer dj, θen so disloialj
Djm of hεr hih dεzert, or sjm so liht,
Fair deθ it iz to run mεr rãm; θen dj,
Dj, raθer dj, θen ever luv disloialj.
But if tu luv disloialj it bj,
Sal I θen hãt hεr θat from daθez dεr
Mj brouht? ah! far bj suɔ reproɔ from mj,
Wat kan I les du θen hεr luv θerfεr,

Djiŋ hεr sεrv, and liviŋ hεr adεr.
Dj ljf rj gãv, θj ljf ri duh dεzerv;
Dj, raθεr dj, θen ever from hεr servis swerv

Dr. Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an understanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He seems to have been more sanguine than his predecessors, for he printed his book according to his own scheme; which the following specimen will make easily understood.

But whensoever you have occasion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to stand upon your guard, than to trust to their gentleness. For the safeguard of your face, which they have most mind unto, provide a pursehood, made of coarse boultering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more safety is to be lined against the eminent parts with woollen cloth. First cut a piece about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being sowed in his place, join unto it two short pieces of the same breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the cheeks, and then set another piece about the breadth of a shilling, against the top of the nose. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may serve, though it be in the heat of the day.

Bet pensoëver you hav' occasion to trubble θeir patienc' or to coom among θem beeing trubled, it is better to stand upon your gard, θan to trust to θeir gentlenes. For θe saf gard of your fac', piɔ θey hav' most mind' unto, provid' a pursehood, mad' of coorse boultering, to bee drawn and knit about your collar, piɔ for mor' saf'ty is to bee lined against θ' eminent parts wit woollen cloτ. First cut a peec' about an inɔ and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reaɔ round by θe temples and for'head, from one ear to θe oθer; piɔ beeing sowed in his plac', join unto it two port peeces of the same breadτ under θe eys, for the balls of θe cheeks, and then set an oθer peec' against θe breadτ of a filling against the top o θe nose. At oθer tim's, pen θey ar' not angered, a little piec' half a quarter broad, to cover θe eys and parts about them, may serve, θouɣ it be in the heat of θe day. Butler on the Nature and Properties of Bees, 1634

In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography; as appears, among other books, in such editions of the works of Milton as were published by himself. Of these reformers, every man had his own scheme; but they agreed in one general design of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting such as they thought superfluous. Some of them would have written these lines thus:

All the erth
Shall then be paradis, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier dais.

Bishop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philosophical language, proposed, without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography; by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus:

Yur Fådher hwitsh art in héven halloed bi dhyi nåm, dhyi cingdym cym, dhy will bi dyn in erth as it is in héven, &c.

We have since had no general reformers; but some ingenious men have endeavoured to deserve well of their country, by writing honār and labor for honour and labour, red for read, in the preter-tense, sās for says, repete for repeat, explane for explain, or declame for declaim. Of these it may be said, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm; both because they have innovated little, and because few have followed them.

The English language has properly no dialects; the style of writers has no professed diversity in the use of words, or of their flexions, and terminations, nor differs but by different degrees of skill or care. The oral diction is uniform in no spacious country, but has less variation in England than in most other nations of equal extent. The language of the northern counties retains many words now out of use, but which are commonly of the genuine Teutonick race, and is uttered with a pronunciation which now seems harsh and rough, but was probably used by our ancestors. The northern speech is therefore not barbarous but obsolete. The speech in the western provinces seems to differ from the general diction rather by a depraved pronunciation, than by any real difference which letters would express.

ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the sense of the same word is diversified; as horse, horses; I love, I loved.

OF THE ARTICLE.

The English have two articles, an or a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite signification, and means one, with some reference to more; as This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a sword, that is, some sword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of those that are men than one of those that are boys. An army might enter without resistance, that is, any army.

In the senses in which we use a or an in the singular, we speak in the plural without an article; as, these are good books.

I have made an the original article, because it is only the Saxon an, or æn, one, applied to a new use, as the German ein, and the French un: the n being cut off before a consonant in the speed of utterance.

Grammarians of the last age direct that an should be used before h; whence it appears that the English anciently aspirated less. An is still used before the silent h, as an herb, an honest man: but otherwise a; as,

A horse, a horse, my kingdom for a horse. Shakespeare.

An or a can only be joined with a singular, the correspondent plural is the noun without an article, as I want a pen; I want pens; or with the pronominal adjective some, as I want some pens.

THE has a particular and definite signification.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world. Milton.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So, He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the use of man; that is, for those beings that are cattle, and his use that is man.

THE is used in both numbers.

I am as free as Nature first made man,
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran. Dryden.

Many words are used without articles; as,

1. Proper names as, John, Alexander, Longinus, Aristarchus, Jerusalem, Athens, Rome, London. GOD is used as a proper name.

2. Abstract names, as blackness, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, ugliness, love, hatred, anger, good-nature, kindness.

3. Words in which nothing [illegible] being of any thing is implied: This is not heavy, but lead; this is not brass, but steel.

OF NOUNS SUBSTANTIVES.

The relations of English nouns to words going before or following, are not expressed by cases, or changes of termination, but as in most of the other European languages by prepositions, unless we may be said to have a genitive case.

		Singular.
Nom.	Magister,	a Master, the Master.
Gen.	Magistri,	of a Master, of the Master, or Masters, the Masters.
Dat.	Magistro,	to a Master, to the Master.
Acc.	Magistrum,	a Master, the Master.
Voc.	Magister,	Master, O Master.
Abl.	Magistro,	from a Master, from the Master.
		Plural.
Nom.	Magistri,	Masters, the Masters.
Gen.	Magistrorum	of Masters, of the Masters.
Dat.	Magistris,	to Masters, to the Masters.
Acc.	Magistros,	Masters, the Masters.
Voc.	Magistri.	Masters, O Masters.
Abl.	Magistris,	from Masters, from the Masters.

Our nouns are therefore only declined thus:

Master,	Gen. Masters,	Plur. Masters.
Scholar,	Gen. Scholars,	Plur. Scholars.

These genitives are always written with a mark of elision, master's, scholar's, according to an opinion long received, that the 's is a contraction of his, as the soldier's valour, for the soldier his valour: but this cannot be the true original; because 's is put to female nouns, Woman's beauty; the Virgin's delicacy; Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate: and collective nouns, as Women's passions, the rabble's insolence, the multitude's folly; in all these cases it is apparent that his cannot be understood. We say likewise, the foundation's strength, the diamond's lustre, the winter's severity; but in these cases his may be understood, he and his having formerly been applied to neuters in the place now supplied by it and its.

The learned and sagacious Wallis, to whom every English grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective possessive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the same to the genitive in equstum decus, Trojæ onus, or any other Latin genitive. Dr. Lowth, on the other part, supposes the possessive pronouns mine and thine to be genitive cases.

This termination of the noun seems to constitute a real genitive indicating possession. It is derived to us from those who declined ꝑmiꝺ a smith; Gen. ꝑmiꝺeꝛ of a smith; Plur. ꝑmiꝺeꝛ, or ꝑmiꝺa, smiths; and so in two other of their seven declensions.

It is a further confirmation of this opinion, that in the old poets both the genitive and plural were longer by a syllable than the original word: knitis, for knight's, in Chaucer; leavis, for leaves, in Spenser.

When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the same with the nominative, as Venus Temple.

The plural is formed by adding s, as table, tables; fly, flies; sister, sisters; wood, woods; or es where s could not otherwise be sounded, as after ch, s, sh, x, z; after c sounded like s, and g like j; the mute e is vocal before s, as lance, lances; outrage, outrages.

The formation of the plural and genitive singular is the same.

A few words yet make the plural in n, as men, women, oxen, swine, and more anciently eyen and shoon. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonick dialects.

Words that end in f commonly form their plural by ves, as loaf, loaves; calf, calves.

Except a few, muff, muffs; chief, chiefs. So hoof, roof, proof, relief, mischief, puff, cuff, dwarf, handkerchief, grief.

Irregular plurals are teeth, feet, men, lice, brethren, mice from mouse, geese from goose, feet from foot, dice from die, pence from penny, brethren from brother, children from child.

Plurals ending in s have for the most part no genitive; but we say, Womens excellencies and Weigh the mens wits against the ladies hair's. Pope.

Dr. Wallis thinks the Lord's house may be said for the house of Lords; but such phrases are not now in use, for surely an English ear rebels against them. They would commonly create a troublesome ambiguity, as the Lord's house may be the house of Lords, or the house of a Lord. Besides that the mark of elision is improper, for in the Lords' house nothing is cut off.

Some English substantives, like those of many other languages, change their terminations as they express different sexes, as prince, princess; actor, actress; lion, lioness; hero, heroine. To these mentioned by Dr. Lowth may be added arbitress, poetess, shepherdess, duchess, tigress, governess, tutress, peeress, authoress, traytress, and perhaps others. Of these variable terminations we have only a sufficient number to make us feel our want; for when we say of a woman that she is a philosopher, an astronomer, a builder, a weaver, a dancer, we perceive an impropriety in the termination which we cannot avoid; but we can say that she is an architect, a botanist, a student, because these terminations have not annexed to them the notion of sex. In words which the necessities of life are often requiring, the sex is distinguished not by different terminations, but by different names, as a bull, a cow; a horse, a mare; equus, equa; a cock, a hen; and sometimes by pronouns prefixed, as a he-goat, a she-goat.

OF ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives in the English language are wholly indeclinable; having neither case, gender, nor number, and being added to substantives in all relations without any change; as a good woman; good women, of a good woman; a good man, good men, of good men.

The Comparison of Adjectives.

The comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the superlative by adding est, to the positive; as fair, fair*er*, fair*est*; lovely, lovel*ier*, lovel*iest*; sweet, sweet*er*, sweet*est*; low, low*er*, low*est*; high, high*er*, high*est.*

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, best; bad, worse, worst; little, less, least; near, nearer, next; much, more, most; many (or moe), more, (for moer), most (for moest); late, later, latest or last.

Some comparatives form a superlative by adding most, as nether, nethermost; outer, outermost; under, undermost; up, upper, uppermost; fore, former, foremost.

Most is sometimes added to a substantive, as topmost, southmost.

Many adjectives do not admit of comparison by terminations, and are only compared by more and most, as benevolent, more benevolent, most benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by more and most, even when they have comparatives and superlatives regularly formed; as fair; fairer, or more fair; fairest, or most fair.

In adjectives that admit a regular comparison, the comparative more is oftener used than the superlative most, as more fair is oftener written for fairer, than most fair for fairest.

The comparison of adjectives is very uncertain; and being much regulated by commodiousness of utterance, or agreeableness of sound, is not easily reduced to rules.

Monosyllables are commonly compared.

Polysyllables, or words of more than two syllables, are seldom compared otherwise than by more and most, as deplorable, more deplorable, most deplorable.

Disyllables are seldom compared if they terminate in some, as fulsome, toilsome; in ful, as careful, spleenful, dreadful; in ing, as trifling, charming; in ous, as porous; in less, as careless, harmless; in ed, as wretched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, fervent; in ain, as certain; in ive, as missive; in dy, as woody; in fy, as puffy; in ky, as rocky, except lucky; in my, as roomy; in ny, as skinny; in py, as ropy, except happy; in ry, as hoary.

Some comparatives and superlatives are yet found in good writers, formed without regard to the foregoing rules: but in a language subjected so little and so lately to grammar, such anomalies must frequently occur.

So shady is compared by Milton.

So she in shadiest covert hid,
Tun'd her nocturnal note. Paradise Lost.

And virtuous.

What she wills to say or do,
Seems wisest, virtuousest, discreetest, best. Paradise Lost.

So trifling, by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

It is not so decorous, in respect of God, that he should immediately do all the meanest and trifflingest things himself, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister. Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

I shall be nam'd among the famousest
Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton's Agonistes.

Inventive, by Ascham.

Those have the inventivest heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Mortal, by Bacon.

The mortalest poisons practised by the West Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man. Bacon.

Natural, by Wotton.

I will now deliver a few of the properest and naturallest considerations that belong to this piece. Wotton's Architecture.

Wretched, by Jonson.

The wretcheder are the contemners of all helps; such as presuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they understand not things. Ben Jonson.

Powerful, by Milton.

We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What Heavn's great King hath pow'rfullest to send Against us from about his throne. Paradise Lost.

The terminations in ish may be accounted in some sort a degree of comparison, by which the signification is diminished below the positive, as black, blackish, or tending to blackness; salt, saltish, or having a little taste of salt; they therefore admit no comparison. This termination is seldom added but to words expressing sensible qualities, nor often to words of above one syllable, and is scarcely used in the solemn or sublime style.

OF PRONOUNS.

Pronouns in the English language, are, I, thou, he, with their plurals, we, ye, they; it, who, which, what, whether, whosoever, whatsoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the same, some.

The pronouns personal are irregularly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	I	We
Accus. and other oblique cases.	Me	Us
Nom.	Thou	Ye
Oblique.	Thee	You

You is commonly used in modern writers for ye, particularly in the language of ceremony, where the second person plural is used for the second person singular, You are my friend.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	He	They	Applied to masculines.
Oblique.	Him	Them
Nom.	She	They	Applied to feminines.
Oblique.	Her	Them
Nom.	It	They	Applied to neuters or things.
Oblique.	Its	Them

For it the practice of ancient writers was to use he, and for its, his.

The possessive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without cases or change of termination.

The possessive of the first person is my, mine, our, ours; of the second, thy, thine, your, yours; of the third, from he, his; from she, her, and hers; and in the plural their, theirs, for both sexes.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, are used when the substantive preceding is separated by a verb, as These are our books. These books are ours. Your children excel ours in stature, but ours surpass yours in learning.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, notwithstanding their seeming plural termination, are applied equally to singular and plural substantives, as, This book is ours. These books are ours.

Mine and thine were formerly used before a vowel, as mine uncle, thine army, which, though now disused in prose, might be still properly continued in poetry. they are used as ours and yours, and are referred to a substantive preceding, as thy house is larger than mine, but my garden is more spacious than thine.

Their and theirs are the possessives likewise of they, when they is the plural of it, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, whether, whosoever, whatsoever.

	Sing. and Plur.		Sing. and Plur.
Nom.	Who	Nom.	Which
Gen.	Whose	Gen.	Of which, or whose
Other oblique cases.	Whom	Other oblique cases.	Which

Who is now used in relation to persons, and which in relation to things; but they were anciently confounded. At least it was common to say, the man which, though I remember no example of the thing who.

Whose is rather the poetical than regular genitive of which:

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world. Milton.

Whether is only used in the nominative and accusative cases; and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly to one of two, as Whether of these is left I know not. Whether shall I choose? It is now almost obsolete.

What, whether relative or interrogative, is without variation.

Whosoever, whatsoever, being compounded of who or what, and soever, follow the rule of their primitives.

	Singular.	Plural.
In all cases,	This	These
	That	Those
	Other	Others
	Whether

The plural others is not used but when it is referred to a substantive preceding, as I have sent other horses. I have not sent the same horses, but others.

Another, being only an other, has no plural.

Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal use. Hereof, herein, hereby, hereafter, herewith, thereof, therein, thereby, thereupon, therewith, whereof, wherein, whereby, whereupon, wherewith, which signify, of this, in this, &c. of that, in that, &c. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly there for and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in use. The rest seem to be passing by degrees into neglect, though proper, useful, and analogous. They are referred both to singular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words used only in conjunction with pronouns, own and self.

Own is added to possessives, both singular and plural, as my own hand, our own house. It is emphatical, and implies a silent contrariety or opposition; as I live in my own house, that is, not in a hired house. This I did with my own hand, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to possessives as myself, yourselves; and sometimes to personal pronouns, as himself, itself, themselves. It then, like own, expresses emphasis and opposition, as I did this myself, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as We hurt ourselves by vain rage.

Himself, itself, themselves, are supposed by Wallis to be put, by corruption, for his self, it self, their selves; so that self is always a substantive. This seems justly observed, for we say, He came himself; Himself shall do this; where himself cannot be an accusative.

OF THE VERB.

English verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as I languish. The neuters are formed like the actives.

Most verbs signifying action may likewise signify condition or habit, and become neuters, as I love, I am in love; I strike, I am now striking.

Verbs have only two tenses inflected in their terminations, the present, and the simple preterite; the other tenses are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, shall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The passive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the substantive verb, as I am loved.

To have. Indicative Mood.

Present Tense.

Sing. I have; thou hast; he hath or has.
Plur. We have; ye have; they have.

Has is a termination corrupted from hath, but now more frequently used both in verse and prose.

Simple Preterite.

Sing. I had; thou hadst; he had;
Plur. We had; ye had; they had.

Compound Preterite.

Sing. I have had; thou hast had; he has or hath had;
Plur. We have had; ye have had; they have had.

Preterpluperfect.

Sing. I had had; thou hadst had; he had had;
Plur. We had had; ye had had; they had had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have; thou shalt have; he shall have;
Plur. We shall have; ye shall have; they shall have.

Second Future.

Sing. I will have; thou wilt have; he will have.
Plur. We will have; ye will have; they will have.

By reading these future tenses may be observed the variations of shall and will.

Imperative Mood.

Sing. Have, or have thou; let him have;
Plur. Let us have; have, or have ye; let them have.

Conjunctive Mood.

Present.

Sing. I have; thou have; he have;
Plur. We have; ye have; they have.

Preterite simple as in the Indicative.

Preterite compound.

Sing. I have had; thou have had; he have had;
Plur. We have had; ye have had; they have had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have; as in the Indicative.

Second Future.

Sing. I shall have had; thou shalt have had; he shall have had;
Plur. We shall have had; ye shall have had; they shall have had.

Potential.

The potential form of speaking is expressed by may, can, in the present; and might, could, or should, in the preterite, joined with the infinitive mood of the verb.

Present.

Sing. I may have; thou mayst have; he may have;
Plur. We may have; ye may have; they may have.

Preterite.

Sing. I might have; thou mightest have; he might have;
Plur. We might have; ye might have; they might have.

Present.

Sing. I can have; thou canst have; he can have;
Plur. We can have; ye can have; they can have.

Preterite.

Sing. I could have; thou couldst have; he could have;
Plur. We could have; ye could have; they could have.

In the like manner should is united to the verb.
There is likewise a double preterite.

Sing. I should have had; thou shouldst have had; he should have had;
Plur. We should have had; ye should have had; they should have had;
In like manner we use, I might have had; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.

Present. To have. Preterite. To have had.
Participle Present. Having. Participle preter. Had.

Verb Active. To love.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I love; thou lovest; he loveth, or loves;
Plur. We love; ye love; they love.

Preterite simple.

Sing. I loved; thou lovedst; he loved;
Plur. We loved; ye loved; they loved.
Preterperfect compound. I have loved, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had loved, &c.
Future. I shall love, &c. I will love, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Love, or love thou; let him love;
Plur. Let us love; love, or love ye; let them love.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I love; thou love; he love;
Plur. We love; ye love; they love.
Preterite simple, as in the Indicative.
Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.
Future. I shall love, &c.
Second Future. I shall have loved, &c.

Potential.

Present. I may or can love, &c.
Preterite. I might, could, or should love, &c.
Double Preterite. I might, could, or should have loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To love. Preterite. To have loved.
Participle present. Loving. Participle past. Loved.

The passive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite to the different tenses of the verb to be, which must therefore be here exhibited.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I am; thou art; he is;
Plur. We are, or be; ye are, or be; they are, or be.
The plural be is now little in use.

Preterite.

Sing. I was; thou wast, or wert; he was;
Plur. We were; ye were; they were.
Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not be used in the indicative.
Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had been, &c.
Future. I shall or will be, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Be thou; let him be;
Plur. Let us be; be ye; let them be.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I be; thou beest; he be.
Plur. We be; ye be; they be.

Preterite.

Sing. I were; thou wert; he were;
Plur. We were; ye were; they were.
Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Future. I shall have been, &c.

Potential.

I may or can; would, could, or should be; could, would, or should have been, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be. Preterite. To have been,
Participle present. Being. Participle preter. Having been.

Passive Voice. Indicative Mood.

I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c

Conjuctive Mood.

If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c. If I shall have been loved, &c.

Potential Mood.

I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, or should be loved, &c. I might, could, or should have been loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be loved. Preterite. To have been loved.
Participle. Loved.

There is another form of English verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

To Do.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I do; thou dost; he doth;
Plur. We do; ye do; they do.

Preterite.

Sing. I did; thou didst; he did;
Plur. We did; ye did; they did.
Preterite, &c. I have done, &c. I had done, &c.
Future, I shall or will do, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Do thou; let him do;
Plur. Let us do; do ye; let them do.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I do; thou do; he do.
Plur. We do; ye do; they do.
The rest are as in the Indicative.
Infinitive. To do; to have done.
Participle present. Doing. Participle preter. Done.

Do is sometimes used superfluously, as I do love; I did love; simply for I love, or I loved; but this is considered as a vitious mode of speech.

It is sometimes used emphatically; as,

I do love thee, and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again. Shakespeare.

It is frequently joined with a negatvive: as I like her, but I do not love her; I wished him success, but did not help him. This, by custom at least, appears more easy than the other form of expressing the same sense by a negative adverb, after the verb, I like her, but love her not.

The Imperative prohibitory is seldom applied in the second person, at least in prose, without the word do; as Stop him, but do not hurt him; Praise beauty, but do not dote on it.

Its chief use is in interrogative forms of speech, in which it is used through all the persons; as Do I live? Dost thou strike me? Do they rebel? Did I complain? Didst thou love her? Did she die? So likewise in negative interrogations; Do I not yet grieve? Did she not die?

Do and did are thus used only for the present and simple preterite.

There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs, which, when it is used, may not improperly denominate them neuter passives, as they are inflected according to the passive form by the help of the verb substantive to be. They answer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French; as

I am risen, surrexi, Latin; Je me suis levé, French.

I was walked out, exiram; Je m' étois promené.

In like manner we commonly express the present tense; as, I am going, eo. I am grieving, doleo. She is dying, illa moritur. The tempest is raging, furit procella. I am pursuing an enemy, hostem insequor. So the other tenses, as, We were walking, ἠγχάπεμεν περιπατοῦντες, I have been walking, I had been walking, shall or will be walking.

There is another manner of using the active participle, which gives it a passive signification: as, the grammar is now printing, grammatica jam nunc chartis imprimitur. The brass is forging, æra excuduntur. This is, in my opinion, a vitious expression, probably corrupted from a phrase more pure, but now somewhat obsolete: The book is a printing. The brass is a forging; a being properly at, and printing and forging verbal nouns signifying action, according to the analogy of this language.

The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded, or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected, when some convenience of versification does not invite its revival. It is used among the purer writers of former times after if, though, ere, before, till, or until, whether, except, unless, whatsoever, whomsoever, and words of wishing; as, Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not.

OF IRREGULAR VERBS.

The English verbs were divided by Ben Jonson into four conjugations, without any reason arising from the nature of the language, which has properly but one conjugation, such as has been exemplified; from which all deviations are to be considered as anomalies, which are indeed in our monosyllable Saxon verbs, and the verbs derived from them, very frequent; but almost all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages follow the regular form.

Our verbs are observed by Dr. Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterite, and its participle. Indeed, in the scantiness of our conjugations, there is scarcely any other place for irregularity.

The first irregularity is a slight deviation from the regular form, by rapid utterance or poetical contraction: the last syllable ed is often joined with the former by suppression of e; as lov'd for loved; after c, ch, sh, f, k, x, and after the consonants s, th, when more strongly pronounced, and sometimes after m, n, r, if preceded by a short vowel, t is used in pronunciation, but very seldom in writing, rather than d; as plac't, snatch't, fish't, wack't, dwel't, smel't; for plac'd, snatch'd, fish'd wak'd, dwel'd, smel'd; or placed, snatched, fished, waked, dwelled, smelled.

Those words which terminate in l or ll, or p, make their preterite in t, even in solemn language; as crept, felt, dwelt, sometimes after x, ed is changed into t, as vext; this is not constant.

A long vowel is often changed into a short one; thus, kept, slept, wept, crept, swept; from the verbs, to keep, to sleep, to weep, to creep, to sweep.

Where d or t go before, the additional letter d or t, in this contracted form, coalesce into one letter with the radical d or t: if t were the radical, they coalesce into t; but if d were the radical, then into d or t, as the one or the other letter may be more easily pronounced: as read, led, spread, shed, shred, bid, chid, fed, bled, bred, sped, strid, slid, rid; from the verbs to read, to lead, to spread, to shed, to shread, to bid, to hide, to chide, to feed, to bleed, to breed, to speed, to stride, to slide, to to ride. And thus, cast, hurt, cost, burst, eat, heat, sweat, sit, quit, smit, writ, bit, hit, met, shot; from the verbs to cast, to hurt, to cost, to burst, to eat, to beat, to sweat, to sit, to quit, to smite, to write, to bite, to hit, to meet, to shoot. And in like manner, lent, sent, rent, girt; from the verbs to lend, to send, to rend, to gird.

The participle preterite or passive is often formed in en, instead of ed; as been, taken, given, slain, known; from the verbs to be, to take, to give, to slay, to know.

Many words have two or more participles, as not only written, bitten, eaten, beaten, hidden, chidden, shotten, chosen, broken; but likewise writ, bit, eat, beat, hid, chid, shot, chose, broke, are promiscuously used in the participle, from the verbs to write, to bite, to eat, to beat, to hide, to chide, to shoot, to choose, to break, and many such like.

In the same manner sown, shewn, hewn, mown, loaden, laden, as well as sow'd, shew'd, hew'd, mow'd, loaded, laded, from the verbs to sow, to shew, to hew, to mow, to load or lade.

Concerning these double participles it is difficult to give any rule; but he shall seldom err who remembers, that when a verb has a participle distinct from its preterite, as write, wrote, written, that distinct participle is more proper and elegant, as The book is written, is better than the The book is wrote. Wrote however may be used in poetry; at least if we allow any authority to poets, who, in the exultation of genius, think themselves perhaps entitled to trample on grammarians.

There are other anomalies in the preterite.

1. Win, spin, begin, swim, strike, stick, sing, sting, fling, ring, wring, spring, swing, drink, sink, shrink, stink, come, run, find, bind, grind, wind, both in the preterite, imperfect, and participle passive, give won, spun, begun, swum, struck, stuck, sung, stung, flung, rung, wrung, sprung, swung, drunk, sunk, shrunk, stunk, come, run, found, bound, ground, wound. And most of them are also formed in the preterite by a, as began, rang, sang, sprang, drank, came, ran, and some others; but most of these are now obsolete. Some in the participle passive likewise take en, as stricken, struck en, drunken, bounden.

2. Fight, teach, reach, seek, beseech, catch, buy, bring, think, work, make fought, taught, raught, sought, besought, caught, bought, brought, thought, wrought.

But a great many of these retain likewise the regular form, as teached, reached, beseeched, catched, worked.

3. Take, shake, forsake, wake, awake, stand, break, speak, bear, shear, swear, tear, wear, weave, cleave, strive, thrive, drive, shine, rise, arise, smite, write, bide, abide, ride, choose, chuse, tread, get, beget, forget, scethe, make in both preterite and participle took, shook, forsook, woke, awoke, stood, broke, spoke, bore, shore, swore, tore, wore, wove, clove, strove, throve, drove, shone, rose, arose, smote, wrote, bode, abode, rode, chose, trode, got, begot, forgot, sod. But we say likewise, thrive, rise, smit, writ, abid, rid. In the preterite some are likewise formed by a, as brake, spake, bare, share, sware, tare, ware, clave, gat, begat, forgat, and perhaps some others, but more rarely. In the participle passive many of them are formed by en, as taken, shaken, forsaken, broken, spoken, born, shorn, sworn, torn, worn, woven, cloven, thriven, driven, risen, smitten, ridden, chosen, trodden, gotten, begotten, forgotten, sodden. And many do likewise retain the analogy in both, as waked, awaked, sheared, weaved, leaved, abided, seethed.

4. Give bid, sit, make in the preterite gave, bade, sate; in the participle passive, given, bidden, sitten; but in both bid.

5. Draw, know, grow, threw, blew, crow like a cock, fly, slay, see, ly, make their preterite drew, knew, grew threw, blew, crew, flew, slew, saw, lay; their participles passive by n, drawn, known, grown, thrown, flown, slain, seen, lien, lain. Yet from flee is made fled; from go, went, from the old wend, the participle is gone.

OF DERIVATION.

That the English language may be more easily understood, it is necessary to enquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitives, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this enquiry I shall sometimes copy Dr. Wallis, and sometimes endeavour to supply his defects, and rectify his errours.

Nouns are derived from verbs.

The thing implied in the verb, as done or produced, is commonly either the present of the verb; as to love, love; to fright, a fright; to fight, a fight; or the preterite of the verb, as, to strike, I strick or strook, a stroke.

The action is the same with the participle present, as loving, frighting, fighting, striking.

The agent, or person acting, is denoted by the syllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, striker.

Substantives, adjectives, and sometimes other parts of speech, are changed into verbs: in which case the vowel is often lengthened, or the consonant softened; as a house, to house; brass, to braze; glass, to glaze; grass, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fish, to fish; oil, to oil; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, especially to adjectives; as haste, to hasten; length, to lengthen; strength, to strengthen; short, to shorten; fast, to fasten; white, to whiten; black, to blacken; hard, to harden; soft, to soften.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as a louse, lousy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; wit, witty; lust, lusty; water, watery; earth, earthy; wood a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, hearty; a hand, handy.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; use, useful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almost the same sense, but with some kind of diminution thereof, the termination some is added, denoting something, or in some degree; as delight, delightsome; game, gamesome; irk, irksome; burden, burdensome; trouble, troublesome; light, lightsome; hand, handsome; alone, lonesome; toil, toilsome.

On the contrary, the termination less, added to substantives, makes adjectives signifying want; as worthless, witless, heartless, joyless, careless, helpless. Thus comfort, comfortless; sap, sapless.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin; as pleasant, unpleasant; wise, unwise; profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unfruitful, unuseful, and many more.

The original English privative is un; but as we often borrow from the Latin, or its descendants, words already signifying privation, as inficacious, impious, indiscreet, the inseparable particles un and in have fallen into confusion, from which it is not easy to disentangle them.

Un is prefixed to all words originally English; as untrue, untruth, untaught, unhandsome.

Un is prefixed to all participles made privative adjectives, as unfeeling, unassisting, unaided, undelighted, unendeared.

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle present, to mark a forbearance of action, as unsighing; but a privation of habit, as unpitying.

Un is prefixed to most substantives which have an English termination, as unfruitfulness, unperfectness, which, if they have borrowed terminations, take in or im, as infertility, imperfection; uncivil, incivility; unactive, inactivity.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is usual to retain the particle prefixed, as indecent, inelegant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particles, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepositive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes of the French, signify almost the same as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, since it answers to the Latin preposition de. Mis insinuates some error, and for the most part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to dislike; honour, dishonour; to honour, to grace, to dishonour, to disgrace; to deign, to disdeign; chance, hap, mischance, mishap; to take, to mistake; deed, misdeed; to use, to misuse; to employ, to misemploy; to apply, to misapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the same signification; as distinguish, distinguo; detract, detraho; defame, defamo; detain, detineo.

The termination ly added to substantives, and sometimes to adjectives, forms adjectives that import some kind of similitude or agreement, being formed by contraction of lick or like.

A giant, giant, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The same termination ly added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like signification; as beautiful, beautifully; sweet, sweetly, that is, in a beautiful manner; with some degree of sweetness.

The termination ish added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to substantives, imports similitude or tendency to a character; as green, greenish; white, whitish; soft, softish; a thief, thievish; a wolf, wolvish; a child, childish.

We have forms of diminutives in substantives, though not frequent; as a hill, a hillock; a cock, a cockerel; a pike, a pickrel; this is a French termination: a goose, a gosling; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence the patronimick, Hawkins; Wilkin, Thomkin, and others.

Yet still there is another form of diminution among the English, by lessening the sound itself, especially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and that sometimes not so much by change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as sup, sip, sopp, sop, sippet, where, besides the extenuation of the vowel, there is added the French termination et; top, tip; spit, spout; babe, baby; booby, βώμαξ; great pronounced especially with a stronger sound, grea-t; little pronounced long, lee-tle; ting, tang, tong, imports a succession of smaller and then greater sounds; and so in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words.

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on oral utterance, and therefore scarcely worthy the notice of Wallis.

Of concrete adjectives are made abstract substantives, by adding the termination ness, and a few in hood or head, noting character or qualities; as white, whiteness; hard, hardness; great, greatness; skilful, skilfulness, unskilfulness; godhead, manhood, maidenhead, widowhood, knighthood, priesthood, likelihood, falsehood.

There are other abstracts, partly derived from the adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a small change being sometimes made; as long, length; strong, strength; broad, breadth; wide, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, dearth; slow, slowth; merry, mirth; heal, health; well, weal, wealth; dry, droughth; young, youth; and so moon, month.

Like these are some words derived from verbs; die, death; till, tilth; grow, growth; mow, later mowth, after mow'th; commonly spoken and written later muth, after math; steal, stealth; bear, birth; rue, ruth; and probably earth, from to ear or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, draught.

These should rather be written flighth, frighth, only that custom will not suffer h to be twice repeated.

The same form retain faith, spight, wreathe, wrath, broth, froth, breath, sooth, worth, light, wight, and the like, whose primitives are either entirely obsolete, or seldom occur. Perhaps they are derived from fey or foy, spry, wry, wreak, brew, mow, fry, bray, say, work.

Some ending in ship imply an office, employment, or condition; as kingship, wardship, guardianship, partnership, stewardship, headship, lordship.

Thus worship, that is, worthship; whence worshipful, and to worship.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do especially denote dominion, at least state or condition; as kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, christendom, freedom, wisdom, whoredom, bishoprick, bailywick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the same import with us as among them, scarcely ever occurring, except in words derived from the French, as commandment, usage.

There are in English often long trains of words allied by their meaning and derivation; as to beat, a bat, batoon, a battle, a beetle, a battle-door, to batter, batter, a kind of glutinous composition for food, made by beating different bodies into one mass. All these are of similar signification, and perhaps derived from the Latin batuo. Thus take, touch, tickle, tack, tackle; all imply a local conjunction, from the Latin tango, tetigi, tactum.

From two are formed twain, twice, twenty, twelve, twins, twine, twist, twirl, twig, twinge, between, betwixt, twilight, twibil.

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more subtlety than solidity, and such as perhaps might in every language be enlarged without end.

Sn usually imply the nose, and what relates to it. From the Latin nasus are derived the French nez and the English nose; and nesse a promontory, as projecting like a nose. But as if from the consonants ns taken from nasus, and transposed, that they may the better correspond, sn denote nasus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the nose, as snout, sneeze, snore, snort, sneer, snicker, snot, snevil, snite, snuff, snuffle, snaffle, snarle, smudge.

There is another sn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin, sinuo, as snake, sneak, snail, snare; so likewise snap and snatch, snib, snub.

Bl imply a blast; as blow, blast, to blast, to blight, and, metaphorically, to blast one's reputation; bleat, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak or weatherbeaten, bleak, blay, bleach, bluster, blurt, blister, blab, bladder, bleb, blister, blabberlip't, blubber-cheek't, bloted, blote-herrings, blast, blaze, to blow, that is, blossom, bloom; and perhaps blood and blush.

In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the thing signified; and therefore the sounds of letters smaller, sharper, louder, closer, softer, stronger, clearer, more obscure, and more sti-dulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the thing signified.

Thus words that begin with str intimate the force and effect of the thing signified, as if probably derived from στρώνυμι, or strenuus; as strong, strength, strew, strike, streak , stroke, stripe, strife, struggle, strout, strut, stretch, strait, strict, streight, that is, narrow, distrain, stress, distress, string, strap, stream, streamer, strand, strip, stray, struggle, strange, stride, straddle.

St in like manner imply strength, but in a less degree, so much only as is sufficient to preserve what has been already communicated, rather than acquire any new degree; as if it were derived from the Latin sto: for example, stand, stay, that is, to remain, or to prop; staff, stay, that is, to oppose; stop, to stuff, stifle, to stay, that is, to stop; a stay, that is, an obstacle; stick, stut, stutter, stammer, stagger, stickle, stick, stake, a sharp pale, and any thing deposited at play; stock, stem, sting, to sting, stink, stitch, stud, stanchion, stub, stubble, to stub up, stump, whence stumble, stalk, to stalk, step, to stamp with the feet, whence to stamp, that is, to make an impression and a stamp; stow, to stow, to bestow, steward or stoward, stead, steady, steadfast, stable, a stable, a stall, to stall, stool, stall, still, stall, stallage, stall, stage, still adj. and still, adv. stale, stout, sturdy, steed, stoat, stallion, stiff, stark-dead, to starve with hunger, or cold; stone, steel, stern, stanch, to stanch blood, to stare, steep, steeple, stair, standard, a stated measure, stately. In all these, and perhaps some others, st denote something firm and fixed.

Thr imply a more violent degree of motion, as throw, thrust, throng, throb, through, threat, threaten, thrall, throws.

Wr imply some sort of obliquity or distortion, as wry, to wreathe, wrest, wrestle, wring, wrong, wrinch, wrench, wrangle, wrinkle, wrath, wreak, wrack, wretch, wrist, wrap.

Sw imply a silent agitation, or a softer kind of lateral motion; as sway, swag, to sway, swagger, swerve, sweat, sweep, swill, swim, suing, swift, sweet, switch, swinge.

Nor is there much difference of sm in smooth, smug, smile, smirk, smite, which signifies the same as to strike, but is a softer word; small, smell, smack, smother, smart, a smart blow properly signifies such a kind of stroke as with an originally silent motion, implied in sm, proceeds to a quick violence, denoted by ar suddenly ended, as is shewn by t.

Cl denote a kind of adhesion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, climb, clumber, clammy, clasp, to clasp, to clip, to clinch, cloak, clog, close, to close, a clod, a clot, as a clot of blood, clouted cream, a clutter, a cluster.

Sp imply a kind of dissipation or expansion, especially a quick one particularly if there be an r, as if it were from spargo, or separo: for example, spread, spring, sprig, sprout, sprinkle, split, splinter, spill, spit, sputter, spatter.

Sl denote a kind of silent fall, or a less observable motion; as in slime, slide, slip, slipper, sly, sleight, slit, slow, slack, slight, sling, slap.

And so likewise, ash, in crash, rash, gash, flash, clash, lash, slash, plash, trash, indicate something acting more nimbly and sharply. But ush, in crush, rush, gush, flush, blush, brush, bush, push, implies something as acting more obtusely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a swift and sudden motion, not instantaneous, but gradual, by the continued sound sh.

Thus in fling, sling, ding, swing, cling, sing, wring, sting, the tingling of the termination ng, and the sharpness of the vowel i, imply the continuation of a very slender motion or tremor, at length indeed vanishing, but not suddenly interrupted. But in tink, wink, sink, clink, chink, think, that end in a mute consonant, there is also indicated a sudden ending.

If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinkle, mingle, sprinkle, twinkle, there is implied a frequency, or iteration of small acts. And the same frequency of acts, but less subtile by reason of the clearer vowel a is indicated in jangle, tangle, spangle, mangle, wrangle, brangle, dangle; as also in mumble, grumble, fumble, tumble, stumble, rumble, crumble, fumble. But at the same time the close u implies something obscure or obtunded; and a congeries of consonants mbl, denotes a confused kind of rolling or tumbling, as in ramble, scamble, scramble, wamble, amble; but in those there is something acute.

In nimble, the acuteness of the vowel denotes celerity. In sparkle, sp denotes dissipation, ar an acute crackling, k a sudden interruption, l a frequent iteration; and in like manner in sprinkle, unless in may imply the subtilty of the dissipated guttules. Thick and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtuse consonant, and the latter with an acute.

In like manner, in squeek, squeak, squeal, squall, braul, wraul, yaul, spaul, screek, shriek, shrill, sharp, shrivel, wrinkle, crack, crash, clash, gnash, plash, brush, hush, hisse, fisse, whist, soft, jarr, hurl, curl, whirl, bur, bustle, spindle, dwindle, twine, twist, and in many more, we may observe the agreement of such sort of sounds with the things signified: and this so frequently happens, that scarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monosyllable word, of which kind are almost all ours, emphatically expresses what in other languages can scarce be explained but by compounds, or decompounds, or sometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin; but the greatest part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as grace, face, elegance, resemble.

Some verbs, which seem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the present tense, and some from the supines.

From the present are formed spend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; despise, despicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the supines, supplicate, supplico: demonstrate, demonstro; dispose, dispono; expatiate, expatior; suppress, suppremo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent, than that Wallis goes too far in quest of originals. Many of these which seem selected as immediate descendants from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expose, exempt.

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French, jardin, jartier, bouclier, avancer, crier, plaider; though indeed, even of these, part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from some common original; as wine, vinum; wind, ventus; went, veni; way, via; wall, vallum; wallow, volvo; wool, vellus; will, volo; worm, vermis; worth, virtus; wasp, vespa; day, dies; draw, traho; tame, domo, δαμάω; yoke, jugum, ζεῦγος; over, upper, super, ὑπερ; am, sum, εἰμι; break, frango; fly, volo; blow, flo. I make no doubt but the Teutonick is more ancient than the Latin; and it is no less certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words, not only from the Greek, especially the Æolick, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Oscan and others, which have long become obsolete, received not a few from the Teutonick. It is certain, that the English, German, and other Teutonick languages, retained some derived from the Greek, which the Latin has not; as ax, achs, mit, ford, pfurd, daughter, tochter, mickle, mingle, moon, fear, grave, graff, to grave, to scrape, whole, from ἀξίνη, μετα, πορθμος, Συγατὴς, μεγάλος, μιγνύω, μῆνη, ξῆρός, γράφω, ὅλος. Since they received these immediately from the Greeks, without the intervention of the Latin languages, why may not other words be derived immediately from the same fountain, though they be likewise found among the Latins?

Our ancestors were studious to form borrowed words, however long, into monosyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the first syllable, especially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewise consonants of a weaker sound, retaining the stronger, which seem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the same organ, in order that the sound might become the softer; but especially transporting their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, spend; exemplum, sample; excipio, scape; extraneus, strange; extractum, stretch'd; excrucio, to screw; exscorio, to scour; excorio, to scourge; excortico, to scratch; and others beginning with ex: as also, emendo, to mend; episcopus, bishop; in Danish, bisp; epistola, epistle; hospitale, spittle; Hispania, Spain; historia, story.

Many of these etymologies are doubtful, and some evidently mistaken.

The following are somewhat harder, Alexander, Sander; Elisabetha, Betty; apis, bee; aper, bar; p passing into b, as in bishop; and by cutting off a from the beginning, which is restored in the middle: but for the old bar or bare, we now say boar; as for lang, long; for bain, bane; for stane, stone; aprugna, brawn, p being changed into b, and a transposed, as in aper, and g changed into u, as in pignus, pawn; lege, law; ἀλωπὴξ, fox; cutting off the beginning, and changing p into f, as in pellis, a fell; pullus, a foal; pater, father; pavor, fear; polio, file; pleo, impleo, fill, full; piscis, fish; and transposing o into the middle, which was taken from the beginning; apex, a piece; peak, pile; zophorus, freeze; mustum, stum; defensio, fence; dispensator, spenser; asculto, escouter, Fr. scout; exscalpo, scrape, restoring l instead of r, and hence scrap, scrable, scrawl; exculpo, scoop; exterritus, start; extonitus, attonitus, stonn'd; stomachus, maw; offendo, fined; obstipo, stop; audere, dare; cavere, ware; whence a-ware, be-ware, wary, warn, warning, for the Latin v consonant formerly sounded like our w, and the modern sound of the v consonant was formerly that of the letter f, that is, the Æolick digamma, which had the sound of φ, and the modern sound of the letter f was that of the Greek φ or ph; ulcus, ulcere, ulcer, sore, and hence sorry, sorrow, sorrowful; ingenium, engine, gin; scalenus, leaning, unless you would rather derive it from κλινω, whence inclino; infundibulum, funnel; gagates, jett; projectum, to jett forth, a jetty; cucullus, a cowl.

There are syncopes somewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dame; as the French homme, femme, nom, from homine, fœmina, nomine. Thus pagina, page; κυτριον, pot; κυπελλα, cup; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent; precor, pray: præda, prey; specio, speculor, spy; plico, ply; implico, imply; replico, reply; complico, comply; sedes episcopalis, see.

A vowel is also cut off in the middle, that the number of the syllables may be lessened; as amita, aunt; spiritus, sprite? debitum, debt; dubito, doubt; comes, comitis, count; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acquieto, to acquit; separo, to spare; stabilis, stable; stabulum, stable; pallatium, palace, place; rabula, rail; rawl, wrawl, brawl, rable, brable: quæsitio, quest.

As also a consonant, or at least one of a softer sound, or even a whole syllable; rotundus; round; fragilis, frail; securus, sure, regul, rule; tegula, tile; subtilis, subtle; nomen, noun; decanus, dean; computo, count; subitaneus, suddain, soon; superare, to sour; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as magnus, main; dignor, deign; tingo, stain; tinctum, taint; pingo, paint; prædari, reach.

The contractions may seem harder, where many of them meet, as κυριακὸς, kyrk, church; presbyter, priest; sacristanus, sexton; frango, fregi, break, breach; fagus, φηγος, beech; f changed into b, and g into ch, which are letters near a-kin; frigesco, freeze; frigesco, fresh, se into sh, as above in bishop, fish, so in scapha, skiff, skip, and refrigesco, refresh; but viresco, fresh; phlebotomus, leam; bovina, beef; vitulina, veal; scutifer, squire; pœnitentia, penance; sanctuarium, sanctuary, sentry; quæsitio, chase; perquisitio, purchase; anguilla, eel; insula, isle, ile, island, iland; insuletta, islet, ilet; eyght; and more contractedly ey, whence Owsney, Ruley, Ely; examinare, to scan, namely, by rejecting from the beginning and end e and o, according to the usual manner, the remainder namin, which the Saxons, who did not use x, write csamen, or scamen, is contracted into scan; as from dominus, don; nomine, noun; abomino, ban; and indeed apum examen they turned into sciame; for which we say swarme, by inserting r to denote the murmuring; thesaurus, store; sedile, stool; υδὸς, wet; sudo, sweat; gaudium, gay; jocus, joy; succus, juice; catena, chain; caliga, calga; chause, chausse, Fr. hose; extinguo, stanch, squench, quench, stint; foras, forth; species, spice; recito, read; adjuvo, aid; αἰων, ævum, ay, age, ever; floccus, lock; excerpo, scrape, scrabble, scrawl; extravagus, stray, straggle; collectum, clot, clutch; colligo, coil; recolligo, recoil; severo, swear, stridulus, shrill; procurator, proxy; pulso, to push; calamus, a quill; impetre, to impeach; augeo, auxi, wax; and vanesco, vanui, wane; syllabare, to spell; puteus, pit; granum, corn; comprimo, cramp, crump, crumple, crinkle.

Some may seem harsher, yet may not be rejected, for it at least appears, that some of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whose etymology is acknowledged by every body; as Alexander, Elick, Scander, Sander, Sanny, Sandy: Elizabetha, Elizabeth, Elisabeth; Betty, Bess; Margareta, Margaret, Marget, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mary, Mal, Pal, Malkin, Mawkin, Mawkes; Matthæus, Mattha, Matthew; Martha, Matt, Pat; Gulielmus, Wilhelmus, Girolamo, Guillaume. William, Will, Bill, Wilkin, Wicken, Wicks, Weeks.

Thus cariophyllus, flos; gerofilo, Ital. giriflée, gilofer, Fr. gilliflower, which the vulgar call julyflower, as if derived from the month July; petroselinum, parsley; portulaca, purslain; cydonium, quince; cydoniatum, quiddeny; persicum, peach; eruca, eruke, which they corrupt to ear-wig, as if it took its name from the ear; annulus geminus, a gimmal, or gimbal ring; and thus the word gimbal and jumbal is transferred to other things thus interwoven, quelques choses, kickshaws. Since the origin of these, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one if the ancients have thus disfigured many, especially as they so much affected monosyllables; and, to make them sound the softer, took this liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, transposing and softening them.

But while we derive these from the Latin, I do not mean to say, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Danish, Dutch, and Teutonick languages, and other dialects, and some taken more lately from the French, or Italians, or Spaniards.

The same word, according to its different significations, often has a different origin; as to bear a burden, from fero; but to bear, whence birth, born, bairn, comes from pario; and a bear, at least if it be of Latin original, from fera. Thus perch, a fish, from perca; but perch, a measure, from pertica, and likewise to perch. To spell is from syllaba; but spell, an inchantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are so fixed in lands, that none can pass them against the master's will, from expello; and spell, a messenger, from epistola; whence gospel, good-spell, or god-spell. Thus, freese, or freeze, from frigesco; but freeze, an architectonic word, from zophorus; but freese, for cloth, from Frisia, or perhaps from frigesco, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us, even monosyllables, compounded of two or more words, at least serving instead of compounds, and comprising the signification of more words than one; as from scrip and roll comes scroll; from proud and dance, prance; from st of the verb stav, or stand, and out, is made stout; from stout and hardy, sturdy; from sp of spit or spew, and out comes spout; from the same sp, with the termination in, is spin; and adding out, spin out; and from the same sp, with it, is spit, which only differs from spout in that it is smaller, and with less noise and force; but sputter is, because of the obscure u, something between spit and spout; and by reason of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noise, but obscurely confused: whereas spatter, on account of the sharper and clearer vowel a, intimates a more distinct noise, in which it chiefly differs from sputter. From the same sp and the termination ark, comes spark, signifying a single emission of fire with a noise; namely, sp the emission ar the more acute noise, and k the mute consonant intimates its being suddenly terminated; but by adding l, is made the frequentative sparkle. The same sp by adding r, that is spr, implies a more lively impetus of diffusing, or expanding itself; to which adding the termination ing it becomes spring; its vigour spr imports; its sharpness the termination ing; and lastly in acute and tremulous, ending in the mute consonant g, denotes the sudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary signification, of a single, not a complicated exhilition. Hence we call spring whatever has an elastick force; as also a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to spring, to germinate; and spring, one of the four seasons. From the same spr and out, is formed sprout, and with the termination ig, sprig; of which the following, for the most part, is the difference: sprout, of a grosser sound imports a fatter or grosser bud; sprig, of a slenderer sound denotes a smaller shoot. In like manner, from str of the verb strive, and out, come strout, and strut. From the same str, and the termination uggle, is made struggle; and this gl imports, but without any great noise, by reason of the obscure sound of the vowel u. In like manner, from throw and roll is made troll; and almost in the same sense is trundle, from throw or thrust and rundle. Thus gruff or grough is compounded of grave and rough; and trudge from tread or trot and drudge.

In these observations it is easy to discover great sagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the desire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often so made, that by the same licence any language may be deduced from any other.

2. That he makes no distinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and those which, being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the English language, or its laws of derivation.

3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harshness and violence, words apparently Teutonick; and therefore according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.

4. That some of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

SYNTAX.

The established practice of grammarians requires that I should here treat of the Syntax; but our language has so little inflection, or variety of terminations, that its construction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally neglected it; and Jonson, whose desire of following the writers upon the learned languages, made him think a syntax indispensably necessary, has published such petty observations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and person; as Thou fliest from good; he runs to death.

Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable.

Of two substantives the noun possessive is the genitive; as, His father's glory; The sun's heat.

Verbs transitive require an oblique case; as, He loves me; You fear him.

All prepositions require an oblique case; as, He gave this to me; He took this from me; He says this of me; He came with me.

PROSODY.

It is common for those that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Prosody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buomattei; that of the French by Desmarais; and that of the English by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Jonson, though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to insert them.

Prosody comprises orthoepy, or the rules of pronunciation; and orthometry, or the laws of versification.

PRONUNCIATION is just, when every letter has its proper sound, and when every syllable has its proper accent, or, which in English versification is the same, its proper quantity.

The sounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not easily to be given, being subject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I shall here propose.

1. Of dissyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former syllable is commonly accented; as, childish, kingdom, áctest, ácted, tóilsome, lóver, scóffer, fáirer, fóremost, zéalous, fúlness, gódly, méckly, ártist.

2. Dissyllables formed by prefixing a syllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as to begét, to beséem, to bestów.

3. Of dissyllables which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former syllable; as, to déscant, a déscant; to ceménť, a cément; to contract, a cóntract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs seldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter syllable; as, delight, perfume.

4. All dissyllables ending in y, as cránny; in our, as lábour, fávour; in ow, as willow, wállow, except allow; in le, as battle, bible; in ish, as banish; in ck, as cámbrick, cássock; in ter, as to bátter; in age, as cóurage; in en, as fásten; in et, as quíet; accent the former syllable.

5. Dissyllable nouns in er, as cánker, bútter, have the accent on the former syllable.

6. Dissyllable verbs terminating in a consonant and e final, as comprise, escápe; or having a dipthong in the last syllable, as appéase, revéal; or ending in two consonants, as atténd; have the accent on the latter syllable.

7. Dissyllable nouns having a dipthong in the latter syllable, have commonly their accent on the latter syllable, as applaúse; except words in ain, as cértain, moúntain.

8. Trissyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a syllable, retain their accent on the radical word, as lóveliness, ténderness, contémner, wággonner, phýsicvl, bespátter, cómmenting, comménding, assúrance.

9. Trissyllables ending in ous, as grácious, árduous; in al, as cápital; in ion, as méntion; accent the first.

10. Trissyllables ending in cc, ent, and ate, accent the first syllable, as coúntenance, cóntinence, ármament, ímminent, élegant, própagate: except they be derived from words having the accent on the last, as connívance, acquáintance; or the middle syllable hath a vowel before two consonants, as promúlgate.

11. Trissyllables ending in y, as éntity, spécify, líberty, victory, súbsidy, commonly accent the first syllable.

12. Trissyllables in re or le accent the first syllable, as légible, thíatre; except discíple, and some words which have a position, as exámple, epistle.

13. Trissyllables in ude commonly accent the first syllable, as plénitude.

14. Trissyllables ending in ator or atour, as creátour; or having in the middle syllable a dipthong, as endéavour; or a vowel before two consonants, as doméstick; accent the middle syllable.

15. Trissyllables that have their accent on the last syllable are commonly French, as acquiésce, repartee, magazíne; or words formed by prefixing one or two syllables to an acute syllable, as immatúre, overchárge.

16. Polysyllables, or words of more than three syllables, follow the accents of the words from which they are derived, as árrogating, cóntinency, incóntinency, comméndable, communicableness. We should therefore say, dispútable, indispútable, rather than disputable, indisputable; and advertisement rather than advértisement.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as salvátion, perturbation, concóction; words in autor or ator on the penult, as dedicátor.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the first syllable, as ámicable; unless the second syllable have a vowel before two consonants, as combústible.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as uxórious, voluptúous.

20. Words ending in ty have their accent on the antepenult, as pusillanimity, activity.

These rules are not advanced as complete or infallible, but proposed as useful. Almost every rule of every language has its exceptions; and in English, as in other tongues, much must be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may given, that have escaped my observation.

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of syllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verses are either iambick, as alóft, creáte; or trochaick, as hóly, lófty.

Our iambick measure compriſes verses

Of four syllables,

Most good, most fair,
Or things as rare,
To call you 's lost;
For all the cost
Words can bestow,
So poorly show
Upon your praise,
That all the ways
Sense hath, come short. Drayton.

With ravish'd ears
The monarch hears. Dryden.

Of six,

This while we are abroad,
Shall we not touch our lyre?
Shall we not sing an ode?
Shall that holy fire
In us that strongly glow'd,
In this cold air expire?

Though in the utmost Peak
A while we do remain,
Amongst the mountains bleak,
Expos'd to sleet and rain;
No sport our hours shall break,
To exercise our vein.

What though bright Phœbus' beams
Refresh the southern ground,
And though the princely Thames
With beauteous nymphs abound,
And by old Camber's streams
Be many wonders found.

Yet many rivers clear
Here glide in silver swathes;
And what of all most dear,
Buxton's delicious baths,
Strong ale and noble chear,
T' assuage breem winter's scaths.

In places far and near,
Or famous or obscure,
Where wholsom is the air,
Or where the most impure,
All times and every where,
The muse is still in ure. Drayton.

Of eight, which is the usual measure of short poems,

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown, and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of ev'ry star the sky doth shew,
And ev'ry herb that sips the dew. Milton.

Of ten, which is the common measure of heroick and tragick poetry,

Full in the midst of this created space,
Betwixt heav'n, earth, and skies, there stands a place
Confining on all three; with triple bound;
Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
And thither bring their undulating sound.
The palace of loud Fame, her seat of pow'r,
Plac'd on the summit of a lofty tow'r.
A thousand winding entries, long and wide
Receive of fresh reports a flowing tide;
A thousand crannies in the walls are made;
Nor gate nor bars exclude the busy trade.
'T is built of brass, the better to diffuse
The spreading sounds, and multiply the news;
Where echoes in repeated echoes play:
A mart for ever full; and open night and day.
Nor silence is within, nor voice express,
But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease:
Confus'd and chiding, like the hollow roar
Of tides receding from th' insulted shore;
Or like the broken thunder, heard from far,
When Jove to distance drives the rolling war.
The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
Of crowds, or issuing forth, or ent'ring in:
A thorough-fare of news; where some devise
Things never heard, some mingle truth with lies:
The troubled air with empty sounds they beat,
Intent to hear, and eager to repeat. Dryden.

In these measures the accents are to be placed on even syllables; and every line considered by itself is more harmonious as this rule is more strictly observed. The variations necessary to pleasure belong to the art of poetry, not to the rules of grammar.

Our trochaick measures are

Of three syllables,

Here we may
Think and pray,
Before death
Stops our breath:
Other joys
Are but toys. Walton's Angler.

Of five,

In the days of old,
Stories plainly told,
Lovers felt annoy. Old Ballad.

f seven,

Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth. Waller.

these measures the accent is to be placed on the odd bles.

These are the measures which are now in use, and above the rest those of seven, eight, and ten syllables. Our ancient poets wrote verses sometimes of twelve syllables, as Drayton's Polyalbion,

Of all the Cambrian shires their heads that bear so high,
And farth'st survey their soils with an ambitious eye,
Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchless crowds,
The nearest that are said to kiss the wand'ring clouds,
Especial audience craves, offended with the throng,
That she of all the rest neglected was so long;
Alleging for herself, when through the Saxon's pride
The godlike race of Brute to Severn's setting side
Were cruelly enforc'd, her mountains did relieve
Those whom devouring war else every where did grieve.
And when all Wales beside (by fortune or by might)
Unto her ancient foe resign'd her ancient right,
A constant maiden still she only did remain,
The last her genuine laws which stoutly did retain.
And as each one is prais'd for her peculiar things,
So only she is rich in mountains, meres, and springs;
And holds herself as great in her superfluous waste,
As others by their towns and fruitful tillage grac'd.

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer

And as the mind of such a man, that hath a long way gone,
And either knoweth not his way, or else would let alone
His purpos'd journey, is distract.

The measures of twelve and fourteen syllables were often mingled by our old poets, sometimes in alternate lines, and sometimes in alternate couplets.

The verse of twelve syllables, called an Alexandrine, is now only used to diversify heroick lines,

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varied verse, the full-resounding line,
The long majestick march, and energy divine.

The pause in the Alexandrine must be at the sixth syllable.

The verse of fourteen syllables is now broken into a soft lyrick measure, of verses consisting alternately of eight syllables and six,

She, to receive thy radiant name,
Selects a whiter space. Fenton.

When all shall praise, and ev'ry lay
Devote a wreath to thee,
That day, for come it will, that day
Shall I lament to see. Lewis to Pope.

Beneath this tomb an infant lies,
To earth whose body lent,
Hereafter shall more glorious rise,
But not more innocent,
When the archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to bodies join,
What crowds shall wish their lives below
Had been as short as thine! Wesley.

We have another measure, very quick and lively, and therefore much used in songs, which may be called the anapestick, in which the accent rests upon every third syllable,

May I góvern my pássions with ábsolute swáy,
And grow wíser and bétter as lífe wears awáy. Dr. Pope.

In this measure a syllable is often retrenched from the first foot, as Diógenes súrly and proúd. Dr. Pope.

When présent we lóve, and when ábsent agrée,
I thínk not of Íris, nor Íris of mé. Dryden.

These measures are varied by many combinations, and sometimes by double-endings, either with or without rhyme, as, in the heroick measure

'T is the divinity that stirs within us;
'T is Heaven itself points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison.

So in that of eight syllables,

They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded. Prior.

In that of seven.

For resistance I could fear none,
But with twenty ships had done
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Hast atchiev'd with six alone.

In that of six.

'T was when the seas were roaring,
With hollow blasts of wind,
A damsel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclin'd.

In the anapestick,

When terrible tempests assail us,
And mountainous billows affright,
Nor power nor wealth can avail us,
But skilful industry steers right.

To these measures, and their laws, may be reduced every species of English verse.

Glover. Our versification admits of few licences, except a synalæpha, or elision of e in the before a vowel, as th' eternal, and more rarely of o in to, as t' accept; and a synæresis, by which two short vowels coalesce into one syllable, as question, special; or a word is contracted by the expulsion of a short vowel before a liquid, as av'rice, temp'rance.

Gay. Thus have I collected rules and examples by which the English language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a master to those that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for such as are not yet initiated in the schools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at last ineffectual.

Ballad.

DICTIONARY

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A, THE first letter of the European alphabets, has, in the English language, three different sounds; which may be termed the broad, open, and slender.

The broad sound, resembling that of the German a, is found in many of our monosyllables, as all, wall, malt, salt; in which a is pronounced as au in cause, or aw in law. Many of these words were anciently written with au, as fault, waulk; which happens to be still retained in fault. This was probably the ancient sound of the Saxons, since it is almost uniformly preserved in the rustic pronunciation and the northern dialects, as maun for man, haund for hand.

A open, not unlike the a of the Italians, is found in father, rather, and more obscurely in fancy, fast, &c.

A, slender, or close, is the peculiar a of the English language, resembling the sound of the French e masculine, or diphthong ai in pais; or perhaps a middle sound between them, or between the a and e: to this the Arabic a is said nearly to approach. Of this sound we have examples in the words place, face, waste; and all those that terminate in ation, as relation, nation, generation.

A is short, as glass, grass; or long, as glaze, graze: it is marked long, generally by an e final, plane; or by an i added, as plain. The short a is open, the long a close.

1. A, an article set before nouns of the singular number; a man, a tree, denoting the number one; as a man is coming, that is, no more than one; or an indefinite indication, as a man may come this way, that is, any man. This article has no plural signification. Before a word beginning with a vowel, it is written an; as, an ox, an egg, of which a is the contraction.

2. A, taken materially, or for itself, is a noun; as, a great A, a little a.

3. A is placed before a participle, or participial noun; and is considered by Wallis as a contradiction of at, when it is put before a word denoting some action not yet finished; as, I am a walking. It also seems to be anciently contracted from at, when placed before local surnames; as, Thomas a Becket. In other cases, it seems to signify to, like the French à.

A hunting Chloe went. Prior.

They go a begging to a bankrupt's door. Dryden.

May peace still slumber by these purling fountains!
Which we may every year
Find, when we come a fishing here. Wotton.

Now the men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled. Wotton.

He will knap the spears a pieces with his teeth. Mores Antid. Athm.

Another falls a ringing a Pescennius Niger, and judiciously distinguishes the sound of it to be modern. Addison on Medals.

4. A has a peculiar signification, denoting the proportion of one thing to another. Thus we say, The landlord hath a hundred a year; The ship's crew gained a thousand pounds a man.

The river Inn passes through a wide open country, during all its course through Bavaria; which is a voyage of two days, after the rate of twenty leagues a day. Addison on Italy.

5. A is used in burlesque poetry, to lengthen out a syllable, without adding to the sense.

For cloves and nutmegs to the line a
And even for oranges to China. Dryden.

6. A is sometimes, in familiar writings, put by a barbarous corruption for he; as, will a come, for will he come.

7. A, in composition, seems to have sometimes the power of the French a in these phrases, a droit, a gauche, &c. and sometimes to be contracted from at; as, aside, aslope, afoot, asleep, athirst, aware.

I gin to be a weary of the sun;
And wish the state of th' world were now undone.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

And now a breeze from shore began to blow,
The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails
Let fall, to court the wind, and catch the gales.
Dryden's Ceyx and Alcyone.

A little house with trees a row,
And like its master very low Pope, Hor.

8. A is sometimes redundant; as, arise, arouse, awake; the same with rise, rouse, wake.

9. A, in abbreviation, stands for artium, or arts; as, A. B. bachelor of arts, artium baccalaureus; A. M. master of arts, artium magister; or, anno; as, A. D. anno domini.

AB, at the beginning of the names of places, generally shews that they have some relation to an abbey, as Abingdon. Gibson.

ABA'CKE. adv. [from back.] Backwards. Obsolete.

But when they came where thou thy skill didst show,
They drew abacke, as half with shame confound.
Spens. Past.

ABA'CTOR. n. s. [Latin.] One who drives away or steals cattle in herds, or great numbers at once; in distinction from those that steal only a sheep or two. Blount.

A'BACUS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A counting-table, anciently used in calculations.

2. [In architecture] The uppermost member of a column, which serves as a sort of crowning both to the capital and column. Dict.

ABA'FT. adv. [of abaftan, Sax. behind.] From the fore-part of the ship, towards the stern. Dict.

ABAI'SANCE. n. s. [from the French abaisser, to depress, to bring down.] An act of reverence, a bow. Obeysance is considered by Skinner as a corruption of abaisance, but is now universally used.

To ABALIENATE. v. a. [from abalieno, Lat.] To make that another's, which was our own before. A term of the civil law, not much used in common speech.

ABALIENA'TION. n. s. [Lat. abalienatio.] The act of giving up one's right to another person; or a making over an estate, goods, or chattels by sale, or due course of law. Dict.

To ABA'ND. v. a. [A word contracted from abandon, but not now in use. See ABANDON.] To forsake.

They stronger are
Than they which sought at first their helping hand,
And Vortiger enforced the kingdom to aband.
Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 10.

To ABA'NDON. v. a. [Fr. abandonner Derived, according to Menage, from the Italian abandonare, which signifies to forsake his colours; bandum [vexillum] deserere. Pasquier thinks it a coalition of a ban donner, to give up to a proscription; in which sense we, at this day, mention the ban of the empire. Ban, in our own old dialect, signifies a curse; and to abandon, if considered as compounded between French and Saxon, is exactly equivalent to diris devovere.]

1. To give up, resign, or quit; often followed by the particle to.

If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow,
As it is spoke, she never will admit me.
Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

The passive gods behold the Greeks defile
Their temples, and abandon to the spoil
Their own abodes; we, feeble few, conspire
To save a sinking town, involv'd in fire.
Dryd. Æneid.

Who is he so abandoned to sottish credulity, as to think, that a clod of earth in a sack may ever, by eternal shaking, receive the fabric of man's body? Bentley's Sermons.

Must he, whose altars on the Phrygian shore,
With frequent rites, and pure, avow'd thy pow'r,
Be doom'd the worst of human ills to prove,
Unbless'd, abandon'd to the wrath of Jove?
Pope's Odyssey, b. i. l. 80.

2. To desert; to forsake: in an ill sense.

The princes using the passions of fearing evil, and desiring to escape, only to serve the rule of virtue, not to abandon one's self, leapt to a rib of the ship. Sidney, b. ii.

Seeing the hurt stag alone,
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends,
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakesp. As you like it.

What fate a wretched fugitive attends,
Scorn'd by my foes, abandon'd by my friends.
Dryd. Æneid, 2.

But to the parting goddess thus she pray'd;
Propitious still be present to my aid,
Nor quite abandon your once-favour'd maid.
Dryd. Fab.

3. To forsake, to leave.

He boldly spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestall'd place at erst,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee.
Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 4 stanz. 39.

To ABA'NDON O'VER. v. a. [a form of writing not usual, perhaps not exact] To give up to, to resign.

Look on me as a man abandon'd o'er
To an eternal lethargy of love;
To pull, and pinch, and wound me, cannot cure,
And but disturb the quiet of my death.
Dryd. Sp. Friar.

ABA'NDONED. particip. adj. Corrupted in the highest degree; as, an abandoned wretch. In this sense, it is a contraction of a longer form, abandoned [given up] to wickedness.

ABA'NDONING. [A verbal noun from abandon.] Desertion, forsaking.

He hoped his past meritorious actions might outweigh his present abandoning the thought of future action. Clarend. b. viii.

ABA'NDONMENT. n. s [abandonnement, Fr.]

1. The act of abandoning.
2. The state of being abandoned. Dict.

ABANNI'TION. n. s. [Lat. abannitio] A banishment for one or two years, for manslaughter. Obsolete. Dict.

To ABA'RE. v. a. [abaman Sax.] To make bare, uncover, or disclose. Dict.

ABARTICULA'TION. n. s. [from ab, from, and articulus, a joint, Lat.] A good and apt construction of the bones, by which they move strongly and easily; or that species of articulation that has manifest motion. Dict.

To ABA'SE. v. a. [Fr. abaisser, from the Lat. basis, or bassus, a barbarous word, signifying low, base.]

1. To depress, to lower.

It is a point of cunning to wait upon him with whom you speak with your eye; yet with a demure abasing of it sometimes. Bacon.

2. To cast down, to depress, to bring low, in a figurative and personal sense, which is the common use.

Happy shepherd, to the gods be thankful, that to thy advancement their wisdoms have thee abased. Sidney, b. i.

Behold every one that is proud, and abase him. Job, xl. 11.

With unresisted might the monarch reigns;
He levels mountains, and he raises plains;
And, not regarding diff'rence of degree,
Abas'd your daughter and exalted me. Dryd. Fa.

If the mind be curbed and humbled too much in children; if their spirits be abased and broken much by too strict an hand over them; they lose all their vigour and industry. Locke on Edu. §. 46.

ABA'SED. adj. [with heralds] a term used of the wings of eagles, when the top looks downwards toward the point of the shield; or when the wings are shut; the natural way of bearing them being spread with the top pointing to the chief of the angle. Bailey. Chambers

ABA'SEMENT. n. s. The state of being brought low; the act of bringing low; depression.

There is an abasement because of glory; and there is that lifteth up his head from a low estate. Ecclesiasticus, xx. 11.

To ABA'SH. v. a. [See BASHFUL. Perhaps from abaisser, French.]

1. To put into confusion; to make ashamed. It generally implies a sudden impression of shame.

They heard, and were abash'd.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 331.

This heard th' imperious queen sat mute with fear;
Nor further durst incense the gloomy thunderer.
Silence was in the court at this rebuke:
Nor could the gods, abash'd, sustain their sovereign's look. Dryden's Fables.

2. The passive admits the particles at, sometimes of, before the casual noun.

In no wise speak against the truth, but be abashed of the error of thy ignorance. Eccles. iv. 25.

I said unto her, from whence is this kid? Is it not stolen? But she replied upon me, it was given for a gift, more than the wages: however, I did not believe her, and I was abashed at her. Tob. ii. 13, 14.

In the admiration only of weak minds
Led captive: cease t' admire, and all her plumes
Fall flat, and sink into a trivial toy,
At every sudden slighting quite abasht.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 225.

The little Cupids hov'ring round,
(As pictures prove) with garlands crown'd,
Abash'd at what they saw and heard,
Flew off, nor ever more appear'd. Swift's Miscell.

To ABATE. v. a. [from the French abattre, to beat down.]

1. To lessen, to diminish.

Who can tell whether the divine wisdom, to abate the glory of those kings, did not reserve this work to be done by a queen; that it might appear to be his own immediate work? Sir J. Davies on Irel.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.
Shakespeare.

Here we see the hopes of great benefit and light from expositors and commentators, are in a great part abated; and those who have most need of their help, can receive but little from them.
Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

2. To deject, or depress the mind.

This iron world
Brings down the stoutest hearts to lowest state;
For misery doth bravest minds abate.
Spens. Hubberd's Tale.

Have the power still
To banish your defenders, till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives to some nation
That won you without blows? Shakesp. Coriol.

Time that changes all, yet changes us in vain;
The body, not the mind; nor can controul
Th' immortal vigour, or abate the soul.
Dryd. Æneid.

3. In commerce, to let down the price in selling, sometimes to beat down the price in buying.

To ABA'TE. v. n.

1. To grow less; as, his passion abates; the storm abates. It is used sometimes with the particle of before the thing lessened.

Our physicians have observed, that in process of time, some diseases have abated of their virulence, and have, in a manner worn out their malignity, so as to be no longer mortal.
Dryden's Hind and Panther.

2. [In common law.]

It is in law used both actively and neuterly; as, to abate a castle, to beat it down; to abate a writ, is, by some exception, to defeat or overthrow it. A stranger abateth; that is, entereth upon a house or land void by the death of him that last possessed it, before the heir take his possession: and so keepeth him out. Wherefore, as he that putteth out him in possession, is said to disseise; so he that steppeth in between the former possessor and his heir, is said to abate. In the neuter signification, thus: The writ of the demandant shall abate; that is, shall be disabled, frustrated, or overthrown. The appeal abateth by covin; that is, that the accusation is defeated by deceit. Cowell.

3. [In horsemanship.] A horse is said to abate or take down his curvets; when, working upon curvets, he puts his two hind legs to the ground both at once, and observes the same exactness in all the times. Dict.

ABA'TEMENT. n. s. [abatement, Fr.]

1. The act of abating or lessening.

Xenophon tells us, that the city contained about ten thousand houses; and allowing one man to every house, who could have any share in the government (the rest consisting of women, children, and servants), and making other obvious abatements, these tyrants, if they had been careful to adhere together, might have been a majority even of the people collective.

Swift on the Contests of Athens and Rome.

2. The state of being abated.
Coffee has, in common with all nuts, an oil strongly combined and entangled with earthy particles. The most noxious part of the oil exhales in roasting, to the abatement of near one quarter of its weight. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The sum or quantity taken away by the act of abating.
The law of works is that law, which requires perfect obedience, without remission or abatement; so that, by that law, a man cannot be just, or justified, without an exact performance of every tittle. Locke.

4. The cause of abating; extenuation.
As our advantages towards practising and promoting piety and virtue were greater than those of other men; so will our excuse be less, if we neglect to make use of them. We cannot plead in abatement of our guilt, that we were ignorant of our duty, under the prepossession of ill habits, and the bias of a wrong education. Atterbury's Sermons.

5. [In law.] The act of the abator; as, the abatement of the heir into the land before he hath agreed with the lord. The affection or passion of the thing abated; as, abatement of the writ Cowell.

6. [With heralds.] An accidental mark, which being added to a coat of arms, the dignity of it is abased, by reason of some stain or dishonourable quality of the bearer. Dict.

ABA'TER, n. s. The agent or cause by which an abatement is procured; that by which any thing is lessened.
Abaters of acrimony or sharpness, are expressed oils of ripe vegetables, and all preparations of such; as of almonds, pistachios, and other nuts. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ABA'TOR, n. s. [a law term] One who intrudes into houses or land, void by the death of the former possessor, and yet not entered upon or taken up by his heir. Dict.

A'BATUDE, n. s. [old records.] Any thing diminished. Bailey

A'BATURE. n. s. [from abatre, French.] Those sprigs of grass which are thrown down by a stag in his passing by. Dict.

ABB. n. s. The yarn on a weaver's warp; a term among clothiers. Chambers.

A'BBA. n. s. [Heb. אב] A Syriac word, which signifies father.

A'BBACY. n. s. [Lat abbatia.] The rights or privileges of an abbot. See ABBEY
According to Felinus, an abbacy is the dignity itself, since an abbot is a term or word of dignity, and not of office; and, therefore, even a secular person, who has the care of souls, is sometimes, in the canon law, also stiled an abbot.
Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

A'BBESS. n. s. [Lat. abbatissa, from whence the Saxon abuburre, then probably abbatess, and by contraction ablesse in Fr. and abbess, Eng.] The superiour or governess of a nunnery or monastery of women.
They fled
Into this abbey, whither we pursued them;
And here the abbess shuts the gate on us,
And will not suffer us to fetch him out.
Shakes. Com. of Errors.
I have a sister, abbess in Terceras,
Who lost her lover on her bridal day.
Dryd. D. Sebast.
Constantia, as soon as the solemnities of her reception were over, retired with the abbess into her own apartment. Addison.

A'BBEY, or ABBY. n. s. [Lat. abbatia; from whence probably first ABBACY; which see.] A monastery of religious persons, whether men or women; distinguished from religious houses of other denominations by larger privileges. See ABBOT.
With easy roads he came to Leicester;
Lodg'd in the abbey, where the reverend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably received him.
Shakes.

A'BBEY-LUBBER. n. s. [See LUBBER.] A slothful loiterer in a religious house, under pretence of retirement and austerity.
This is no Father Dominic, no huge overgrown abbey-lubber; this is but a diminutive sucking friar. Dryd. Sp. Fr.

A'BBOT. n. s. [in the lower Latin abbas, from אב, father, which sense was still implied; so that the abbots were called patres, and abbesses matres monasterii. Thus Fortunatus to the abbot Paternus: Nominis officium jure, Paterne, geris.] The chief of a convent, or fellowship of canons. Of these, some in England were mitred, some not: those that were mitred, were exempted from the jurisdiction of the diocesan, having in themselves episcopal authority within their precincts, and being also lords of parliament. The other sort were subject to the diocesan in all spiritual government Cowell.
See ABBEY.

A'BBOTSHIP. n. s. The state or privilege of an abbot. Dict.

To ABBREVIATE. v.a. [Lat. abbreviare.]
1. To shorten by contraction of parts, without loss of the main substance; to abridge.
It is one thing to abbreviate by contracting, another by cutting off. Bacon, Essay 26.
The only invention of late years, which hath contributed towards politeness in discourse, is that of abbreviating or reducing words of many syllables into one, by lopping off the rest. Swift.
2. To shorten; to cut short.
Set the length of their days before the flood; which were abbreviated after, and contracted into hundreds and threescores.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 6.

ABBREVIA'TION. n. s.
1. The act of abbreviating.
2. The means used to abbreviate, as characters signifying whole words; words contracted.
Such is the propriety and energy in them all, that they never can be changed, but to disadvantage, except in the circumstance of using abbreviations. Swift.

ABBREVIA'TOR. n. s. [abbreviateur, Fr.] One who abbreviates or abridges.

ABBRE'VIATURE. n.s. [abbreviatura, Lat.]
1. A mark used for the sake of shortening.
2. A compendium or abridgment.
He is a good man, who grieves rather for him that injures him, than for his own suffering; who prays for him that wrongs him, forgiving all his faults; who sooner shews mercy than anger; who offers violence to his appetite, in all things endeavouring to subdue the flesh to the spirit. This is an excellent abbreviature of the whole duty of a Christian. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

ABBREUVOI'R. [in French, a watering-place. Ital. abbeverato, dal verbo bevere. Lat. bibere, Abbeverari i cavalli. This word is derived by Menage, not much acquainted with the Teutonic dialects, from adbibare for adbibere; but more probably it comes from the same root with brew. See BREW.] Among masons, the joint or juncture of two stones, or the interstice between two stones to be filled up with mortar. Dict.

A'BBY. See ABBEY.

A, B, C.
1. The alphabet: as, he has not learned his a, b, c.
2. The little book by which the elements of reading are taught.
Then comes question like an a, b, c, book.
Shakespears.

To ABDICATE v. a. [Lat. abdico.] To give up right; to resign; to lay down an office.
Old Saturn, here, with upcast eyes,
Beheld his abdicated skies. Addison.

ABDICA'TION. n. s. [abdicatio, Lat.] The act of abdicating; resignation; quitting an office by one's own proper act before the usual or stated expiration.
Neither doth it appear how a prince's abdication can make any other sort of vacancy in the throne, than would be caused by his death; since he cannot abdicate for his children, otherwise than by his own consent in form to a bill from the two houses.
Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England Man.

A'BDICATIVE. adj. That causes or implies an abdication. Dict.

A'BDICATIVE. adj. [from abdo, to hide.] That which has the power or quality of hiding. Dict.

ABDO'MEN. n. s. [Lat from abdo, to hide.] A cavity commonly called the lower venter or belly: it contains the stomach, guts, liver, spleen, bladder, and is within lined with a membrane called the peritonæum. The lower part is called the hypogastrium; the foremost part is divided into the epigastrium, the right and left hypochondria, and the navel; 'tis bounded above by the cartilago ensiformis and the diaphragm, sideways by the short or lower ribs, and behind by the vertebræ of the loins, the bones of the coxendix, that of the pubes, and os sacrum. It is covered with several muscles, from whose alternate relaxations and contractions, in respiration, digestion is forwarded, and the due motion of all the parts therein contained promoted, both for secretion and expulsion. Quincy.
The abdomen consists of parts containing and contained. Wiseman's Surgery.

ABDO'MINAL. } adj. Relating to the ab-
ABDO'MINOUS. } domen.

To ABDU'CE. v. a. [Lat. abduco.] To draw to a different part; to withdraw one part from another: A word chiefly used in physic or science.

If we abduce the eye unto either corner, the object will not duplicate; for, in that position, the axis of the cones remain in the same plain, as is demonstrated in the optics delivered by Galen.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 20.

ABDU'CENT. adj. Muscles abducent are those which serve to open or pull back divers parts of the body; their opposites being called adducent. Dict.

ABDUC'TION. n. s. [abductio, Lat.]
1. The art of drawing apart, or withdrawing one part from another.
2. A particular form of argument.

ABDUC'TOR. n. s. [abductor, Lat.] The name given by anatomists to the muscles, which serve to draw back the several members.

He supposed the constrictors of the eyelids must be strengthened in the supercilious; the abductors in drunkards, and contemplative men, who have the same steady and grave motion of the eye.
Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus

ABECEDA'RIAN. n. s. [from the names of a, b, c, the three first letters of the alphabet.] He that teaches or learns the alphabet, or first rudiments of literature.

This word is used by Wood in his Athenæ Oxonienses, where mentioning Farnaby the critic, he relates, that, in some part of his life, he was reduced to follow the trade of an abecedarian by his misfortunes.

A'BECEDARY. adj. [See ABECEDARIAN.]
1. Belonging to the alphabet.
2. Inscribed with the alphabet.

This is pretended from the sympathy of two needles touched with the loadstone, and placed in the centre of two abecedary circles, or rings of letters, described round about them, one friend keeping one, and another the other, and agreeing upon an hour wherein they will communicate.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

ABE'D. adv. [from a, for at, and bed.] In bed.

It was a shame for them to mar their complexions, yea and conditions too, with long lying abed: when she was of their age, she would have made a handkerchief by that time o'day. Sydney, b. ii.

She has not been abed, but in her chapel
All night devoutly watch'd. Dryd. Span. Friar.

ABE'RRANCE. } n. s. [from aberro, Lat.]
ABE'RRANCY. } to wander from the right way. A deviation from the right way; an errour; a mistake; a false opinion.

They do not only swarm with errours, but vices depending thereon. Thus they commonly affect no man any farther than he deserts his reason, or complies with their aberrancies.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

Could a man be composed to such an advantage of constitution, that it should not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this second nature would alter the crasis of his understanding, and render it as obnoxious to aberrances, as now.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica, c. 16.

ABE'RRANT. adj. [from aberrans, Lat.] Deviating, wandering from the right or known way. Dict.

ABERRA'TION. n. s. [from aberratio, Lat.] The act of deviating from the common or from the right track.

If it be a mistake, there is no heresy in such an harmless aberration; the probability of it will render it a lapse of easy pardon.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica, c. 11.

ABE'RRING. part. [from the verb aberr, of aberro, Lat.] Wandering, going astray.

Of the verb aberr I have found no example.

Divers were out in their account, aberring several ways from the true and just compute, and calling that one year, which perhaps might be another.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

To ABERU'NCATE. v. a. [averunco, Lat.] To pull up by the roots; to extirpate utterly. Dict.

To ABET. v. a. [from betan, Sax. signifying to enkindle or animate.] To push forward another, to support him in his designs, by connivance, encouragement, or help. It was once indifferent, but is almost always taken by modern writers in an ill sense; as may be seen in ABETTER.

To abet signifieth, in our common law, as much as to encourage or set on. Cowell.

Then shall I soon, quoth he, return again,
Abet that virgin's cause disconsolate,
And shortly back return. Fairy Queen, b. i.

A widow who by solemn vows
Contracted to me, for my spouse,
Combin'd with him to break her word,
And has abetted all. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.

Men lay so great weight upon right opinions, and eagerness of abetting them, that they account that the mum necessarium. Decay of Piety.

They abetted both parties in the civil war, and always furnished supplies to the weaker side, lest there should be an end put to these fatal divisions.
Addison. Freeholder, No. 28.

ABE'TMENT. n. s. The act of abetting. Dict.

ABE'TTER, or ABE'TTOR. n. s. He that abets; the supporter or encourager of another.

Whilst calumny has two such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and designing, they will be traducing. Govern. of the Tongue.

You shall be still plain Torrismond with me,
Th' abettor, partner (if you like the name),
The husband of a tyrant, but no king;
Till you deserve that title by your justice.
Dryden's Spanish Friar.

These considerations, though they may have no influence on the multitude, ought to sink into the minds of those who are their abettors, and who, if they escape punishment here, must know, that these several mischiefs will be one day laid to their charge. Addison. Freeholder, No. 50.

ABEY'ANCE. n. s. [from the French aboyer, allatrare, to bark at.] This word, in Littleton, cap. Discontinuance, is thus used. The right of fee-simple lieth in abeyance, when it is all only in the remembrance, intendment and consideration of the law. The frank tenement of the glebe of the parsonage, is in no man during the time that the parsonage is void, but is in abeyance. Cowell.

ABGREGA'TION, n. s. [abgregatio, Lat.] A separation from the flock. Dict.

To ABHO'R. v. a. [abhorreo, Lat.] To hate with acrimony; to detest to extremity; to loath; to abominate.

Whilst I was big in clamour, came a man,
Who having seen me in my worser state,
Shunn'd my abhorr'd society. Shakes. K. Lear.

Justly thou abhorr'st
That son, who on the quiet state of man
Such trouble brought, affecting to subdue
Rational liberty. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. xii. l. 79.

The self-same thing they will abhor
One way, and long another for. Hudibr. p. i. cant. 1.

A church of England man abhors the humour of the age, in delighting to fling scandals upon the clergy in general; which, besides the disgrace to the reformation, and to religion itself, cast an ignominy upon the kingdom. Swift. Ch. of Eng.

ABHO'RRENCE. } n. s. [from abhor.]
ABHO'RRENCY. }
1. The act of abhorring, detestation.

It draws upon him the hatred and abhorrence of all men here; and subjects him to the wrath of God hereafter. South's Sermons.

2. The disposition to abhor, hatred.

Even a just and necessary defence does, by giving men acquaintance with war, take off somewhat from the abhorrence of it, and insensibly dispose them to hostilities.
Decay of Piety.

The first tendency to any injustice that appears, must be suppressed with a show of wonder and abhorrency in the parents and governours.
Locke on Education, § 110.

ABHO'RRENT. adj. [from abhor.]
1. Struck with abhorrence; loathing.

For if the worlds
In worlds inclosed could on his senses burst,
He would abhorrent turn. Thomson's Sum. l. 310.

2. Contrary to, foreign from, inconsistent with. It is used with the particles from or to, but more properly with from.

This I conceive to be an hypothesis, well worthy a rational belief; and yet it is so abhorrent from the vulgar, that they would as soon believe Anaxagoras, that snow is black, as him that should affirm it is not white. Glanville's Scepsis Scient. c. 12.

Why then these foreign thoughts of state employments,
Abhorrent to your function and your breeding?
Poor droning truants of unpractis'd cells,
Bred in the fellowship of bearded boys,
What wonder is it if you know not men?
Dryden.

ABHO'RRER. n. s. [from abhor.] The person that abhors; a hater; detester.

The lower clergy were railed at, for disputing the power of the bishops, by the known abhorrers of episcopacy, and abused for doing nothing in the convocations, by these very men who wanted to bind up their hands.
Swift. Examiner, No. 21.

ABHO'RRING. The object of abhorrence. This seems not to be the proper use of the participial noun.

They shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against Me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched, and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.
Isaiah, lxvi. 44.

To ABI'DE. v. n. I abode or abid. [from bidian, or aubidian, Sax.]
1. To dwell in a place; not remove; to stay.

Thy servant became surety for the lad unto my father, saying, If I bring him not unto thee, then I shall bear the blame to my father for ever. Now therefore I pray thee, let thy servant abide instead of the lad, a bondman to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren.
Gen. xliv. 32, 33.

2. To dwell.

The Marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled
To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.
Shakesp. Richard III.

Those who apply themselves to learning, are forced to acknowledge one God, incorruptible and unbegotten; who is the only true being, and abides for ever above the highest heavens, from whence He beholds all the things that are done in heaven and earth.
Stillingfl. Defence of Disc. on Rom. Idolat.

3. To remain; not cease or fail; to be immovable.

They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever. Psalm cxxv. 1.

4. To continue in the same state.

The fear of the Lord tendeth to life; and he that hath it shall abide satisfied. Prov. xix. 23.

There can be no study without time; and the mind must abide and dwell upon things, or be always a stranger to the inside of them. South.

5. To endure without offence, anger, or contradiction.

Who can abide, that, against their own doctors, six whole books should by their fatherhoods be imperiously obtruded upon God and his church? Hall.

6. It is used with the particle with before a person, and at or in before a place.

It is better that I give her to thee, than that I should give her to another man: Abide with me. Gen. xxix. 19.

For thy servant vowed a vow, while I abode at Geshur in Syria, saying, if the Lord shall bring me again indeed to Jerusalem, then I will serve the Lord. 2 Sam. xv. 8.

7. It is used with by before a thing; as, to abide by his testimony; to abide by his own skill; that is, to rely upon them; to abide by an opinion; to maintain it; to abide by a man, is also, to defend or support him. But these forms are something low.

Of the participle abid, I have found only the example in Woodward, and should rather determine that abide in the active sense has no passive participle, or compounded preterite.

To ABI'DE. v. a.

1. To wait for, expect, attend, wait upon, await; used of things prepared for persons, as well as of persons expecting things.

Home is he brought, and laid in sumptuous bed,
Where many skilful leeches him abide,
To salve his hurts. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. 5. st. 17.

While lions war, and battle for their dens,
Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity.
Shakes. Hen. VI. p. 3.

Bonds and afflictions abide me. Acts, xx. 23.

2. To bear or support the consequences of a thing.

Ah me! they little know
How dearly I abide that boast so vain.
Milton's Par. Lost.

3. To bear or support, without being conquered or destroyed.

But the Lord he is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting king: At his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation. Jer. x. 10.

It must be allowed a fair presumption in favour of the truth of my doctrines, that they have abid a very rigorous test now for above thirty years, and the more strictly they are looked into, the more they are confirmed. Woodward, Letter i.

4. To bear without aversion; in which sense it is commonly used with a negative.

Thou canst not abide Tiridates; this is but love of thyself. Sidney, b. ii.

Thy vile race,
Though thou didst learn, had that in't, which good natures
Could not abide to be with; therefore wast thou
Deservedly confin'd unto this rock.
Shakes. Tempest.

5. To bear or suffer.

Girt with circumfluous tides,
He still calamitous constraint abides.
Pope's Odyss. b. iv l. 750.

ABI'DER. n. s. [from abide.] The person that abides or dwells in a place; perhaps that lives or endures. A word little in use.

ABI'DING. n. s. [from abide.] Continuance; stay; fixed state.

We are strangers before Thee and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding.
1 Chron. xxix. 15.

The air in that region is so violently removed, and carried about with such swiftness, as nothing in that place can consist or have abiding.
Raleigh's History of the World.

A'BJECT. adj. [abjectus Lat.] thrown away as of no value.

1. Mean; worthless; base; groveling: spoken of persons, or their qualities.

Rebellion
Came like itself in base and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth goaded with rage,
And countenanc'd by boys and beggary.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

I was at first, as other beasts that graze
The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low.
Milt. Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 571.

Honest men, who tell their sovereigns what they expect from them, and what obedience they shall be always ready to pay them, are not upon an equal foot with base and abject flatterers.
Addison's Whig Examiner.

2. Being of no hope or regard; used of condition.

The rarer thy example stands,
By how much from the top of wond'rous glory,
Strongest of mortal men,
To lowest pitch of abject fortune thou art fall'n.
Milton's Sampson Agonistes.

We see man and woman in the highest innocence and perfection, and in the most abject state of guilt and infirmity.
Addison, Spectator, No. 279.

3. Mean and despicable; used of actions.

The rapine is s · abject and profane,
They not from trifles, nor from gods refrain.
Dryden's Juvenal, Sat 8.

To what base ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urg'd through sacred lust of praise?
Pope's Essay on Criticism.

A'BJECT. n. s. A man without hope; a man whose miseries are irretrievable; one of the lowest condition.

Yea, the abjects gathered themselves together against me. Psalm xxxv. 15.

To ABJE'CT. v. a. [abjicio Lat.] To throw away. A word rarely used.

ABJE'CTEDNESS. n. s. [from abject.] The state of an abject.

Our Saviour would love at no less rate than death; and, from the supereminent height of glory, stooped and abased himself to the sufferance of the extremest of indignities, and sunk himself to the bottom of abjectedness, to exalt our condition to the contrary extreme. Boyle's Works.

ABJE'CTION. n. s. [from abject.] Meanness of mind; want of spirit; servility; baseness.

That this should be termed baseness, abjection of mind, or servility, is it credible?
Hooker, b. v. § 47.

The just medium lies betwixt pride and abjection, the two extremes. L'Estrange.

A'BJECTLY. adv. [from abject.] In an abject manner, meanly, basely, servilely, contemptibly.

A'BJECTNESS. n. s. [from abject.] Abjection, servility, meanness.

Servility and abjectness of humour is implicitly involved in the charge of lying.
Government of the Tongue, § 8.

By humility I mean not the abjectness of a base mind: but a prudent care not to over-value ourselves upon any account.
Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 7.

ABI'LITY. n. s. [Habileté, Fr.]

1. The power to do any thing, whether depending upon skill, or riches, or strength, or any other quality.

Of singing thou hast got the reputation,
Good Thyrsis, mine I yield to thy ability;
My heart doth seek another estimation.
Sidney, b. i.

If aught in my ability may serve
To lighten what thou suffer'st, and appease
Thy mind with what amends is in my pow'r.
Milton's Sampson Agonistes, l. 744.

They gave after their ability unto the treasure.
Ezra, ii. 69.

If any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ. 1. Pet. iv. 11.

Wherever we find our abilities too weak for the performance, he assures us of the assistance of his Holy Spirit. Roger's Sermons.

2. Capacity of mind; force of understanding; mental power.

Children in whom there was no blemish, but well-favoured, and skilful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had ability in them to stand in the king's palace. Dan. i. 4.

3. When it has the plural number, abilities, it frequently signifies the faculties or powers of the mind, and sometimes the force of understanding given by nature, as distinguished from acquired qualifications.

Whether it may be thought necessary, that in certain tracts of country, like what we call parishes, there should be one man, at least, of abilities to read and write? Swift.

ABINTE'STATE. adj. [of ab from, and intestatus, Lat.] A term of law, implying him that inherits from a man, who, though he had the power to make a will, yet did not make it.

To A'BJUGATE, v. a. [abjugo, Lat.] To unyoke, to uncouple. Dict.

To ABJU'RE. v. a. [abjuro, Lat.]

1. To cast off upon oath, to swear not to do or not to have something.

Either to die the death, or to abjure
For ever the society of man.
Shakespeare's Midsum. Night's Dream.

No man, therefore, that hath not abjured his reason, and sworn allegiance to a preconceived fantastical hypothesis, can undertake the defence of such a supposition. Hale.

2. To retract, recant, or abnegate a position upon oath.

ABJURA'TION n. s. [from abjure.] The act of abjuring. The oath taken for that end.

Until Henry VIII. his time, if a man, having committed felony, could go into a church, or church-yard, before he were apprehended, he might not be taken from thence to the usual trial of law, but confessing his fault to the justices, or to the coroner, gave his oath to forsake the realm for ever, which was called abjuration.

There are some abjurations still in force among us here in England; as, by the statute of the 25th of king Charles II. all persons that are admitted into any office, civil or military, must take the test; which is an abjuration of some doctrines of the church of Rome.

There is likewise another oath of abjuration, which laymen and clergymen are both obliged to take; and that is to abjure the Pretender.
Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici

To ABLACTATE. v. a. [ablacto, Lat.] To wean from the breast.

ABLACTA'TION. n. s. One of the methods of grafting; and, according to the signification of the word, as it were a weaning of a cyon by degrees from its mother stock; not cutting it off wholly from the stock, till it is firmly united to that on which it is grafted.

ABLAQUEA'TION. n. s. [ablaqueatio, Lat.] The art or practice of opening the ground about the roots of trees, to let the air and water operate upon them.

Trench the ground and make it ready for the spring: Prepare also soil, and use it where you have occasion: Dig borders. Uncover as yet roots of trees, where ablaqueation is requisite.
Evelyn's Kalendar.

The tenure in chief is the very root that doth maintain this silver stem, that by many rich and fruitful branches spreadeth itself: so if it be suffered to starve, by want of ablaqueation, and other good husbandry, this yearly fruit will much decrease. Bacon's Office of Alienations.

ABLATION. n. s. [ablatio, Lat.] The act of taking away.

A'BLATIVE. n. a. [ablativus, Lat.]

1. That which takes away.
2. The sixth case of the Latin nouns; the case which, among other significations, includes the person from whom something is taken away. A term of grammar.

A'BLE. adj. [habile, Fr. habilis, Lat.] skilful ready.

1. Having strong faculties or great strength or knowledge, riches, or any other power of mind, body, or fortune.

Henry VII. was not afraid of an able man, as Lewis the Eleventh was. But, contrariwise, he was served by the ablest men that were to be found; without which his affairs could not have prospered as they did. Bacon's Henry VII.

Such gambol faculties he hath, that shew a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

2. Having power sufficient; enabled.

All mankind acknowledge themselves able and sufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South's Serm.

ABNO'RMOUS. adj. [abnormis, Lat. out of rule.] Irregular, mishapen. Dict.

ABO'ARD. adv. [a sea-term, but adopted into common language; derived immediately from the French à bord, as, aller à bord, envoyer à bord. Bord is itself a word of very doubtful original, and perhaps, in its different acceptations, deducible from different roots. Bord, in the ancient Saxon, signified a house; in which sense, to go aboard, is to take up residence in a ship.]

1. In a ship.

He loudly call'd to such as were aboard,
The little bark unto the shore to draw,
And him to ferry over that deep ford.
Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 6

He might land them, if it pleased him, or otherwise keep them aboard.
Sir W. Raleigh's Essays

2. Into a ship.

When morning rose, I sent my mates to bring Supplies of water from a neighb'ring spring,
Whilst I the motions of the winds explor'd;
Then summon'd in my crew, and went aboard.
Addison's Ovid's Metamorphoses, b. iii.

ABO'DE. n. s. [from abide.]

1. Habitation, dwelling, place of residence.

But I know thy abode and thy going out, and thy coming in. 2 Kings, xix. 27.

Others may use the ocean as their road,
Only the English make it their abode;
Whose ready sails with eve y wind can fly,
And make a cov'nant with th' inconstant sky.
Waller.

2. Stay, continuance in a place.

Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode,
Not I, but my affairs, have made you wait.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Making a short abode in Sicily the second time, landing in Italy, and making the war, may be reasonably judged the business but of ten months.
Dryden's Dedicat. to Æneid.

The woodcocks early visit, and abode
Of long continuance in our temp'rate clime,
Foretel a liberal harvest. Phillips.

3. To make abode. To dwell, to reside, to inhabit.

Deep in a cave the Sibyl makes abode;
Thence full of fate returns, and of the God.
Dryd. Æn. 6.

To ABO'DE. v. a. [See BODE.] To foretoken or foreshow; to be a prognostic, to be ominous. It is taken, with its derivatives, in the sense either of good or ill.

Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow'd, was
A thing inspir'd; and, not consulting, broke
Into a general prophecy, that this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this piece, aboded
The sudden breach of it.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

ABO'DEMENT. n. s. [from To abode.] A secret anticipation of something future; an impression upon the mind of some event to come; prognostication; omen.

I like not this.
For many men that stumble at the threshold,
Are well foretold that danger lurks within.—
—Tush! man, abodements must not now affright us. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

My lord bishop asked him, Whether he had never any secret abodement in his mind? No, replied the duke; but I think some adventure may kill me as well as an another man. Wotton.

To ABO'LISH. v. a. [aboleo, Lat.]

1. To annul; to make void. Applied to laws or institutions.

For us to abolish what he hath established, were presumption most intolerable. Hooker, b. iii. § 10.

On the parliament's part it was proposed, that all the bishops, deans and chapters, might be immediately taken away, and abolished.
Clarendon, b. viii.

2. To put an end to, to destroy

The long continued wars between the English and the Scots, had then raised invincible jealousies and hate, which long continued peace hath since abolished. Sir John Hayward.

That shall Pericles well requite, I wot,
And, with thy blood, abolish so reproachful blot.
Fairy Queen.

More destroy'd than they,
We should be quite abolish'd, and expire.
Milton.

Or wilt thou thyself
Abolish thy creation, and unmake
For him, what for thy glory thou hast made?
Milton, b. iii. l. 163.

Nor could Vulcanian flame
The stench abolish, or the savour tame.
Dryd. Virg. Geo. iii.

Fermented spirits contract, harden, and consolidate many fibres together, abolishing many canals; especially where the fibres are the tenderest, as in the brain. Arbuth. on Aliments.

ABO'LISHABLE, adj. [from abolish.] That which may be abolished.

ABO'LISHER, n. s. [from abolish.] He that abolishes.

ABO'LISHMENT, n. s. [from abolish.] The act of abolishing.

The plain and direct way had been to prove, that all such ceremonies, as they require to be abolished, are retained by us with the hurt of the church, or with less benefit than the abolishment of them would bring. Hooker, b. iv.

He should think the abolishment of episcopacy among us, would prove a mighty scandal and corruption to our faith, and manifestly dangerous to our monarchy. Swift's Church of England Man.

ABOLI'TION. n. s. [from abolish.] The act of abolishing. This is now more frequently used than abolishment.

From the total abolition of the popular power, may be dated the ruin of Rome: for had the reducing hereof to its ancient condition, proposed by Agrippa, been accepted instead of Mæcenas's model, that state might have continued unto this day. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. iii. c. 4.

An apoplexy is a sudden abolition of all the senses, and of all voluntary motion, by the stoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal spirits through the nerves destined for those motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ABO'MINABLE. adj. [abominabilis, Lat.]

1. Hateful, detestable; to be loathed.

This infernal pit
Abominable, accurs'd, the house of woe. Milton.

Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.

2. Unclean.

The soul that shall touch any unclean beast, or any abominable unclean thing, even that soul shall be cut off from his people. Leviticus, vii. 21.

3. In low and ludicrous language, it is a word of loose and indeterminate censure.

They say you are a melancholy fellow.—I am so; I do love it better than laughing.—Those that are in extremity of either, are abominable fellows, and betray themselves to every modern censure, worse than drunkards. Shakespeare's As you like it.

ABO'MINABLENESS. n. s. [from abominable.] The quality of being abominable; hatefulness, odiousness.

Till we have proved, in its proper place, the eternal and essential difference between virtue and vice, we must forbear to urge atheists with the corruption and abominableness of their principles. Bentley's Sermons.

ABO'MINABLY. adv. [from abominable.] A word of low or familiar language, signifying excessively, extremely, exceedingly; in an ill sense. It is not often seriously used.

I have observed great abuses and disorders in your family; your servants are mutinous and quarrelsome, and cheat you most abominably. Arbuthnot.

To ABO'MINATE. v. a. [abominor, Lat.] To abhor, detest, hate utterly.

Pride goes hated, cursed, and abominated by all. Hammond.

We are not guilty of your injuries,
No way consent to them; but do abhor,
Abominate, and loath this cruelty.
Southern's Oroonoko.

He professed both to abominate and despise all mystery, refinement, and intrigue, either in a prince or minister. Swift.

ABOMINA'TION. n. s.

1. Hatred, detestation.

To assist king Charles by English or Dutch forces, would render him odious to his new subjects, who have nothing in so great abominatim, as those whom they hold for heretics. Swift.

2. The object of hatred.

Every shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians. Genesis, xlvi. 34.

And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie. Rev. xxi. 27.

4. Wickedness; hateful or shameful vice.

Th' adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off,
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That noses it against us.
Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

5. The cause of pollution.

And the high places that were before Jerusalem, which were on the right hand of the mount of corruption, which Solomon the king of Israel had builded for Ashtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemosh the abominatim of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile.
2 Kings xxiii. 13.

ABORI'GINES. n. s. [Lat.] The earliest inhabitants of a country; those of whom no original is to be traced; as, the Welsh in Britain.

To ABO'RT. v. n. [aborto, Lat.] To bring forth before the time; to miscarry. Dict

ABO'RTION. n. s. [abortio, Lat.]

1. The act of bringing forth untimely.

These then need cause no abortion. Sandys.

2. The produce of an untimely birth.

His wife miscarried; but, as the abortion proved only a female fœtus, he comforted himself.
Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

Behold my arm thus wasted, dry and wither'd,
Shrunk like a foul abortion, and decay'd,
Like some untimely product of the seasons.
Rowe.

ABO'RTIVE. n. s. That which is born before the due time. Perhaps anciently any thing irregularly produced.

No common wind, no customed event,
But they will pluck away its nat'ral causes,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,
Abortives, and presages, tongues of heav'n,
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.
Shakesp. King John.

Take the fine skin of an abortive, and, with starch thin laid on, prepare your ground or tablet.
Peacham on Drawing.

Many are preserved, and do signal service to their country, who, without a provision, might have perished as abortives, or have come to an untimely end, and perhaps have brought upon th ir guilty parents the like destruction.
Addison, Guardian, No. 106.

ABO'RTIVE. [abortivus, Lat.]

1. That which is brought forth before the due time of birth.

If ever he have child, abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light.
Shakesp Richard III.

All th' unaccomplished works of nature's hand,
Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mix'd,
Dissolv'd on earth, fleet hither.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 456.

Nor will his fruit expect
Th' autumnal season, but, in summer's pride
When other orchards smile, Abortive fail. Phillips.

2. Figuratively, that which fails for want of time.

How often hast thou waited at my cup,
Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n;
Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride.
Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.

3. That which brings forth nothing.

The void profound
Of unessential night receives him next,
Wide-gaping; and with utter loss of being
Threatens him, plung'd in that abortive gulf.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 451.

4. That which fails or miscarries, from whatever cause. This is less proper.

Many politic conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet, in the issue, miscarry and prove abortive. South's Sermons.

ABO'RTIVELY. [from abortive.] Born without the due time; immaturely, untimely.

ABO'RTIVENESS. n. s. [from abortive.] The state of abortion.

ABORTMENT. n. s. [from abort.] The thing brought forth out of time; an untimely birth.

Concealed treasures, now lost to mankind, shall be brought into use by the industry of converted penitents, whose wretched carcases the impartial laws dedicate, as untimely feasts, to the worms of the earth, in whose womb those deserted mineral riches must ever lie buried as lost abortments, unless those be made the active midwives to deliver them. Bacon's Physical Remains.

ABO'VE. prep. [from a, and bupan, Saxon; boven, Dutch.]

1. To a higher place; in a higher place.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;
Above the brims they force their fiery way;
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.
Dryden, Æneid vii. l. 643.

2. More in quantity or number.

Every one that passeth among them, that are numbered from twenty years old and above, shall give an offering unto the Lord. Exodus, xxx. 14.

3. In a superior degree, or to a superior degree of rank, power, or excellence.

The Lord is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens. Psalm cxiii. 4.

The public power of all societies is above every soul contained in the same societies.
Hooker, b. 1.

There is no riches above a sound body, and no joy above the joy of the heart.
Ecclesiasticus, xxx. 16.

To her
Thou didst resign thy manhood, and the place
Wherein God set thee above her, made of thee,
And for thee; whose perfection far excell'd
Hers, in all real dignity.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 147.

Latona sees her shine above the rest,
And feeds with secret joy her silent breast.
Dryden's Æneid.

4. In a state of being superior to; unattainable by.

It is an old and true distinction, that things may be above our reason, without being contrary to it. Of this kind are the power, the nature, and the universal presence of God, with innumerable other points. Swift.

5. Beyond; more than.

We were pressed out of measure, above strength; insomuch that we despaired even of life.
2 Cor. i. 8.

In having thoughts unconfused, and being able to distinguish one thing from another, where there is but the least difference, consists the exactness of judgment and clearness of reason, which is in one man above another. Locke.

The inhabitants of Tirol have many privileges above those of the other hereditary countries of the emperor. Addison.

6. Too proud for; too high for. A phrase chiefly used in familiar expression.

Kings and princes, in the earlier ages of the world, laboured in arts and occupations, and were above nothing that tended to promote the conveniences of life. Pope's Odyssey; notes.

ABO'VE, adv.

1. Over-head; in a higher place.

To men standing below, men standing aloft seem much lessened; to those above, men standing below seem not so much lessened. Bacon.

When he established the clouds above; when he strengthened the fountains of the deep; when he gave to the sea his decree, that the waters should not pass his commandment; when he appointed the foundations of the earth; then I was by him, as one brought up with him: and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him. Proverbs, viii. 28.

Every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. James, i. 17.

The Trojans from above their foes beheld;
And with arm'd legions all the rampires fill'd.
Dryden, Æneid.

2. In the regions of heaven.

Your praise the birds shall chant in every grove,
And winds shall waft it to the pow'rs above.
Pope's Pastorals.

3. Before. [See ABOVE-CITED.]

I said above, that these two machines of the balance, and the dira, were only ornamental, and that the success of the duel had been the same without them. Dryd. Dedicat. Æneid.

ABOVE A'LL. In the first place; chiefly.

I studied Virgil's design, his disposition of it, his manners, his judicious management of the figures, the sober retrenchments of his sense, which always leaves something to gratify our imagination, on which it may enlarge at pleasure; but above all, the elegance of his expression, and the harmony of his numbers. Dryden's Dedicat Æneid.

ABOVE-BO'ARD.

1. In open sight; without artifice or trick. A figurative expression, borrowed from gamesters, who, when they put their hands under the table, are changing their cards. It is used only in familiar language.

It is the part also of an honest man to deal above-board, and without tricks. L'Estrange.

2. Without disguise or concealment.

Though there have not been wanting such heretofore, as have practised these unworthy arts, for as much as there have been villains in all places, and all ages, yet now-a-days they are owned above-board. South's Sermons.

ABOVE-CI'TED. Cited before. A figurative expression, taken from the ancient manner of writing books on scrolls; where whatever is cited or mentioned before in the same page, must be above.

ABO'VE-GROU'ND. An expression used to signify alive; not in the grave.

ABO'VE-ME'NTIONED. See ABOVE-CITED.

I do not remember, that Homer any where falls into the faults above-mentioned, which were indeed the false refinements of latter ages. Spectator, No. 279.

Her hair, her vest; and, stooping to the sands,
About his neck she cast her trembling hands.
Dryden's Fables.

2. Near to.

Speak unto the congregation, saying, get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Exodus.

Thou dost nothing, Sergius,
Thou canst endeavour nothing, nay, not think;
But I both see and hear it; and am with thee,
By and before, about and in thee too.
Ben Jons Cataline.

3. Concerning, with regard to, relating to.

When Constantine had finished an house for the service of God at Jerusalem, the dedication he judged a matter not unworthy, about the solemn performance whereof, the greatest part of the bishops in Christendom should meet together. Hooker.

The painter is not to take so much pains about the drapery as about the face where the principal resemblance lies. Dryd.

They are most frequently used as words equivalent, and do both of them indifferently signify either a speculative knowledge of things, or a practical skill about them, according to the exigency of the matter or thing spoken of. Tillot. Sermon i.

Theft is always a sin, although the particular species of it, and the denomination of particular acts, doth suppose positive laws about dominion and property. Stillingfleet.

Children should always be heard, and fairly and kindly answered, when they ask after any thing they would know, and desire to be informed about. Curiosity should be as carefully cherished in children, as other appetites suppressed. Locke.

It hath been practised as a method of making men's court, when they are asked about the rate of lands, the abilities of tenants, the state of trade, to answer that all things are in a flourishing condition. Swift's Short View of Ireland.

4. In a state of being engaged in, or employed upon.

Our blessed Lord was pleased to command the representation of his death and sacrifice on the cross should be made by breaking of bread and effusion of wine; to signify to us the nature and sacredness of the liturgy we are about. Taylor.

Labour, for labour's sake, is against nature. The understanding, as well as all the other faculties, chooses always the shortest way to its end, would presently obtain the knowledge it is about, and then set upon some new enquiry. But this, whether laziness or haste, often misleads it. Locke.

Our armies ought to be provided with secretaries, to tell their story in plain English, and to let us know, in our mother tongue, what it is our brave countrymen are about.
Addison, Spect. No. 309.

5. Appendant to the person; as cloaths.

If you have this about you,
And I will give you when we go, you may
Boldly assault the necromancer's hall.
Milton's Comus.

It is not strange to me, that persons of the fairer sex should like, in all things about them, that handsomeness for which they find themselves most liked. Boyle on Colours.

6. Relating to the person, as a servant, or dependant.

Liking very well the young gentleman, such I took him to be, admitted this Deiphantus about me, who well shewed, there is no service like his that serves because he loves. Sidney, b. ii.

7. Relating to person, as an act or office.

Good corporal, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend: she hath no body to do any thing about her when I am gone, and she is old and cannot help herself. Shakespeare's Henry IV

ABO'UT. adv.

1. Circularly, in a round; circum.

The weyward sisters, hand in hand,

2. [In medicine] The wearing away of the natural mucus, which covers the membranes, particularly those of the stomach and guts, by corrosive or sharp medicines or humours. Quincy.

3 The matter, worn off by the attrition of bodies.

ABREAST. adv. [See BREAST.] Side by side, in such a position, that the breasts may bear against the same line.

My cousin Suffolk,
My soul shall thine keep company to heav'n
Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly abreast
Shakesp Henry V

For honour travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but goes abreast Shakes Troil & Cress

The riders rode abreast and one his shield,
His lance of cornel wood another held
Dryden's Fables

ABRICOT. See APRICOT.

To ABRIDGE. v. a. [abreger, Fr. abbrevio, Lat.]

1. To make shorter in words, keeping still the same substance.

All these sayings being declared by Jason of Cyrene in five books, we will essay to abridge in one volume 2 Macc ii 23

2. To contract, to diminish, to cut short.

The determination of the will, upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide, and he, that has a power to act or not to act, according as such determination directs, is free Such determination abridges not that power, wherein liberty consists Locke

3. To deprive of; to cut off from. In which sense it is followed by the particle from, or of, preceding the thing taken away.

I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan, to be abridg'd
From such a noble rate.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

They were formerly, by the common law, discharged from pontage and murage; but this privilege has been abridged them since, by several statutes Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici

1. He, that abridges; a shortener.

2. A writer of compendiums or abridgments.

ABRI'DGMENT. n. s. [abregement, Fr.]

1. The epitome of a larger work, contracted into a small compass; a compend; a summary.

Surely this commandment contained the law and the prophets, and, in this one word, is the abridgment of all volumes of scripture Hooker, b ii § 5

Idolatry is certainly the first born of folly, the great and leading paradox, nay the very abridgment and sum total of all absurdities South's Sermons

2. Diminution in general.

All trying by a love of littleness,
To make abridgments, and to draw to less
Even that nothing, which at first we were
Donne

3. Contraction; reduction.

The continual desire of happiness and the constant pursuit of it supposes no liberty (I think) nor is an abridgment of liberty, or at least an abridgment of liberty to be complained of Locke

1. Restraint from any thing pleasing: contraction of any thing enjoyed

It is not hardly a man's abridgment in his external accommodations which makes him miserable, but when his conscience shall tell him that it was his sin and his folly which brought him under that abridgment South

ABROACH. adv. [See To BROACH]

1. In a posture to run out, or yield the liquor contained; properly spoken of vessels.

The pipes of generous wine
He set abroach, and for the feast prepared
Dryd Virgil

The Templer spruce while every spirit is abroach,
Stays till 'tis fun, yet seems to call it reach
Swift's Mis.

2. In a figurative sense; in a state to be diffused or extended; in a state of such beginning as promises a progress.

That mutiny that sits within a man's heart,
And ripens in the sunshine of his favour
Would he abuse the countenance of the king
Alack! what mischiefs might he set abroach
In shadow of such greatness?
Shakespeare's Henry IV p ii

ABROAD. adv. [compounded of a and broad. See BROAD.]

1. Without confinement; widely; at large

Intermit no watch
Against a wakeful foe, while I abroad,
Thro' all the coast of dark destruction seek Deliverance Milton's Par Lost, b ii l 463

Again the lonely fox roams far abroad,
On secret rapine bent, and midnight fraud
Now haunts the cliff, now traverses the lawn,
And flies the hated neighbourhood of man Pitt

2. Out of the house.

Welcome, Sir!
This cell's my court, here have I few attendants,
And subjects none abroad Shakesp Tempest

Lady —— walked a whole hour abroad, without dying after it Pope's Letters

3. In another country.

They thought it better to be somewhat hardly yoked at home, than forever abroad, and discredited Hooker, Pref

Whosoever offers at verbal translation, shall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who lost his own language abroad, and brought home no other instead of it Sir J Denham

What learn our youth abroad, but to refine
The homely vices of their native land?
Dryd Span Friar

He, who sojourns in a foreign country, relates what he sees and hears abroad, to the shame of things at home Attrib Scrm

4. In all directions, this way and that; with wide expansion.

Full in the midst of this infernal road,
An elm displays her dusky arms abroad
Dryd Virg Æn vi.

5. Without, not within.

Bodies politic, being subject (as much as natural) to dissolution by diseases in them, there are undoubtedly more state overthrown, though diseases bred within themselves than through violence from abroad Hall Defence

To ABROGATE. v. a. [abrogo, Lat.] To take away from a law its force; to repeal; to annul.

Laws have been made upon several occasions; which occasions ceasing, laws of themselves do abrogate themselves Hooker, b iv § 11

The native precepts of reason are clearly many instances of evil customs by public edict disclaimed by human laws; but the native precepts of conscience are by no law ever abrogated Addison's Freeholder

ABROGATION. n [abrogatio, Lat.] The act of abrogating, the repeal of a law

He commanded from the confederate Romans the restitution and repeal of all the civil laws of Sylla against the exercise of the tribunitial power

To ABROOK. v a [from To brook, with a superadded, a word not in use.] To brook, to bear to endure.

Sweet Will how can thy virtues brook
The abject peasant's hate to look
With envious leer, so full of scathful shame
Sidney's Arcadia (MS.)

ABRUPT adj [abruptus, Lat. broken off]

1. Broken, craggy.

Lest this new dreadful downfall comes
From the rude mountains and the misty wilds,
Tumbling their rocks abrupt Thom Wm.

2. Divided, without any thing intervening.

On speckled airy flight,
Upborn with indefatigable wings,
Over the vast abrupt, ere he arrive
The happy isle
Milton's Paradise Lost b ii l. 409.

3. Sudden, without the customary or proper preparatives.

My Lady craves
To know the cause of your abrupt departure.
Shakespeare.

The abrupt and unkind breaking of the two first parliaments was wholly imputed to the duke of Buckingham Clarendon.

Abrupt, with eagle speed she cut the sky,
Instant invisible to mortal eye
Then first he recognized the ethereal guest.
Pope's Odyss b i

4. Unconnected.

He abrupt tale which hath many breaches, and doth not seem to end but fall
Ben Jonson's Discovery.

ABRUPTED. adj. [abruptus, Lat. a word little in use.] Broken off suddenly.

He effects of their acuity are not precipitously abrupted, but gradually proceed to their cessations Brown's Vulgar Errours b vi 10.

ABRU'PTION. n. s. [abruptio, Lat.] Breaking off, violent and sudden separation.

Those, which are inclosed in stone, marble, or such other solid matter; being difficultly separable from it, because of its adhesion to all sides of them; have commonly some of that matter still adhering to them, or at least marks of its abruption from them, on all their sides.
Woodw. Nat. Hist. p. 4.

ABRU'PTLY. adv. [See ABRUPT.] Hastily, without the due forms of preparation.

The sweetness of virtue's disposition, jealous even over itself, suffered her not to enter abruptly into questions of Musidorus. Sidney, b. ii.

Now missing, from their joy so lately found,
So lately found, and so abruptly gone.
Dryden, Regain. b. ii.

That they (both of them) punctually observed the time, thus agreed upon; and that, whatever company or business they were engaged in, they left it abruptly as soon as the clock warned them to retire. Addison, Spectator, No. 241.

ABRU'PTNESS. n. s. [from abrupt.]

1. An abrupt manner, haste, suddenness, untimely vehemence.
2. The state of an abrupt or broken thing; roughness, cragginess; as of a fragment violently disjointed.

The crystallized bodies, found in the perpendicular intervals, have always their root, as the jewellers call it; which is only the abruptness at the end of the body, whereby it adhered to the stone or sides of the intervals: which abruptness is caused by its being broke off from the said stone.
Woodw. Nat. Hist. p. 4.

A'BSCESS. n. s. [abscessus, Lat.] A morbid cavity in the body; a tumour, filled with matter; a term of chirurgery.

If the patient is not relieved, nor dies, in eight days; the inflammation ends in a suppuration and an abscess in the lungs, and sometimes in some other part of the body. Arbuth. of Diet.

Lindanus conjectured, it might be some hidden abscess in the mesentery; which, breaking some few days after, was discovered to be an apostem of the mesentery. Harvey, on Consumption.

To ABSCI'ND. v. a. To cut off, either in a natural or figurative sense.

ABSCI'SSA. [Lat.] Part of the diameter of a conic section, intercepted between the vertex and a semi-ordinate.

ABSCI'SSION. n. s. [abscissio, Lat.]

1. The act of cutting off.

Fabricius ab Aquapendente renders the abscission of them difficult enough, and not without danger.
Wiseman's Surgery.

2. The state of being cut off.

By cessation of oracles, with Montacutius, we may understand this intercision, not abscission or consummate desolation.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 12.

To ABSCO'ND. v. n. [abscondo, Lat.] To hide one's self; to retire from the public view: generally used of persons in debt, or criminals eluding the law.

The marmotte or mus alpinus, which absconds all winter, lives on its own fat: for in autumn, when it shuts itself up in its hole, it is very fat, but in the spring-time, when it comes forth again, very lean. Ray on the Creation.

ABSCO'NDER. n. s. [from abscond.] The person that absconds.

A'BSENCE. n. s. [See ABSENT.]

1. The state of being absent, opposed to presence.

Sir, 'tis fit,
You have strong party to defend yourself,
By calmness, or by absence; all's in danger.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

His friends beheld, and pity'd him in vain,
For, what advice can ease a lover's pain?
Absence, the best expedient they could find,
Might save the fortune, if not cure the mind.
Dryd. Fab.

You have given no dissertation upon th' absence of lovers; nor laid down any methods, how they should support themselves under those separations. Addison, Spectator, No. 241.

2. Want of appearance in the legal sense.

Absence is of a fourfold kind or species. The first is a necessary absence, as in banished persons; this is entirely necessary. A second, necessary and voluntary; as upon the account of the commonwealth, or in the service of the church. The third kind the civilians call a probable absence; as, that of students on the score of study. And the fourth, an absence entirely voluntary; as, on the account of trade, merchandise, and the like. Some add a fifth kind of absence, which is committed cum dolo et culpâ, by a man's non-appearance on a citation; as in a contumacious person, who, in hatred to his contumacy, is (by the law) in some respects, reputed as a person present.
Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

3. Inattention, heedlessness, neglect of the present object.

I continued my walk, reflecting on the little absences and distractions of mankind.
Addison, Spectator, No. 77.

4. It is used with the particle from.

His absence from his mother oft he'll mourn;
And, with his eyes, look wishes to return.
Dryd. Juv. Sat. ii.

A'BSENT. adj. [absens, Lat.]

1. Not present: used with the particle from.

In spring the fields, in autumn hills I love;
At morn the plains, at noon the shady grove;
But Delia always: absent from her sight,
Nor plains at morn, nor groves at noon delight.
Pope's Past.

Where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and less have given him the revolt;
And none serve with him, but constrained things;
Whose hearts are absent too. Shakes. Macbeth.

Whether they were absent or present, they were vexed alike. Wisd. vi. 11.

2. Absent in mind, inattentive; regardless of the present object.

I distinguish a man that is absent, because he thinks of something else; from him that is absent, because he thinks of nothing. Addis. Spec. No. 77.

To ABSE'NT. v. a. To withdraw, to forbear to come into presence.

If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from felicity a while;
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my tale. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Go!—for thy stay, not free, absents thee more.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 372.

Tho' I am forc'd thus to absent myself,
From all I love; I shall contrive some means,
Some friendly intervals, to visit thee.
Southern's Spartan Dame

The Arengo is still called together in cases of importance; and if, after due summons, any member absents himself, he is to be fined to the value of about a penny English. Addison's Rem. on Italy.

ABSENTA'NEOUS. adj. Relating to absence; absent. Dict.

ABSENTE'E. n. s. He that is absent from his station, or employment, or country. A word used commonly with regard to Irishmen, living out of their country.

Then was the first statute made against absentees; commanding all such, as had land in Ireland, to return and reside thereupon.
Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A great part of estates in Ireland are owned by absentees; and such, as draw over the profits raised out of Ireland, refunding nothing.
Child's Discourse on Trade.

ABSI'NTHIATED. part. [from absinthium, Lat. wormwood.] Imbittered, impregnated with wormwood. Dict.

To ABSI'ST. v. n. [absisto, Lat.] To stand off, to leave off. Dict.

To ABSO'LVE, v. a. [absolvo, Lat.]

1. To clear, to acquit of a crime, in a judicial sense.

Your great goodness, out of holy pity,
Absolv'd him with an axe. Shakes. Henry VIII.

Our victors, blest in peace, forget their wars,
Enjoy past dangers, and absolve the stars. Tickell.

As he hopes, and gives out, by the influence of his wealth to be here absolved; in condemning this man, you have an opportunity of belying that general scandal, of redeeming the credit lost by former judgments. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. To set free from an engagement or promise.

Compell'd by threats to take that bloody oath,
And the act ill, I am absolv'd by both.
Waller's Maid's Tragedy.

This command, which must necessarily comprehend the persons of our natural fathers, must mean a duty we owe them, distinct from our obedience to the magistrate, and from which the most absolute power of princes cannot absolve us. Locke.

3. To pronounce sin remitted, in the ecclesiastical sense.

But all is calm, in this eternal sleep:
Here grief forgets to groan, and love to weep;
Ev'n superstition loses every fear;
For God, not man, absolves our frailties here.
Pope's Eloisa to Abelard.

4. To finish, to complete. This use is not common.

What cause
Mov'd the Creator, in his holy rest
Through all eternity, so late to build
In chaos: and the work begun, how soon
Absolv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 94.

If that, which is so supposed infinitely distant from what is now current, is distant from us by a finite interval, and not infinitely; then that one circulation, which preceded it, must necessarily be like ours; and consequently absolved in the space of twenty-four hours. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

A'BSOLUTE. adj. [absolutus, Lat.]

1. Complete; applied, as well to persons, as to things.

Because the things that proceed from him are perfect, without any manner of defect or maim; it cannot be, but that the words of his mouth are absolute and lack nothing which they should have, for performance of that thing whereunto they tend.
Hooker, b. ii. § 6.

What is his strength by land?—
Great and increasing: but by sea
He is an absolute master.
Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

2. Unconditional; as an absolute promise.

Although it runs in form absolute, yet it is indeed conditional; as depending upon the qualification of the person, to whom it is pronounced.
South's Sermons.

3. Not relative; as, absolute space.

I see still the distinctions of sovereign and inferior, of absolute and relative worship, will bear any man out in the worship of any creature with respect to God; as well at least, as it doth in the worship of images.
Stillingfl. Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

An absolute mode is that, which belongs to its subject, without respect to any other beings whatsoever; but a relative mode is derived from the regard, that one being has to others.
Watts's Logic.

In this sense we speak of the ablative case absolute in grammar.

4. Not limited; as absolute power

My crown is absolute, and holds of none:
I cannot in a base subjection live;
Nor suffer you to take, tho' I would give.
Dryd. Ind. Emp.

5. Positive; certain; without any hesitation.

In this sense it rarely occurs.

Long is it since I saw him:
But time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of favour,
Which then he wore, the snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his: I'm absolute,
'Twas very Cloten. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

A'BSOLUTELY, adv. [from absolute.]

1. Completely, without restriction.

All the contradictions, which grow in those minds, that neither absolutely climb the rock of virtue, nor freely sink into the sea of vanity.
Sidney.

What merit they can build, upon having joined with a protestant army, under a king they acknowledge, to defend their own liberties and properties; is, to me, absolutely inconceivable; and, I believe, will equally be so for ever.
Swift's Presb. Plea.

2. Without relation; in a state unconnected.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve, either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hooker, b. v.

These then being the perpetual causes of zeal; the greatest good, or the greatest evil; either absolutely so in themselves, or relatively so to us: it is therefore good, to be zealously affected for the one against the other. Sprat's Sermons.

No sensible quality (as ligh , and colour, and heat, and sound) can be subsistent in the bodies themselves absolutely considered, without a relation to our eyes and ears and other organs of sense. These qualities are only the effects of our sensation; which arise from the different motions upon our nerves, from objects without, according to their various modifications and positions
Bentley's Sermons.

3. Without limits or dependence.

The prince long time had courted fortune's love,
But, once possess'd, did absolutely reign:
Thus, with their Amazons, the heroes strove;
And conquer'd first those beauties they would gain.
Dryden's Annus Mirabilis.

4. Without condition.

And of that nature (for the most part) are things, absolutely unto all men's salvation necessary, either to be held or denied, either to be done or avoided. Hooker's Preface.

5. Peremptorily; positively.

Being as I am, why didst not thou
Command me absolutely not to go,
Going into such danger, as thou saidst?
Parad. Lost, b. ix.

A'BSOLUTENESS. n. s. [from absolute.]

1. Completeness.

2. Freedom from dependence, or limits.

The absoluteness and illimitedness of his commission was generally much spoken of.
Clarendon, b. viii

There is nothing that can raise a man to that generous absoluteness of condition, as neither to cringe, to fawn, or to depend meanly; but that, which gives him that happiness within himself, for which men depend upon others
South's Serm.

3. Despotism.

He kept a strait hand on his nobility; and chose rather to advance clergymen and lawyers, which were more obsequious to him, but had less interest in the people: which made for his absoluteness, but not for his safety.
Bacon's Henry VII.

They dress up power with all the splendor and temptation absoluteness can add to it.
Locke.

ABSOLU'TION. n. s. [absolutio, Lat.]

1. Acquittal.

Absolution, in the civil law, imports a full acquittal of a person by some final sentence of law; and, also a temporary discharge of his farther attendance upon a mesne process, through a failure or defect in pleading: as it does likewise in the canon law; where, and among divines, it likewise signifies a relaxation of him from the obligation of some sentence, pronounced either in a court of law, or else in foro pœnitentiali. Thus there is, in this kind of law, one kind of absolution, termed judicial; and another, styled a declaratory or extrajudicial absolution.
Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

2. The remission of sins, or penance, declared by ecclesiastical authority.

The absolution pronounced by a priest, whether papist or protestant, is not a certain infallible ground to give the person, so absolved, confidence towards God. South's Sermons

A'BSOLUTORY. adj. [absolutorius, Lat.] That, which absolves.

Though an absolutory sentence should be pronounced in favour of the persons, upon the account of nearness of blood; yet, if adultery shall afterwards be truly proved, he may be again proceeded against as an adulterer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'BSONANT. adj. [See ABSONOUS.] Contrary to reason; wide from the purpose.

A'BSONOUS. adj. [absonus, Lat. ill-sounding.] Absurd, contrary to reason. It is not much in use; and it may be doubted, whether it should be followed by to or from.

To suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both, is unwarranted by any of our faculties; yea, most absonous to our reason.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica, c 4

To ABSO'RB, v. a. [absorbeo, Lat. pret. absorbed; part. pret. absorbed, or absorpt.]

1. To swallow up.

Moses imputed the deluge to the disruption of the abyss; and St Peter to the particular constitution of that earth, which made it obnoxious to be absorpt in water Burn. Theory.

Some tokens shew
Of fearless friendship, and their sinking mates
Sustain, vain love, tho' laudable, absorpt
By a fierce eddy, they together found
The vast profundity. Phillips.

2. To suck up. See ABSORBENT.

The evils that come of exercise are, that it doth absorb and attenuate the moisture of the body
Bacon.

Supposing the forementioned consumption should prove so durable as to absorb and extenuate the said sanguine parts to an extreme degree, it is evident, that the fundamental parts must necessarily come into danger. Harvey on Consumptions

While we perspire we absorb the outward air.
Arbuthnot.

ABSO'RBENT. n. s. [absorbens, Lat.] A medicine that, by the softness or porosity of its parts, either eases the asperities of pungent humours, or dries away superfluous moisture in the body.
Quincy.

There is a third class of substances, commonly called absorbents; as, the various kinds of shells, coral, chalk, crabs' eye, &c. which likewise raise an effervescence with acids, and are therefore called alkalis; though not so properly, for they are not salts. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ABSO'RPT. part. [from absorb.] Swallowed up; used as well in a figurative sense, of persons; as in the primitive, of things.

What can you expect from a man, who has not talked these five days? who is withdrawing his thoughts, as far as he can, from all the present world, its customs, and its manners, to be fully possessed and absorpt in the past. Pope's Letters.

ABSO'RPTION. n. s. [from absorb,] The act of swallowing up.

It was below the dignity of those sacred penmen, or the Spirit of God that directed them, to show us the causes of this disruption, or of this absorption: this is left to the enquiries of men.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To ABSTA'IN. v. n. [abstineo, Lat.] To forbear, to deny one's self any gratification; with the particle from.

If thou judge it hard and difficult,
Conversing, looking, loving, to abstain
From love's due rites, nuptial embraces sweet;
And, with desires, to languish without hope.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 993.

To be perpetually longing, and impatiently desirous of any thing, so that a man cannot abstain from it; is to lose a man's liberty, and to become a servant of meat and drink or smoke.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Even then the doubtful billows scarce abstain
From the toss'd vessel on the troubled main.
Dryd. Virgil.

ABSTE'MIOUS. adj. [abstemius, Lat.] Temperate, sober, abstinent, refraining from excess or pleasures. It is used of persons; as, an abstemious hermit: and of things; as an abstemious diet. It is spoken likewise of things, that cause temperance.

The instances of longevity are chiefly amongst the abstemious. Abstinence in extremity will prove a mortal disease; but the experiments of it are very rare. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Clytoreian streams the love of wine expel;
Such is the virtue of the abstemious well:
Whether the colder nymph that rules the flood,
Extinguishes and balks the drunken god;
Or that Melampus (so have some assur'd)
When the mad Pœtides with charms he cur'd,
And pow'rful herbs, both charms and simples cast
Into the sober spring, where still their virtues last.
Dryd. Lab.

ABSTE'MIOUSLY. adv. [from abstemious.] Temperately, soberly, without indulgence.

ABSTE'MIOUSNESS. n. s. [See ABSTEMIOUS.] The quality of being abstemious.

ABSTE'NTION, n. s. [from abstineo, Lat.] The act of holding off, or restraining; restraint. Dict.

To ABSTE'RGE. v. a. [abstergo, Lat.] To cleanse by wiping; to wipe.

ABSTE'RGENT. adj. Cleansing; having a cleansing quality.

To ABSTE'RSE. [See ABSTERGE.] To cleanse, to purify: a word very little in use, and less analogical than abstergo.

Nor will we affirm, that iron received, in the stomach of the ostrich, no alteration; but we suspect this effect, rather from corrosion than digestion; not any tendency to chilification by the natural heat, but rather some attrition from an acid and vitriolous humidity in the stomach, which may abstersc and shave the scorious parts thereof.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

ABSTE'RSION. n. s. [abstersio, Lat.] The act of cleansing. See ABSTERGE.

Abstersion is plainly a scouring off, or incision of the more viscous humours, and making the humours more fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as is found in nitrous water, which scoureth linen cloth speedily from the foulness.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 42.

ABSTE'RSIVE. adj. [from absterge.] That has the quality of absterging or cleansing.

It is good, after purging, to use apozemes and broths; not so much opening as those used before purging: but abstersive and mundifying clysters also are good to conclude with, to draw away the reliques of the humours. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

A tablet stood of that abstersive tree,
Where Æthiop's swarthy bird did build to nest.
Sir John Denham.

There, many a flow'r abstersive grew,
Thy fav'rite flow'rs of yellow hue. Swift's Mis.

A'BSTINENCE. n. s. [abstinentia, Lat.]

1. Forbearance of any thing; with the particle from.

Because the abstinence from a present pleasure, that offers itself, is a pain; nay, oftentimes a very great one: it is no wonder that, that operates after the same manner pain does; and lessens, in our thoughts, what is future; and so forces us, as it were, blindfold into its embraces. Locke.

2. Fasting, or forbearance of necessary food. It is generally distinguished from temperance, as the greater degree from the less: sometimes as single performances, from habits; as, a day of abstinence, and a life of temperance.

Say, can you fast? your stomachs are too young:
And abstinence engenders maladies.
Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.

And the faces of them, which have used abstinence, shall shine above the stars; whereas our faces shall be blacker than darkness.
2 Esdras, vii. 55

Religious men, who hither must be sent,
As awful guides of heavenly government;
To teach you penance, fasts, and abstinence,
To punish bodies for the soul's offence.
Dryden's Indian Emp.

A'BSTINENCY. n. s. The same with ABSTINENCE.

Were our rewards, for the abstinencies or riots of this present life, under the prejudices of short or finite; the promises and threats of Christ would lose much of their virtue and energy.
Hammond's Fundam.

A'BSTINENT. adj. [abstinens, Lat.] That uses abstinence; in opposition to covetous, rapacious, or luxurious. It is used chiefly of persons.

ABSTO'RTED. adj. [abstortus, Lat.] Forced away; wrung from another by violence. Dict.

To ABSTRA'CT. v. a. [abstraho, Lat.]

1. To take one thing from another.

Could we abstract from these pernicious effects, and suppose this were innocent; it would be too light, to be matter of praise. Decay of Piety.

2. To separate by distillation.

Having dephlegmed spirit of salt, and gently abstracted the whole spirit, there remaineth in the retort a styptical substance. Boyle.

3. To separate ideas.

Those, who cannot distinguish, compare, and abstract, would hardly be able to understand and make use of language, or judge or reason to any tolerable degree. Locke.

4. To reduce to an epitome.

If we would fix in the memory the discourses we hear, or what we design to speak; let us abstract them into brief compends, and review them often. Watt's Imp. of the Mind.

A'BSTRACT. adj. [abstractus, Lat. See the verb To ABSTRACT.]

1. Separated from something else: generally used with relation to mental perceptions; as, abstract mathematics, abstract terms, in opposition to concrete.

Mathematics, in its latitude, is usually divided into pure and mixed: and, though the pure do handle only abstract quantity in general, as geometry, arithmetic; yet that, which is mixed, doth consider the quantity of some particular determinate subject: so astronomy handles the quantity of heavenly motions; music, of sounds; and mechanics, of weights and powers.
Wilkins's Mathematical Magic.

Abstract terms signify the mode or quality of a being, without any regard to the subject in which it is; as whiteness, roundness, length, breadth, wisdom, mortality, life, death. Watts's Logic.

2. With the particle from.

Another fruit from the considering things in themselves abstract from our opinions and other men's notions and discourses on them, will be; that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method, which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

A'BSTRACT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A smaller quantity, containing the virtue or power of a greater.

You shall there find a man, who is the abstract
Of all faults all men follow. Shakes. Ant. & Cleop.

If you are false, these epithets are small;
You're then the things, and abstract of them all.
Dryd. Aur.

2. An epitome made by taking out the principal parts.

When Mnemon came to the end of a chapter, he recollected the sentiments he had remarked; so that he could give a tolerable analysis and abstract of every treatise he had read, just after he had finished it. Watts's Imp. of the Mind.

3. The state of being abstracted or disjoined.

The hearts of great princes, if they be considered, as it were in abstract, without the necessity of states, and circumstances of time, can take no full and proportional pleasure in the exercise of any narrow bounty. Wotton.

ABSTRA'CTED. part. adj. [from abstract.]

1. Separated; disjoined.

That space, the evil one abstracted stood
From his own evil; and, for the time, remain'd
Stupidly good. Milton.

2. Refined; purified.

Abstracted spiritual love, they like
Their souls exhal'd. Donne.

3. Abstruse; difficult.

4. Absent of mind, inattentive to present objects; as, an abstracted scholar.

ABSTRA'CTEDLY. adv. With abstraction, simply, separately from all contingent circumstances.

Or, whether more abstractedly we look,
Or on the writers, or the written book;
Whence, but from heav'n, could men unskill'd in arts;
In several ages born, in several parts,
Weave such agreeing truths? or how, or why
Should all conspire to cheat us with a lie?
Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice,
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price!
Dryden's Religio Laici.

ABSTRA'CTION. n. s. [abstractio, Lat.]

1. The act of abstracting.

The word abstraction signifies a withdrawing some part of an idea from other parts of it; by which means such abstracted ideas are formed, as neither represent any thing corporeal or spiritual; that is, any thing peculiar or proper to mind or body. Watt's Logic.

2. The state of being abstracted.

3. Absence of mind; inattention.

4. Disregard of worldly objects.

A hermit wishes to be praised for his abstractum.
Pope's Letters.

ABSTRA'CTIVE, adj. [from abstract.] Having the power or quality of abstracting

ABSTRA'CTLY. adv. [from abstract.] In an abstract manner; absolutely; without reference to any thing else.

Matter, abstractly and absolutely considered, cannot have born an infinite duration now past and expired. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSTRA'CTNESS, n. s. [from abstract.] Subtilty; separation from all matter or common notion.

I have taken some pains, to make plain and familiar to your thoughts, truths; which established prejudice, or the abstractness of the ideas themselves, might render difficult. Locke.

ABSTRI'CTED. part. adj. [abstrictus, Lat.] Unbound. Dict.

To ABSTRI'NGE. v. a. To unbind. Dict.

To ABSTRU'DE. v. a. [abstrudo, Lat.] To thrust off, or pull away. Dict.

ABSTRU'SE. adj. [abstrusus, Lat. thrust out of sight.]

1. Hidden.

Th' eternal eye, whose sight discerns
Abstrusest thoughts, from forth his holy mount,
And from within the golden lamps that burn
Nightly before him, saw, without their light,
Rebellion rising
Milton's Parad. Lost, b v. l. 712

2. Difficult; remote from conception or apprehension. It is opposed to obvious and easy.

So spake our sire, and by his countenance seem'd
Entring on studious thoughts abstruse.
Paradise Lost, b. viii.

The motions and figures within the mouth are abstruse, and not easy to be distinguished, especially those of the tongue; which is moved, through the help of many muscles, so easily and habitually and variously; that we are scarce able to give a judgment of motions and figures thereby framed. Holder

No man could give a rule of the greatest beauties, and the knowledge of them was so abstruse, that there was no manner of speaking, which could express them. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

ABSTRU'SELY. adv. In an abstruse manner; obscurely, not plainly or obviously.

ABSTRU'SENESS. n. s. [from abstruse.] The quality of being abstruse; difficulty, obscurity.

It is not oftentimes so much, what the scripture says, as what some men persuade others it says, that makes it seem obscure; and that, as to some other passages, that are so indeed, (since it is the abstruseness of what is taught in them, that makes them almost inevitably so) it is little less saucy, upon such a score to find fault with the style of the scripture, than to do so with the author for making us but men. Boyle on the Scripture.

ABSTRU'SITY. n. s. [from abstruse.]

1. Abstruseness.

2. That which is abstruse. A word seldom used.

Authors are also suspicious, nor greedily to be swallowed; who pretend to write of secrets, to deliver antipathies, sympathies, and the occult abstrusities of things. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

To ABSU'ME. v. a. [absumo, Lat.] To bring to an end by a gradual waste; to eat up. An uncommon word.

That, which had been burning an infinite time, could never be burnt; no, not so much as any part of it: for, if it had burned part after part, the whole must needs be absumed in a portion of time. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ABSU'RD. adj. [absurdus, Lat.]

1. Unreasonable; without judgment, as used of men.

Seeming wise men may make shift to get opinion; but let no man chuse them for employment; for certainly you had better take for business a man somewhat absurd, than over formal. Bacon.

A man who cannot write with wit on a proper subject, is dull and stupid; but one who shews it in an improper place, is as impertinent and absurd. Addison, Spectator, No. 291.

2. Inconsistent, contrary to reason; used of sentiments or practices.

The thing itself appeared desirable to him; and accordingly he could not but like and desire it: but then, it was after a very irrational absurd way, and contrary to all the methods and principles of a rational agent; which never wills a thing really and properly, but it applies to the means, by which it is to be acquired. South's Sermons.

But grant, that those can conquer, these can cheat;
'Tis phrase absurd, to call a villain great:
Who wickedly is wise, or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave.
Pope's Essay on Man.

ABSU'RDITY. n. s. [from absurd.]

1. The quality of being absurd; want of judgment, applied to men; want of propriety, applied to things.

How clear soever this idea of the infinity of number be, there is nothing more evident, than the absurdity of the actual idea of an infinite number. Locke.

2. That, which is absurd; as, his travels were full of absurdities. In which sense it has a plural.

That satisfaction we receive from the opinion of some pre-eminence in ourselves, when we see the absurdities of another, or when we reflect on any past absurdities of our own. Addison.

AB'SURDLY. adv. [from absurd.] After an absurd manner; improperly; unreasonably.

But man, we find the only creature;
Who, led by folly, combats nature;
Who, when she loudly cries Forbear,
With obstinacy fixes there;
And, where his genius least inclines,
Absurdly bends his whole designs. Swift's Miscel.

We may proceed yet further with the atheist; and convince him, that not only his principle is absurd, but his consequences also as absurdly deduced from it. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSUR'DNESS. n. s. [from absurd.] The quality of being absurd; injudicious ness; impropriety. See ABSURDITY; which is more frequently used.

ABU'NDANCE. n. s. [abondance, Fr.]

1. Plenty; a sense chiefly poetical.

At the whisper of thy word,
Crown'd abundance spreads my board. Crashaw.

The doubled charge his subjects' love supplies;
Who, in that bounty, to themselves are kind:
So glad Egyptians see their Nilus rise;
And, in his plenty, their abundance find.
Dryd. Ann. Mir.

2. Great numbers.

The river Inn is shut up between mountains, covered with woods of fir-trees. Abundance of peasants are employed in hewing down the largest of these trees; that, after they are barked and cut into shape, are tumbled down. Addis. on Italy.

3. A great quantity.

Their chief enterprize was the recovery of the Holy Land; in which worthy, but extremely difficult action, it is lamentable to remember what abundance of noble blood hath been shed, with very small benefit unto the Christian state.
Sir Walter Raleigh's Essays.

4. Exuberance; more than enough.

For well I wot, most mighty sovereign,
That all this famous antique history,
Of some th' abundance of an idle brain
Will judged be, and painted forgery. Spenser.

ABU'NDANT. adj. [abundans, Lat.]

1. Plentiful.

Good, the more
Communicated, more abundant grows;
The author not impair'd, but honour'd more.
Paradise Lost, b. v.

2. Exuberant.

If the vessels are in a state of too great rigidity, so as not to yield; a strong projectile motion occasions their rupture, and hæmorrhages; especially in the lungs, where the blood is abundant.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Fully stored. It is followed sometimes by in, commonly by with.

The world began but some ages, before these were found out; and was abundant with all things at first, and men not very numerous; and therefore were not put so much to the use of their wits, to find out ways for living commodiously. Burnet.

4. It is applied generally to things, sometimes to persons.

The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth. Exod. xxxiv. 6.

ABU'NDANTLY. adv. [from abundant.]

1. In plenty.

Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Genesis, i. 20.

God on thee
Abundantly his gifts hath also pour'd:
Inward and outward both, his image fair.
Paradise Lost, b. viii.

2. Amply, liberally, more than sufficiently.

Ye saw the French tongue abundantly purified.
Sprat

Heroic poetry has ever been esteemed the greatest work of human nature. In that rank has Aristotle placed it; and Longinus is so full of the like expressions, that he abundantly confirms the other's testimony. Drud. State of Innocence, Pref.

What the example of our equals wants of authority, is abundantly supplied in the imaginations of friendship, and the repeated influences of a constant conversation. Rogers's Serm

To ABU'SE. v. a. [abutor, abusus, Lat.] In abuse the verb s has the sound of z; in the noun, the common sound.

1. To make an ill use of.

They that use this world, as not abusing it; for the fashion of this world passeth away. 1 Cor vii 31.

He has fixed and determined the time for our repentance, beyond which he will no longer await the perverseness of men, no longer suffer his compassion to be abused. Roger's Sermons

2. To violate; to defile.

Arachne figured how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea did bear. Spenser.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.

He perhaps,
Out of my weakness and my melancholy,
As he is very potent with such spirits,
Abuses me to damn me. Shakesp. Hamlet.

The world hath been much abused by the opinion of making gold; the work itself I judge to be possible; but the means, hitherto propounded, are (in the practice) full of error.
Brown's Natural History, No. 126

It imports the misrepresentation of the qualities of things and actions to the common apprehensions of men, abusing their minds with false notions: and so, by this artifice, making evil pass for good, and good for evil, in all the great concerns of life. South's Sermons.

Nor be with all these tempting words abus'd;
These tempting words were all to Sappho us'd
Pope.

4. To treat with rudeness; to reproach.

I am no strumpet; but of life as honest
As you that thus abuse me. Shakesp. Othello.

But he mocked them, and laughed at them: and abused them shamefully, and spake proudly.
1 Mac. vii. 34.

Some praise at morning, what they blame at night;
But always think the last opinion right.
A muse by these is, like a mistress, us'd;
This hour she's idoliz'd, the next abus'd.
Pope's Essay on Criticism.

The next criticism seems to be introduced for no other reason, but to mention Mr. Bickerstaff, whom the author every where endeavours to imitate and abuse. Addison

ABU'SE. n. s. [from the verb abuse.]

1. The ill use of any thing.

The casting away things profitable for the sustenance of man's life, is an unthankful abuse of the fruits of God's good providence towards mankind. Hooker, b. v. § 9.

Little knows
Any, but God alone, to value right
The good before him, but perverts best things
To worst abuse, or to their meanest use.
Paradise Lost, b. iv.

2. A corrupt practice, bad custom.

The nature of things is such; that if abuses be not remedied, they will certainly increase.
Swift for Advancement of Religion.

3. Seducement.

Was it not enough for him, to have deceived me; and, through the deceit, abused me; and, after the abuse, forsaken me: but, that he must now, of all the company, and before all the company, lay want of beauty to my charge.
Sidney, b. ii.

4. Unjust censure, rude reproach, contumely.

I dark in light, expos'd
To daily fraud, contempt, abuse, and wrong.
Samson Agonistes.

ABU'SER. n. s. [from the verb abuse.]

1. He that makes an ill use.

2. He that deceives.

Next thou, the abuser of thy prince's ear.
Denham's Sophy.

3. He that reproaches with rudeness.

4. A ravisher, a violater.

ABU'SIVE. adj. [from abuse.]

1. Practising abuse.

The tongue mov'd gently first, and speech was low;
Till wrangling science taught it noise and show,
And wicked wit arose, thy most abusive foe.
Pope's Miscellanies.

Dame Nature, as the learned shew,
Provides each animal its foe;
Hounds hunt the hare; the wily fox
Devours your geese, the wolf your flocks;
Thus envy pleads a natural claim
To persecute the muse's fame;
On poets, in all times, abusive;
From Homer, down to Pope's, inclusive.
Swift's Miscel.

2. Containing abuse; as, an abusive lampoon.

Next, Comedy appear'd with great applause,
Till her licentious and abusive tongue
Waken'd the magistrate's coercive power. Rosem.

3. Deceitful; a sense little used, yet not improper.

It is verified, by a number of examples; that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored in integrum.
Bacon's Considera. on War with Spain.

ABU'SIVELY. adv [from abuse.]

1. Improperly, by a wrong use

The oil (abusively called spirit) of roses swims at the top of the water, in the form of a white butter; which I remember not to have observed in any other oil drawn in any limbeck.
Boyle's Sceptical Chymist.

2. Reproachfully.

The access of the town was only by a neck of land. Bacon.

There remained very advantageous accesses, for temptations to enter and invade men; the fortifications being very slender, little knowledge of immortality, or any thing beyond this life; and no assurance, that repentance would be admitted for sin. Hammond on Fundamentals.

And here th' access a gloomy grove defends;
And here th' unnavigable lake extends;
O'er whose unhappy waters, void of light,
No bird presumes to steer his airy flight.
Dryden's Æneid, vi.

2. The means, or liberty, of approaching either to things or men.

When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,
We are deny'd access unto his person,
Ev'n by those men that most have done us wrong.
Shakespeare.

They go, commissioned to require a peace;
And carry presents, to procure access.
Dryden's Æneid, viii. l. 209.

He grants what they besought;
Instructed, that to God is no access
Without Mediator; whose high office now
Moses in figure bears.
Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii. l. 239.

3. Increase, enlargement, addition.

The gold was accumulated, and store treasures, for the most part; but the silver is still growing. Besides, infinite is the access of territory and empire, by the same entelpaze. Bacon.

Nor think we ourselves unhelp'd of our
Good angels, our assistants at our birth,
Whose office is to pitch their tents about
Our dwellings, and with their heavenly arms
Encamp us round, to save us from the hands
Of violent foes: these from our infancy
Have charge upon them, as their special task,
To keep us in all our ways. And when we lie
Down on our beds, they pitch their nightly watch,
And all night long in silent shifts relieve
Each other, that no power of hell may dare
Approach us undiscover'd. Oft in dreams
Of life, passing the prison gates of sense,
We have communion with our fellow guards,
And hear their counsels: oft discern unseen
Both what the present and the future hour
Brings forth of good or ill to us or ours;
Which, thus foreknown, we take or shun, and oft
Arm, or implore assistance from above,
Off'rings or prayers, by them to be conveyed
Where need requires. Such joint care have they
To wait on man, appointed by the will
Of their great Sire, whom we rightly call
Our Father, who in heaven above all heavens
Enthroned, his glory there in fulness shows.
Unseen by mortal eye, but by the wise
In heart discerned, and thought by open eyes,
His face serene: they all his goodness see,
All whom his goodness hath vouchsafed access.
Cowley's Davideis, b. i.

Those things, which were indeed inexplicable, have been rackt and tortured to discover themselves; while the plainer and more accessible truths, as if despicable while easy, are clouded and obscured. Decay of Piety.

As an island, we are accessible on every side, and exposed to perpetual invasions; against which it is impossible to fortify ourselves sufficiently, without a power at sea. Addison's Freeholder.

In conversation, the tempers of men are open and accessible, their attention is awake, and their minds disposed to receive the strongest impressions; and, what is spoken, is generally more affecting, and more apposite to particular occasions. Rogers.

ACCE'SSION. n. s. [accessio, Lat. accession, Fr.]

1. Increase, by something added; enlargement, augmentation.

Nor could all the king's bounties, nor his own large accessions, raise a fortune to his heir; but, after vast sums of money, and great wealth gotten, he died unlamented. Clarendon.

There would not have been found the difference (here set down) betwixt the force of the air, when expanded, and what that force should have been according to the theory; but that the included inch of air received some little accession, during the trial Boyle's Spring of the Air.

The wisest among the nobles began to apprehend the growing power of the people; and therefore, knowing what an accession thereof would accrue to them, by such an addition of property, used all means to prevent it. Swift.

Charity indeed, and works of munificence, are the proper discharge of such over proportioned accessions, and the only virtuous enjoyment of them Roger's Sermons.

2. The act of coming to, or joining one's self to; as, accession to a confederacy.

Beside, what wise objections he prepares,
Against my late accession to the wars?
Does not the fool perceive, his argument
Is with more force against Achilles bent?
Dryden's Fables.

3. The act of arriving at; as, the King's accession to the throne.

A'CCESSORILY. adv. [from accessory.] In the manner of an accessory.

A'CCESSORY. adj. Joined to another thing, so as to increase it; additional.

In this kind there is not the least action, but it doth somewhat make to the accessory augmentation of our bliss. Hooker.

A'CCESSORY. n. s. [accessorius, Lat. accessoire, Fr.] This word, which had anciently a general signification, is now almost confined to forms of law.]

1. Applied to persons.

A man that is guilty of a felonious offence, not principaly but by participation; as, by commandment, advice, or concealment. And a man may be accessory to the offence of another, after two sorts; by the common law, or by statute: and, by the common law, two ways also; that is, before or after the fact. Before the fact; as, when one commandeth or adviseth another to commit a felony, and is not present at the execution thereof; for his presence makes him also a principal: wherefore there cannot be an accessory before the fact, in manslaughter; because manslaughter is sudden and not prepensed. Accessory after the fact is, when one receiveth him, whom he knoweth to have committed felony. Accessory by statute is he, that abets, counsels, or hides any man committing, or having committed, an offence made felony by statute. Cowell.

By the common law, the accessories cannot be proceeded against, till the principal has received his trial. Spens. State of Ireland.

But pause, my soul! and study, ere thou fall
On accidental joys, th' essential.
Still before accessories do abide
A trial, must the principal be try'd. Donne.

Now were all transform'd
Alike, to serpents all, as accessories
To his bold riot. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x. l. 520.

2. Applied to things.

An accessory is said to be that, which does accede under some principal fact or thing in law; and, as such, generally speaking, follows the reason and nature of its principal. Ayliffe.

A'CCIDENCE. n. s. [a corruption of accidents, from accidentia, Lat.] The little book, containing the first rudiments of grammar, and explaining the properties of the eight parts of speech.

I do confess, I do want eloquence;
And never yet did learn mine accidence.
Taylor the Water-poet.

A'CCIDENT. n. s. [accidens, Lat.]

1. The property or quality of any being, which may be separated from it, at least in thought.

If she were but the body's accident,
And her sole being did in it subsist,
As white in snow; she might herself absent,
And in the body's substance not be miss'd.
Sir J. Davies.

An accidental mode, or an accident, is such a mode, as is not necessary to the being of a thing; for the subject may be without it, and yet remain of the same nature that it was before; or it is that mode, which may be separated or abolished from its subject. Watts's Logick.

2. In grammar, the property of a word.

The learning of a language is nothing else but the informing of ourselves, what composures of letters are, by consent and institution, to signify such certain notions of things, with their modalities and accidents. Holder's Elements of Speech.

3. That which happens unforeseen; casualty, chance.

General laws are like general rules in physick; according whereunto, as no wise man will desire himself to be cured, if there be joined with his disease some special accident; in regard whereof, that, whereby others (in the same infirmity, but without the like accident) recover health, would be to him either hurtful, or at the least unprofitable. Hooker, b. v. § 9.

The flood, and other accidents of time, made it one common field and pasture with the land of Eden. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Our joy is turn'd
Into perplexity and new amaze;
For, whither is he gone? What accident
Hath wrapt him from us? Paradise Regain'd.

And trivial accidents shall be forborn,
That others may have time to take their turn.
Dryden's Fables.

The reformation owed nothing to the good intentions of king Henry. He was only an instrument of it (as the logicians speak) by accident.
Swift's Miscellanies.

ACCIDE'NTAL. n. s. [accidental, Fr. See ACCIDENT.] A property non-essential.

Conceive as much as you can of the essentials of any subject, before you consider its accidentals.
Watts's Logick.

ACCIDE'NTAL. adj. [from accident.]

1. Having the quality of an accident, nonessential; used with the particle to, before that, in which the accident inheres.

A distinction is to be made between what pleases naturally in itself, and what pleases upon the account of machines, actors, dances, and circumstances which are mere by accidental to the tragedy.
Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

This is accidental to a state of religion, and therefore ought to be reckoned among the ordinary difficulties of it. Tillotson.

2. Casual, fortuitous, happening by chance.

Some lie more open to our senses and daily observation; others are more occult and hidden; and, though accessible (in some measure) to our senses, yet not without great search and scrutiny, or some happy accident. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade.
Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

So shall you hear
Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;
Of deaths, put on by cunning and forc'd cause.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

Look upon things of the most accidental and mutable nature; accidental, in their production; and mutable, in their continuance: yet God's prescience of them is as certain in him, as the memory of them is, or can be in us. South's Sermons.

3. In the following passage, it seems to signify adventitious.

Ay, such a minister as wind to fire;
That adds an accidental fierceness to
Its natural fury. Denham's Sophy.

ACCIDE'NTALLY. adv. [from accidental.]

1. After an accidental manner; nonessentially.

Other points no less concern the commonwealth, though but accidentally depending upon the former. Spenser's St. of Irel.

I conclude choler accidentally bitter and acrimonious, but not in itself. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. Casually, fortuitously.

Although virtuous men do sometimes accidentally make their way to preferment; yet the world is so corrupted, that no man can reasonably hope to be rewarded in it, merely upon account of his virtue. Swift's Miscellanies.

ACCIDE'NTALNESS. n. s. [from accidental.] The quality of being accidental. Dict.

ACCI'PIENT. n. s. [accipiens, Lat] A receiver, perhaps sometimes used for recipient. Dict.

To ACCI'TE. v. a. [accito, Lat] To call, to summons; a word, not in use now.

Our coronation done, we will accite
(As I before remember'd) all our state;
And (heav'n consigning to my good intents)
No prince, no peer, shall have just cause to say,
Heav'n shorten Harry's happy life one day.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

ACCLA'IM. n. s. [acclamo, Lat. from which probably first the verb acclaim, now lost, and then the noun.] A shout of praise, acclamation.

Back from pursuit thy pow'rs, with loud acclaim,
Thee only extoll'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii. l. 397.

The herald ends; the vaulted firmament
With loud acclaims and vast applause is rent.
Dryd. Fables.

ACCLAMA'TION. n. s. [acclamatio, Lat.] Shouts of applause; such as those, with which a victorious army salutes the general.

It hath been the custom of Christian men, in token of the greater reverence, to stand, to utter certain words of acclamation; and, at the name of Jesus, to bow. Hooker, b. v. § 29.

Gladly then he mix'd
Among those friendly pow'rs, who him receiv'd
With joy and acclamations loud, that one
That (of so many myriads fall'n) yet one
Return'd, not lost. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. vi. l. 23.

Such an enchantment is there in words; and so fine a thing does it seem to some, to be ruined plausibly, and to be ushered to their destruction with panegyrick and acclamation. South.

ACCLI'VITY. n. s. [from acclivus, Lat.] The steepness or slope of a line inclining to the horizon, reckoned upwards; as, the ascent of a hill is the acclivity, the descent is the declivity. Quincy.

The hen, leaving their wives and younger children below, do (not without some difficulty) clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them; where they feed them, and milk them, and make butter and cheese, and do all the dairy-work. Ray on the Creation.

ACCLI'VOUS. adj. [acclivus, Lat.] Rising with a slope.

To ACCLO'Y. [See CLOY.]

1. To fill [illegible] sense; to crowd, to stuff fully; a word almost obsolete.

At the well head the purest streams arise:
But mucky filth his branching arms annoys,
And with uncomely weeds the gentle wave accloys
Fairy Queen

2. To fill to satiety; in which sense, cloy is still in use.

They, that escape best in the temperate zone, would be accloyed with long nights, very tedious, no less than forty days. Ray on the Creation.

To ACCO'IL. v. n. [See COIL.] To crowd, to keep a coil about, to bustle, to be in a hurry: a word now out of use.

About the cauldron many cooks accoil'd,
With hooks and ladles, as need did require;
The while the viands in the vessel boil'd,
They did about their business sweat, and sorely toil'd. Fairy Queen.

A'CCOLENT. n. s. [accolens, Lat.] He that inhabits near a place; a borderer. Dict.

ACCO'MMODABLE. adj. [accommodabilis, Lat.] That, which may be fitted; with the particle to.

As there is infinite variety in the circumstances of persons, things, actions, times, and places, so we must be furnished with such general rules, as are accommodable to all this variety, by a wise judgment and discretion. Watts's Logick.

To ACCO'MMODATE. v. a. [accommodo, Lat.]

1. To supply with conveniences of any kind.

It has with before the thing.

These three
(The rest do nothing) with this word, stand! stand!
Accommodated by the place (more charming
With their own nobleness, which could have turn'd
A distaff to a lance) gilded pale looks.
Shakesp. Cymbeline.

2. With the particle to; to adapt, to fit, to make consistent with.

He had altered many things: not, that they were not natural before; but that he might accommodate himself, to the age in which he lived. Dryden on Dramatic Poetry.

'Twas his misfortune, to light upon an hypothesis, that could not be accommodated to the nature of things and human affairs: his principles could not be made to agree with that constitution and order, which God hath settled in the world. Locke.

3. To reconcile; to adjust what seems inconsistent or at variance; to make consistency appear.

Part know how to accommodate St. James and St. Paul, better than some late reconcilers. Norris.

To ACCO'MMODATE. v. n. To be conformable to.

They make the particular ensigns of the twelve tribes accommodate unto the twelve signs of the zodiac. Brown.

Neither sort of chymists have duly considered, how great variety there is in the textures and consistencies of compound bodies; and how little the consistence and duration of many of them seem to accommodate and be explicable by the proposed notion. Boyle's Scept. Chym.

ACCO'MMODATE. adj. [accommodatus, Lat.] Suitable, fit; used sometimes with the particle for, but more frequently with to.

They are so acted and directed by nature, as to cast their eggs in such places as are most accommodate for the exclusion of their young; and where there is food ready for them, so soon as they be hatched. Ray on the Creation.

In these cases we examine the why, the what, and the how, of things; and propose means, accommodate to the end. L'Estrange.

God did not primarily intend to appoint this way of worship; and to impose it upon them as that, which was most proper and agreeable to him; but that he condescended to it, as most accommodate to their present state and inclination. Tillot.

ACCO'MMODATELY. adv. [from accommodate.] Suitably, fitly.

ACCOMMODA'TION. n. s. [from accommodate.]

1. Provision of conveniencies.

2. In the plural, conveniencies, things requisite to ease or refreshment.

The King's commissioners were to have such accommodations, as the other thought fit to leave to them; who had been very civil to the king's commissioners. Clarendon, b. viii.

3. Adaption, fitness; with the particle to.

Indeed that disputing physiology is no accommodation to your designs; which are not to teach men to cant endlessly about materia and forma. Glanville's Scepsis.

The organisation of the body, with accommodation to its functions, is fitted with the most curious mechanism. Hale's Origin.

4. Composition of a difference, reconciliation, adjustment.

ACCO'MPANABLE. adj. [from accompany.] Sociable: a word now not used.

A show (as it were) of an accompanable solitariness, and of a civil wildness. Sidney, b. i.

ACCO'MPANIER. n. s. [from accompany.] The person that makes part of the company; companion. Dict.

To ACCO'MPANY. v. a. [accompagner, Fr.] To be with another, as a companion. It is used both of persons and things.

Go visit her, in her chaste bower of rest,
Accompany'd with angel-like delights.
Spenser, Sonnet iii.

The great business of the senses being to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body, it is wisely ordered by nature, that pain should accompany the reception of several ideas. Locke.

As folly is usually accompanied with perverseness, so it is here. Swift's Short View of Ireland.

To ACCO'MPANY. v. n. To associate with; to become a companion to.

No man in effect doth accompany with others, but he learneth, ere he is aware, some gesture, voice, or fashion. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

ACCO'MPLICE. n. s. [complice, Fr. from complex, a word in the barbarous Latin, much in use.]

1. An associate, a partaker; usually in an ill sense.

There were several scandalous reports, industriously spread by Wood and his accomplices, to discourage all opposition against his infamous project. Swift.

2. A partner, or co operator; in a sense indifferent.

If a tongue would be talking, without a mouth; what could it have done, when it had all its organs of speech, and accomplices of sound about it? Addison, Spectator, No. 247.

3. It is used with the particle to, before a thing; and with, before a person.

Childless Arturius, vastly rich before,
Thus by his losses multiplies his store;
Suspected for accomplice to the fire,
That burnt his palace, but to build it higher.
Dryd. Juv. Sat.

Who, should they steal for want of his relief,
He judg'd himself accomplice with the thief.
Dryden's Fables

To ACCO'MPLISH. v. a. [accomplir, Fr. from compleo, Lat.]

1. To complete, to execute fully; as, to accomplish a design.

He, that is far off, shall die of the pestilence; and he that is near, shall fall by the sword; and he, that remaineth, and is besieged, shall die by the famine. Thus will I accomplish my fury upon them. Ezekiel, vi. 12.

2. To complete a period of time.

He would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem. Daniel, ix. 2.

3. To fulfil; as, a prophecy.

The vision,
Which I made known to Lucius ere the stroke
Of this yet scarce cold battle, at this instant
Is full accomplish'd. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

We see every day those events exactly accomplished, which our Saviour foretold at so great a distance. Addison.

4. To gain, to obtain

Tell him from me (as he will win my love)
He bear himself with honourable action;
Such as he hath observ'd in noble ladies
Unto their lords, by them accomplished.
Shakesp. Tam. of a Shrew.

I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap.
Oh miserable thought, and more unlikely,
Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns.
Shakesp. Henry V.

5. To adorn, or furnish, either mind or body.

From the tents,
The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation.
Shakesp. Henry V.

ACCO'MPLISHED. particip. adj.

1. Complete, in some qualification.

For, who expects, that under a tutor a young gentleman should be an accomplished publick orator or logician. Locke.

2. Elegant; finished, in respect of embellishments; used commonly of acquired qualifications, without including moral excellence.

The next I took to wife,
(O, that I never had! fond wish too late)
Was in the vale of Sorec, Dalila;
That specious monster, my accomplish'd snare.
Samson Agon.

ACCO'MPLISHER. n. s. [from accomplish.] The person that accomplishes. Dict.

ACCO'MPLISHMENT. n. s. [accomplissement, Fr.]

1. Completion, full performance, perfection.

This would be the accomplishment of their common felicity; in case, by their evil, either through destiny or advice, they suffered not the occasion to be lost. Sir John Hayward.

Thereby he might evade the accomplishment of those afflictions he now but gradually endureth. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

He thought it impossible to find, in any one body, all those perfections, which he sought for the accomplishment of a Helena; because nature, in any individual person, makes nothing that is perfect in all its parts. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Pref.

2. Completion; as, of a prophecy.

The miraculous success of the apostles' preaching, and the accomplishment of many of their predictions, which to those early Christians were matters of faith only, are to us matters of sight and experience. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. Embellishment, elegance, ornament of mind or body.

Young heirs, and elder brothers, from their own reflecting upon the estates they are born to, and therefore thinking all other accomplishments unnecessary, are of no manner of use, but to keep up their families. Addison, Spectator, No. 123.

4. The act of obtaining or perfecting any thing; attainment; completion.

The means suggested by policy and worldly wisdom, for the attainment of those earthly enjoyments, are unfit for that purpose; not only upon the account of their insufficiency for, but also of their frequent opposition and contrariety to, the accomplishment of such ends. South's Serm.

ACCO'MPT. n. s. [Fr. compter, and compte, anciently accompter. Skinner.] An account, a reckoning. See ACCOUNT.

The soul may have time, to call itself to a just accompt of all things past; by means whereof repentance is perfected. Hooker, b. v. § 46.

Each Christmas they accompts did clear,
And wound their bottom round the year. Prior.

ACCO'MPTANT, n. s. [accomptant, Fr.] A reckoner, computer. See ACCOUNTANT.

As the accompt runs on, generally the accomptant goes backward. South's Sermons.

ACCO'MPTING DAY. The day on which the reckoning is to be settled.

To whom thou much dost owe, thou much must pay;
Think on the debt against th' accompting day.
Sir J. Denham.

To ACCO'RD. v. a. [derived by some from corda, the string of a musical instrument; by others from corda, hearts: in the first implying harmony; in the other unanimity.]

1. To make agree; to adjust one thing to another; with the particle to.

The first sports, the shepherds shewed, were full of such leaps and gambols; as, being accorded to the pipe which they bore in their mouths, even as they danced, made a right picture of their chief god Pan, and his companions the satyrs. Sidn. b. i.

Her hands accorded the lute's musick to the voice; her panting heart danced to the musick. Sidn. b. ii

The lights and shades, whose well accorded strife
Gives all the strength and colour of our life.
Pope's Epist.

2. To bring to agreement; to compose; to accommodate.

Men would not rest upon bare contracts, without reducing the debt into a specialty; which created much certainty, and accorded many suits. Sir M. Hale.

To ACCO'RD. v. n. To agree, to suit one with another; with the particle with.

Things are often spoke, and seldom meant;
But (that my heart accordeth with my tongue,
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preserve my sovereign from his foe)
Say but the word, and I will be his priest.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

Several of the main parts of Moses's history, as concerning the flood, and the first fathers of the several nations of the world, do very well accord with the most ancient accounts of profane history. Tillotson, Sermon i.

Jarring int'rests of themselves create
Th' according musick of a well-mixt state. Pope.

ACCO'RD. n. s. [accord, Fr.]

1. A compact; an agreement; adjustment of a difference.

There was no means for him to satisfy all obligations to God and man: but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace between them. Bacon's Hen. VII.

If both are satisfy'd with this accord,
Swear by the laws of knighthood on my sword.
Dryden's Fables.

2. Concurrence, union of mind.

At last such grace I found, and means I wrought,
That I that lady to my spouse had won;
Accord of friends, consent of parents sought,
Affiance made, my happiness begun.
Spenser's Fairy Queen.

They gathered themselves together, to fight with Joshua and Israel, with one accord. Joshua, ix. 2.

3. Harmony, symmetry, just correspondence of one thing with another.

Beauty is nothing else but a just accord and mutual harmony of the members, animated by a healthful constitution. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Pref.

4. Musical note.

Try, if there were in one steeple two bells of unison, whether the striking of the one would move the other, more than if it were another accord. Bacon's Natural History, No. 291.

We must not blame Apollo, but his lute,
If false accords from her false strings be sent.
Sir J. Davies.

5. Own accord; voluntary motion: used both of persons and things.

Ne Guyon yet spake word,
Till that they came unto an iron door,
Which to them open'd of its own accord.
Fairy Queen.

Will you blame any man for doing that of his own accord, which all men should be compelled to do, that are not willing of themselves. Hooker.

All animal substances, exposed to the air, turn alkaline of their own accord; and some vegetables, by heat, will not turn acid, but alkaline. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

6. Action in speaking, correspondent to the words.

Titus, I am come to talk with thee;—
—No, not a word: how can I grace my talk,
Wanting a hand to give it that accord?
Shakespeare's Titus And.

ACCO'RDANCE. n. s. [from accord.]

1. Agreement with a person; with the particle with.

And prays he may in long accordance bide,
With that great worth, which hath such wonders wrought. Fairfax, b. ii. stanz. 63.

2. Conformity to something.

The only way of defining of sin, is by the contrariety to the will of God; as of good, by the accordance with that will. Hammond's Fundamentals.

ACCO'RDANT. adj. [accordant, Fr.] Willing; in a good humour. Not in use.

The prince discovered that he loved your niece; and meant to acknowledge it this night, in a dance; and if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly break with you of it. Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

ACCO'RDING. prep. [from accord, of which it is properly a participle, and is therefore never used but with to.]

1. In a manner suitable to, agreeably to, in proportion.

Our churches are places provided, that the people might there assemble themselves in due and decent manner, according to their several degrees and orders. Hooker, b. v. § 13

Our zeal then should be according to knowledge: and what kind of knowledge? Without all question, first, according to the true, saving, evangelical knowledge. It should be according to the gospel, the whole gospel: not only according to its truths, but precepts; not only according to its free grace, but necessary duties; not only according to its mysteries, but also it commandments. Sprat's Sermons.

Noble is the fame that is built on candour and ingenuity, according to those beautiful lines of Sir John Denham. Addison, Spectator.

2. With regard to.

God made all things in number, weight, and measure; and gave them to be considered by us according to these properties, which are inherent in created beings. Holder on time.

3. In proportion. The following phrase is, I think, vitious.

A man may, with prudence and a good conscience, approve of the professed principles of one party more than the other, according as he thinks they best promote the good of church and state.
Swift's Church of England Man.

ACCO'RDINGLY. adv. [from accord.] Agreeably, suitably, conformably.

As the actions of men are of sundry distinct kinds, so the laws thereof must accordingly be distinguished. Hooker, b. i.

Sirrah, thou'rt said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world;
And squar'st thy life accordingly.
Shakespeare's Measure for Meas.

Whoever is so assured of the authority and sense of scripture, as to believe the doctrine of it, and to live accordingly, shall be saved. Tillots. Preface.

Mealy substances, fermented, turn sour. Accordingly, given to a weak child, they still retain their nature; for bread will give them the cholic.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To* ACCO'ST. v. a. [accoster, Fr.] To speak to first; to address; to salute.

You mistake, knight: accost her, front her, board her, woo her, assail her.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

At length, collecting all his serpent wiles,
With soothing words renew'd, him thus accosts.
Parad. Reg.

I first accosted him: I su'd, I sought;
And, with a loving force, to Pheneus brought.
Dryden's Æneid.

ACCO'STABLE. adj. [from accost.] Easy of access; familiar. Not in use.

They were both indubitable, strong, and high-minded men, yet of sweet and accostable nature, almost equally delighting in the press and affluence of dependents and suitors. Wotton.

ACCO'UNT. n. s. [from the old French accompt, from computus, Lat. It was originally written accompt, which see; but by gradually softening the pronunciation, in time the orthography changed to account.]

1. A computation of debts or expenses; a register of facts relating to money.

At many times I brought in my accounts,
Laid them before you: you would throw them off;
And say, you found them in mine honesty.
Shakespeare's Timon.

When my young master has once got the skill of keeping accounts (which is a business of reason, more than arithmetic) perhaps it will not be amiss, that his father from thenceforth require him to do it in all his concernments. Locke on Educ.

2. The state or result of a computation; as, the account stands thus between us.

Behold, this have I found, saith the Preacher; counting one by one, to find out the account.
Ecclesiasticus, vii. 27.

3. Such a state of persons or things, as may make them more or less worthy of being considered in the reckoning. Value, or estimation.

For the care, that they took for their wives and their children, their brethren and kinsfolks, was in least account with them: but the greatest and principal fear was, for the holy temple.
2 Maccab. xv. 18.

That good affection, which things of smaller account have once set on work, is by so much the more easily raised higher. Hooker, b. v. § 33.

I should make more account of their judgment, who are men of sense, and yet have never touched a pencil; than of the opinion, given by the greatest part of painters. Dryden's Dufresn.

4. Profit; advantage; to turn to account is to produce advantage.

We would establish our souls in such a solid and substantial virtue, as will turn to account in that great day, when it must stand the test of infinite wisdom and justice. Add. Spect. No. 399.

5. Distinction, dignity, rank.

There is such a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apostrophising Eumæus: it is generally applied, by that poet, only to men of account and distinction. Pope's Odyssey; notes.

6. A reckoning verified, by finding the value of a thing equal to what it was accounted.

Considering the usual motives of human actions, which are pleasure, profit, and ambition; I cannot yet comprehend how those persons find their account in any of the three. Swift.

7. A reckoning referred to, or sum charged upon any particular person; and thence, figuratively, regard; consideration, sake.

If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee aught, put that on my account. Philemon, i. 8.

This must be always remembered; that nothing can come into the account of recreation, that is not done with delight. Locke on Education, § 197.

In matters, where his judgment led him to oppose men on a public account, he would do it vigorously and heartily. Atterbury's Sermons.

The assertion is our Saviour's, though uttered by him in the person of Abraham the father of the faithful; who, on the account of that character, is very fitly introduced. Atterbury.

These tribunes kindled great dissensions between the nobles and the commons, on the account of Coriolanus, a nobleman, whom the latter had impeached. Swift's Contests in Athens and Rome

Nothing can recommend itself to our love, on any other account, but either as it promotes our present, or is a means to assure to us a future happiness. Rogers's Sermon v.

Sempronius gives no thanks on this account.
Addison's Cato.

8. A narrative, relation; in this use it may seem to be derived from conte, Fr. a tale, a narration.

9. The review or examination of an affair taken by authority; as, the magistrate took an account of the tumult.

Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants; and, when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand talents. Matt. xix. 23, 24.

10. The relation and reasons of a transaction, given to a person in authority.

What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The true ground of morality can only be the will and law of a God, who sees men in the dark, has in his hands rewards and punishments, and power enough to call to account the proudest offender. Locke.

11. Explanation; assignment of causes.

It is easy to give account how it comes to pass, that though all men desire happiness, yet their wills carry them so contrarily. Locke

It being, in our author's account, a right acquired by begetting, to rule over those he had begotten, it was not a power possible to be inherited, because the right, being consequent to, and built on, an act perfectly personal, made that power so too, and impossible to be inherited. Locke.

12. An opinion previously established.

These were designed to join with the forces at sea; there being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats, to transport the land forces under the wing of the great navy: for they made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas.
Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain.

A prodigal young fellow, that had sold his clothes; upon the sight of a swallow made account, that summer was at hand, and away went his shirt too. L'Estrange, Fab. cxxvii.

13. The reasons of any thing collected.

Being convinced, upon all accounts, that they had the same reason to believe the history of our Saviour; as that of any other person, to which they themselves were not actually eye-witnesses; they were bound, by all the rules of historical faith and of right reason, to give credit to this history.
Addison.

14. In law.

Account is, in the common law, taken for a writ or action, brought against a man; that, by means of office or business undertaken, is to render an account unto another; as a bailiff toward his master, a guardian to his ward. Cowell.

To* ACCO'UNT. v. a. [See ACCOUNT.]

1. To esteem, to think, to hold in opinion.

That also was accounted a land of giants. Deut.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. To assign to, as a debt; with the particle to.

For some years really accrued the yearly sum of two hundred thousand pounds to the king's coffers; and it was, in truth, the only project, that was accounted to his own service. Clarendon.

4. To hold in esteem; with of.

Silver was nothing accounted of, in the days of Solomon. Chron.

To* ACCO'UNT. v. n.

1. To reckon.

The calendar months are likewise arbitrarily and unequally settled, by the same power, by which months we, to this day, account; and they measure and make up that which we call the Julian year. Holder on Time.

2. To give an account, to assign the causes; in which sense it is followed by the particle for.

If any one should ask, why our general continued so easy to the last? I know no other way to account for it, but by that unmeasurable love of wealth, which his best friends allow to be his predominant passion. Swift.

3. To make up the reckoning; to answer; with for.

Then thou shalt see him plung'd, when least he fears;
At once accounting for his deep arrears.
Dryden's Juv. Sat. xiii.

They have no uneasy presages of a future reckoning, wherein the pleasures they now taste must be accounted for; and may perhaps be outweighed by the pains which shall then lay hold of them.
Atterbury's Sermons

4. To appear as the medium by which any thing may be explained.

Such, as have a faulty circulation through the lungs, ought to eat very little at a time; because the increase of the quantity of fresh chyle must make that circulation still more uneasy: which, indeed, is the case of consumptive and some asthmatic persons; and accounts for the symptoms they are troubled with after eating. Arbuth. on Aliments

ACCO'UNTABLE. adj. [from account.] Of whom an account may be required; who must answer for: followed by the particle to, before the person; and for, before the thing.

Accountable to none
But to my conscience and my God alone. Oldham.

Thinking themselves excused from standing upon their own legs, or being accountable for their own conduct, they very seldom trouble themselves with enquiries. Locke on Education.

The good magistrate will make no distinction: for the judgment is God's; and he will look upon himself as accountable at his bar for the equity of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

ACCOU'NTANT. adj. [from account.] Accountable to; responsible for. Not in use.

His offence is so, as it appears
Accountant to the law upon that pain.
Shakespeare's Meas. for Meas.
I love her too;
Not out of absolute lust (though peradventure
I stand accountant for as great a sin)
But partly led to diet my revenge.
Shakespeare's Othello.

ACCO'UNTANT. n. s. [See ACCOMPTANT.] A computer; a man, skilled or employed in accounts.

The different compute of divers states; the short and irreconcileable years of some; the exceeding errour in the natural frame of others; and the false deductions of ordinary accountants in most. Brown's Vulgar Errours

ACCO'UNT-BOOK. n. s. A book containing accounts.

I would endeavour, to comfort myself upon the loss of friends, as I do upon the loss of money; by turning to my account-book, and seeing whether I have enough left for my support. Swift.

ACCO'UNTING. n. s. [from account.] The act of reckoning, or making up of accounts.

This method, faithfully observed, must keep a man from breaking, or running behind-hand, in his spiritual estate; which, without frequent accountings, he will hardly be able to prevent. South's Sermons.

To ACCO'UPLE. v. a. [accoupler, Fr.] To join, to link together. We now use couple.

He sent a solemn embassage, to treat a peace and league with the king; accoupling it with an article in the nature of a request. Bacon's Henry VII.

To ACCO'URAGE. v. a. [Obsolete. See COURAGE.] To animate.

That forward pair she ever would assuage,
When they would strive due reason to exceed;
But that same froward twain would accourage,
And of her plenty add unto her need.
Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. 2.

To ACCO'URT. v. a. [See To COURT.] To entertain with courtship, or courtesy; a word, now not in use

Who all this while were at their wanton rest,

Fairy Queen.

To ACCOU'TRE. v. a. Accoûtrer, Fr.] To dress, to equip.

Is it for this, they study? to grow pale,
And miss the pleasures of a glorious meal?
For this, in rags accoutre, are they seen,
And made the May-game of the public spleen?
Dryden.

ACCO'UTREMENT. n. s. [accoûtrement, Fr.] Dress, equipage; furniture, relating to the person; trappings, ornaments.

I profess requital to a hair's breadth not only in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Christianity is lost among them, in the trappings and accoutrements of it; with which, instead of adorning religion, they have strangely disguised it; and quite stifled it, in the crowd of external rites and ceremonies. Tillotson, Sermon xxviii.

I have seen the pope officiate at St. Peter's; where, for two hours together, he was busied in putting on or off his different accoutrements, according to the different parts he was to act in them.
Addison, Spectator, No. 201.

How gay with all th' accoutrements of war,
The Britons come, with gold well-fraught they come. Phil

ACCRETION. n. s. [Accretio, Lat.] The act of growing to another, so as to increase it.

Plants do nourish; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 602.

The changes seem to be effected by the exhaling of the moisture; which may leave the tinging corpuscles more dense, and something augmented by the accretion of the oily and earthy parts of that moisture. Newton's Optics.

Infants support abstinence worst, from the quantity of aliment consumed in accretion.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACCRE'TIVE. adj. [from accretion.] Growing; that, which by growth is added.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants and animals; and the sly shadow steals away upon the dial; and the quickest eye can discover no more, but that it is gone. Glanville's Scepsis.

To ACCRO'ACH. v. a. [accrocher, Fr.] To draw to one, as with a hook; to gripe; to draw away by degrees, what is another's.

ACCRO'ACHMENT. n. s. [from accroach.] The act of accroaching. Dict.

To ACCRU'E. v. n. [from the participle accrû, formed from accroître, Fr.]

1. To accede to, to be added to; as a natural production or effect, without any particular respect to good or ill.

The Son of God, by his incarnation, hath changed the manner of that personal subsistence; no alteration thereby accruing to the nature of God. Hooker, b. v. § 54.

2. To be added, as an advantage or improvement, in a sense inclining to good rather than ill; in which meaning it is more frequently used, by later authors.

From which compact there arising an obligation upon every one, so to convey his meaning; there accrues also a right to every one, by the same signs, to judge of the sense or meaning of the person, so obliged to express himself. South's Sermons.

Let the evidence of such a particular miracle be never so bright and clear, yet it is still but particular; and must therefore want that kind of force, that degree of influence, which accrues to a standing general proof, from its having been tried or approved, and consented to, by men of all ranks and capacities, of all tempers and interests, of all ages and nations. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. To append to, or arise from: as, an ill consequence; this sense seems to be less proper.

His scholar Aristotle as in many other particulars, so likewise in this did justly oppose him, and became one of the authors; choosing a certain benefit, before the hazard that might accrue from the disrespects of ignorant persons. Wilkins.

4. In a commercial sense, to be produced, or arise; as, profits.

The yearly benefit that, out of those his works, accrueth to her majesty, amounteth to one thousand pounds. Carew's Survey.

The great profits, which have accrued to the duke of Florence from his free port, have set several of the states of Italy on the same project.
Addison on Italy.

5. To follow, as loss; a vitious use.

The benefit or loss of such a trade accruing to the government, until it comes to take root in the nation. Temple's Misc.

ACCUBA'TION. n. s. [from accubo, to lie down to, Lat.] The ancient posture of leaning at meals.

It will appear, that accubation, or lying down at meals, was a gesture used by very many nations.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To ACCU'MB. v. a. [accumbo, Lat.] To lie at the table, according to the ancient manner. Dict.

ACCU'MBENT. adj. [accumbens, Lat.] Leaning.

The Roman recumbent, or (more properly) accumbent posture in eating, was introduced after the first Punic war. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To ACCU'MULATE. v. a. [from accumulo, Lat.] To heap one thing upon another; to pile up, to heap together. It is used either literally, as, to accumulate money; or figuratively, as to accumulate merit or wickedness.

If thou dost slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more; abandon all remorse;
On horrors head horrors accumulate;
For nothing canst thou to damnation add.
Shakespeare's Othello

Crusht by imaginary treasons weight,
Which too much merit did accumulate.
Sir John Denham

ACCUMULA'TION. n. s. [from accumulate.]

1. The act of accumulating.

One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant,
For quick accumulation of renown,
Which he atchiev'd by th' minute, lost his favour
Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra

Some perhaps might otherwise wonder at such an accumulation of benefits; like a kind of embroidering, or listing of one favour upon another.
Wotton.

2. The state of being accumulated.

By the regular returns of it in some people, and their freedom from it after the morbid matter is exhausted; it looks, as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of it, as of other humours in the body. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ACCU'MULATIVE. adj. [from accumulate.]

1. That, which accumulates.
2. That, which is accumulated.

If the injury meet not with meekness, it then acquires another accumulative guilt; and stands answerable not only for its own positive ill, but for all the accidental, which it causes in the sufferer. Government of the Tongue.

ACCUMULA'TOR. n. s. [from accumulate.] He, that accumulates; a gatherer or heaper together.

Injuries may fall upon the passive man; yet, without revenge, there would be no broils and quarrels, the great accumulators and multipliers of injuries. Decay of Piety.

A'CCURACY. n. s. [accuratio, Lat.] Exactness, nicety.

This perfect artifice and accuracy might have been omitted, and yet they have made shift to move. More.

Quickness of imagination is seen in the invention, fertility in the fancy, and the accuracy in the expression. Dryden.

The man, who hath the studied ignorance, or hardened effrontery, to insult the revealed will of God; or the petulant conceit, to turn it into ridicule; or the arrogance, to make his own perfections the measure of the Divinity: or, at best, that can collate a text, or quote an authority, with an insipid accuracy; or demonstrate a plain proposition, in all fo mality: these now are the only men worth mentioning. Delany.

We consider the uniformity of the whole design, accuracy of the calculations, and skill in restoring and comparing passages of ancient authors. Arbuthnot on Coins.

A'CCURATE. adj. [accuratus, Lat.]

1. Exact, as opposed to negligence or ignorance, applied to persons.
2. Exact, without defect or failure, applied to things.

No man living has made more accurate trials than Reaumure, that brightest ornament of France. Colson.

3. Determinate; precisely fixed.

These conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influences upon these things below, than indeed they have but in gross. Bacon.

A'CCURATELY. adv. [from accurate.] In an accurate manner; exactly, without errour, nicely.

The sine of incidence is either accurately, or very nearly, in a given ratio to the sine of refraction. Newton.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter, should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes; and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom. Bentley.

A'CCURATENESS. n. s. [from accurate.] Exactness; nicety.

But sometime after, suspecting that in making this observation I had not determined the diameter of the sphere with sufficient accurateness, I repeated the experiment. Newton.

To ACCU'RSE. v. a. [See CURSE.] To doom to misery; to invoke misery upon any one.

As if it were an unlucky comet, or as if God had so accursed it; that it should never shine, to give light in things concerning our duty any way towards him. Hooker.

When Hildebrand accursed and cast down from his throne, Henry IV., there were none so hardy, as to defend their lord. Sir W. Raleigh's Essays.

ACCU'RSED. part. adj.

1. That, which is cursed or doomed to misery.

'Tis the most certain sign the world's accurst,
That the best things corrupted are, and worst.
Denham.

2. That, which deserves the curse; execrable, hateful, detestable; and, by consequence, wicked, malignant.

A swift blessing
May soon return, to this our suffering country,
Under a hand accurs'd. Shakes. Macbeth.

The chief part of the misery of wicked men, and those accursed spirits, the devils, is this; that they are of a disposition contrary to God. Tillot.

They, like the seed from which they sprung,
accurst,
Against the gods immortal hatred nurst. Dryd.

ACCU'SABLE. adj. [from the verb accuse.] That which may be censured; blameable, culpable.

There would be a manifest defect, and Nature's improvision were justly accusable; if animals, so subject unto diseases from bilious causes, should want a proper conveyance for choler.
Browne's Vulgar Errours.

ACCUSA'TION. n. s. [from accuse.]

1. The act of accusing.

Thus they in mutual accusation spent
The fruitless hours, but neither self-condemning;
And of their vain contest, appear'd no end.
Milton.

2. The charge, brought against any one by the accuser.

You read
These accusations; and these grievous crimes,
Committed by your person and your followers.
Shakespeare.

All accusation, in the very nature of the thing, still supposing, and being founded upon some law: for, where there is no law, there can be no transgression; and, where there can be no transgression, I am sure there ought to be no accusation.
South.

3. [In the sense of the courts.] A declaration of some crime, preferred before a competent judge, in order to inflict some judgement on the guilty person.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

ACCU'SATIVE. adj. [accusativus, Lat.] A term of grammar signifying the relation of the noun, on which the action implied in the verb terminates.

ACCU'SATORY. adj. [from accuse.] That which produceth or containeth an accusation.

In a charge of adultery, the accuser ought to set forth, in the accusatory libel, some certain and definite time. Ayliffe.

To ACCU'SE. v. a. [from accuso, Lat.]

1. To charge with a crime. It requires the particle of, before the subject of accusation.

He stripp'd the bears-foot of its leafy growth;
And, calling western winds, accused the spring of sloth. Dryden's Virgil.

The professors are accused of all the ill practices, which may seem to be the ill consequences of their principles. Addison.

2. It sometimes admits the particle for.

Never send up a leg of a fowl at supper, while there is a cat or dog in the house, that can be accused for running away with it: but, if there happen to be neither, you must lay it upon the rats, or a strange greyhound. Swift.

3. To blame or censure, in opposition to applause or justification.

Their conscience bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing or else excusing one another. Rom. ii. 15.

Your valour would your sloth too much accuse;
And therefore, like themselves, they princes choose. Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

ACCU'SER. n. s. [from accuse.] He that brings a charge against another.

There are some persons forbidden to be accusers, on the score of their sex, as women; others, of their age, as pupils und infants; others, upon the account of some crimes committed by them, and others, on the score of some filthy lucre they propose to gain thereby; others, on the score of their conditions, as libertines against their patrons; and others, through a suspicion of calumny, as having once already given false evidence; and lastly, others, on account of their poverty, as not being worth more than fifty aurei. Ayliffe's Parergon.

——That good man, who drank the pois'nous draught,
With mind serene; and could not wish, to see
His vile accuser drink as deep as he. Dryden.

If the person accused maketh his innocence plainly to appear upon his trial, the accuser is immediately put to an ignominious death; and, out of his goods and lands, the innocent person is quadruply recompensed. Gulliver's Travels.

To ACCU'STOM. v. a. [accoûtume, Fr.] To habituate, to inure; with the particle to. It is used chiefly of persons.

How shall we breathe in other air
Less pure, accustom'd to immortal fruits. Milton.

It has been some advantage, to accustom one's self to books of the same edition.
Watts's Imp. of the Mind.

To ACCU'STOM. v. n. To be wont to do any thing. Obsolete.

A boat over-freighted sunk, and all drowned, saving one woman, that in her first popping up again (which most living things accustom) got hold of the boat. Carew.

ACCU'STOMABLE. adj. [from accustom.] Of long custom or habit; habitual, customary.

Animals (even of the same original, extraction, and species may be diversified by accustomable residence in one climate, from what they are in another. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ACCU'STOMABLY. adv. According to custom.

Touching the king's fines, accustomably paid for the purchasing of writs original, I find no certain beginning of them; and do therefore, think that they grew up with the chancery. Bacon's Alien.

ACCU'STOMANCE. n. s. [accoûtumance, Fr.] Custom, habit, use.

Through accustomance and negligence, and perhaps some other causes, we neither feel it in our own bodies, nor take notice of it in others. Boyle.

ACCU'STOMARILY. adv. In a customary manner; according to common or customary practice.

Go on, rhetorick; and expose the peculiar eminency, which you accustomarily marshal before logic to public view. Cleaveland.

ACCU'STOMARY. adj. [from accustom.] Usual, practised; according to custom.

ACCU'STOMED. adj. [from accustom.] According to custom; frequent, usual.

Look, how she rubs her hands!—It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands: I have known her continue in this, a quarter of an hour. Shakespeare's Macbeth

ACE. n. s. [As not only signified a piece of money, but any integer: from whence is derived the word ace, or unit. Thus As signified the whole inheritance.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

1. An unit; a single point, on cards or dice.

When lots are shuffled together in a lap, urn, or pitcher; or if a man blindfold casts a die; what reason in the world can he have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black, or throw an ace rather than a size; South.

2. A small quantity; a particle; an atom.

He will not bate an ace of absolute certainty; but, however doubtful or improbable the thing is, coming from him it must go for an indisputable truth. Government of the Tongue.

I'll not wag an ace farther: the whole world shall not bribe me to it. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

ACE'PHALOUS. adj. [ἀκέφαλος, Gr.] Without a head. Dict.

ACE'RB, adj. [acerbus, Lat.] Acid, with an addition of roughness; as most fruits are before they are ripe. Quincy.

ACE'RBITY. n. s. [acerbitas, Lat.]

1. A rough sour taste.

2. Applied to men, sharpness of temper; severity.

True it is, that the talents for criticism (namely, smartness, quick censure, vivacity of remark; indeed all, but acerbity) seem rather the gifts of youth, than of old age. Pope.

To ACE'RVATE. v. a. [acervo, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.

ACERVA'TION. n. s. [from acervate.] The act of heaping together.

ACE'RVOSE. adj. Full of heaps. Dict.

ACE'SCENT. adj. [acescens, Lat.] That which has a tendency to sourness or acidity.

The same persons (perhaps) had enjoyed their health as well, with a mixture of animal diet, qualified with a sufficient quantity of acescents; as bread, vinegar, and fermented liquors.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACE'TOSE. adj. That which has in it any thing sour.

ACETO'SITY. n. s. [from acetose.] The state of being acetose, or of containing sourness. Dict.

ACE'TOUS. adj. [from acetum, vinegar,

Lat.] Having the quality of vinegar; sour.

Raisins, which consist chiefly of the juice of grapes, inspissated in the skins or husks by the avolation of the superfluous moisture through their pores being distilled in a retort did not afford any vinous, but rather an acetous, spirit. Boyle.

ACHE. n. s. [ace, Sax. ἀχθος, Gr. now generally written ake, and in the plural akes, of one syllable; the primitive manner being preserved chiefly in poetry, for the sake of the measure.] A continued pain. See AKE.

I'll rack thee with old cramps;
Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar,
That beasts shall tremble at thy din. Shakesp.

A coming show'r your shooting corns presage,
Old aches throb, your hollow tooth will rage. Swift.

To ACHE. v. n. [See ACHE.] To be in pain.

Upon this account, our senses are dulled and spent by any extraordinary intention; and our very eyes will ache, if long fixed upon any difficultly discerned object. Glanville.

To ACHI'EVE. v. a. [achever, Fr. to complete.]

1. To perform; to finish a design prosperously.

Our toils, my friends, are crowned with sure success:
The greater part perform'd, achieve the less. Dryd.

2. To gain, to obtain.

Experience is by industry achiev'd,
And perfected by the swift course of time. Shakesp.

Tranio, I burn, I pine; I perish, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modest girl. Shakesp.

Thou hast achiev'd our liberty, confin'd
Within hell-gates till now. Milton.

Show all the spoils by valiant kings achiev'd,
And groaning nations by their arms reliev'd. Prior.

ACHI'EVER. n. s. He, that performs; he, that obtains, what he endeavours after.

A victory is twice itself, when the achiever brings home full numbers.
Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

ACHI'EVEMENT. n. s. [achevement, Fr.]

1. The performance of an action.

From every coast, that heaven walks about,
Have thither come the noble martial crew,
That famous hard achievements still pursue.
Fairy Queen.

2. The escutcheon or ensigns armorial, granted to any man for the performance of great actions.

Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife
Immortal, be the business of my life;
And in thy fame, the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof, my banner shall be hung,
Rank'd with my champion's bucklers; and below,
With arms revers'd th' achievements of the foe.
Dryden.

Achievement, in the first sense is derived from achieve, as it signifies to perform; in the second, from achieve, as it imports to gain.

A'CHING, n. s. [from ache.] Pain; uneasiness.

When old age comes to wait upon a great and worshipful sinner: it comes, attended with many painful girds and achings called the gout. South.

A'CHOR. n. s. [achor, Lat. ἀχώρ, Gr. furfur.] A species of the herpes; it appears with a crusty scab, which causes an itching on the surface of the head, occasioned by a salt sharp serum oozing through the skin. Quincy.

A'CID. adj. [acidus, Lat. acide, Fr.] Sour, sharp.

Wild trees last longer than garden trees; and in the same kind, those, whose fruit is acid, more than those, whose fruit is sweet.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Acid or sour proceeds from a salt of the same nature, without mixture of oil; in austere tastes, the oily parts have not disentangled themselves, from the salts and earthy parts; such is the taste of unripe fruits. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Liquors and substances are called acids, which, being composed of pointed particles, affect the taste in a sharp and piercing manner. The common way of trying, whether any particular liquor hath in it any particles of this kind, is by mixing it with syrup of violets, when it will turn of a red colour; but if it contains alkaline or lixivial particles, it changes that syrup green. Quincy.

ACI'DITY. n. s. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; an acid taste: sharpness; sourness.

Fishes, by the help of a dissolvent liquor, corrode and reduce their meat, skin, bones, and all, into a chylus or cremor; and yet this liquor manifests nothing of acidity to the taste. Ray.

When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundance of a bilious alkali; and demands a quite different diet, from the case of acidity or sourness. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'CIDNESS. n. s. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; acidity. See ACIDITY.

ACI'DULÆ. n. s. [that is, aquæ acidulæ.] Medicinal springs, impregnated with sharp particles; as all the nitrous, chalybeate and alum springs are: Quin.

The acidulæ, or medicinal springs, emit a greater quantity of their minerals than usual; and even the ordinary springs, which were before clear, fresh, and limpid, become thick and turbid, and are impregnated with sulphur and other minerals, as long as the earthquake lasts.
Woodward's Natural History.

To ACI'DULATE. v. a. [aciduler, Fr.] To impregnate or tinge with acids in a slight degree.

A diet of fresh unsalted things, watery liquors acidulated, farinaceous emollient substances, sour milk, butter, and acid fruits.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ACKNO'WLEDGE. v. a. [a word formed, as it seems between the Latin and English, from agnosco, and knowledge; which is deduced from the Saxon cnapan to know.]

1. To own the knowledge of; to own any thing or person in a particular character.

My people do already know my mind;
And will acknowledge you and Jessica,
In place of lord Bassanio and myself. Shakesp.

None, that acknowledge God or providence,
Their souls eternity did ever doubt. Davies.

2. To confess; as, a fault.

For I acknowledge my transgressions; and my sin is ever before me. Psalm li. 3

3. To own; as, a benefit; sometimes with the particle to, before the person conferring the benefit.

His spirit
Taught them; but they his gifts acknowledg'd not. Milton.

In the first place therefore, I thankfully acknowledge to the Almighty power the assistance he has given me, in the beginning and the prosecution of my present studies. Dryden.

ACKNO'WLEDGING. adj. [from acknowledge.] Grateful; ready to acknowledge benefits received. A Gallicism, reconnoissant.

He has shewn his hero acknowledging and ungrateful, compassionate and hard-hearted; but, at the bottom, fickle and self-interested. Dryd. Virg.

ACKNO'WLEDGMENT. n. s. [from acknowledge.]

1. Concession of any character in another; as, existence, superiority.

The due contemplation of the human nature doth, by a necessary connection and chain of causes, carry us up to the unavoidable acknowledgement of the Deity; because it carries every thinking man, to an original of every successive individual. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Concession of the truth of any position.

Immediately upon the acknowledgment of the christian faith, the eunuch was baptised by Philip. Hooker.

3. Confession of a fault.

4. Confession of a benefit received; gratitude.

5. Act of attestation to any concession; such as homage.

There be many wide countries in Ireland, in which the laws of England were never established, nor any acknowledgement of subjection made.
Spencer's State of Ireland.

6. Something given or done, in confession of a benefit received.

The second is an acknowledgment to his majesty for the leave of fishing upon his coasts; and though this may not be grounded upon any treaty, yet, if it appear to be an ancient right on our side, and custom on theirs, not determined or extinguished by any treaty between us, it may with justice be insisted on. Temple's Mis.

A'CME. n. s. [ἀκμη, Gr.] The height of any thing; more especially used to denote the height of a distemper, which is divided into four periods. 1. The arche, the beginning or first attack. 2. Anabasis, the growth. 3. Acme, the height. And, 4. Paracme, which is the declension of the distemper. Quincy.

ACO'LOTHIST. n. s. [ἀκολουθίω, Gr.] One of the lowest order, in the Romish church; whose office is, to prepare the elements for the offices, to light the church, &c.

It is duty, according to the papal law, when the bishop sings mass, to order all the inferior clergy to appear in their proper habits; and to see that all the offices of the church be rightly performed; to ordain the acolothist, to keep the sacred vessels. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'COLYTE, n. s. [The same with ACOLOTHIST.]

A'CONITE. n. s. [aconitum, Lat.] Properly the herb wolfs bane; but commonly used in poetical language, for poison in general.

Our land is from the rage of tygers freed,
Nor nourishes the lion's angry seed;
Nor pois'nous aconite is here produc'd,
Or grows unknown, or is (when known) refus'd.
Dryden.

Despair, that aconite does prove,
And certain death to others love,
That poison never yet withstood,
Does nourish mine, and turns to blood. Granville

A'CORN. n. s. [Æcopn, Sax. from ac, an oak, and copn, corn or grain; that is, the grain or fruit of the oak.] The seed or fruit, born by the oak.

Errours, such as are but acorns in our younger brows, grow oaks in our older heads, and become inflexible. Brown

Content with food, which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed:

Cornels and bramble-berries gave the rest;
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast.
Dryden's Ovid.

He, that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak, or the apples he gathered from the trees in the wood, has certainly appropriated them to himself. Locke.

A'CORNED, adj. [from acorn.] Stored with acorns.

Like a full acorn'd boar. Shakespeare.

ACO'USTICKS, n. s. [ἀκουστικὸς, of ἀκούω, Gr. to hear.]

1. The doctrine or theory of sounds.
2. Medicines to help the hearing. Quincy.

To ACQUAINT, v. a. [accointer, Fr.]

1. To make familiar with; applied either to persons or things. It has with, before the object.

We, that acquaint ourselves with ev'ry zone,
And pass the tropicks, and behold each pole;
When we come home, are to ourselves unknown,
And unacquainted still with our own soul.
Davies.

There with thee, new welcome saint,
Like fortunes may her soul acquaint. Milton.

Before a man can speak on any subject, it is necessary to be acquainted with it.
Locke on Education.

Acquaint yourselves with things ancient and modern, natural, civil, and religious, domestic and national, things of your own and foreign countries; and, above all, be well acquainted with God and yourselves; learn animal nature, and the workings of your own spirits. Watts's Logick.

2. To inform. With is more in use before the object, than of.

But for some other reasons, my grave Sir,
Which is not fit you know, I not acquaint
My father of this business.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

A friend in the country acquaints me, that two or three men of the town are got among them, and have brought words and phrases, which were never before in those parts. Tatler.

ACQUA'INTANCE, n. s. [accointance, Fr.]

1. The state of being acquainted with; familiarity, knowledge. It is applied, as well to persons as things, with the particle with.

Nor was his acquaintance less, with the famous poets of his age, than with the noblemen and ladies. Dryden.

Our admiration of a famous man lessens, upon our nearer acquaintance with him; and we seldom hear of a celebrated person, without a catalogue of some notorious weaknesses and infirmities.
Addison.

Would we be admitted into an acquaintance with God, let us study to resemble him. We must be partakers of a divine nature, in order to partake of this high privilege and alliance. Atterbury.

2. Familiar knowledge; simply, without a preposition.

Brave soldier, pardon me,
That any accent, breaking from my tongue,
Should 'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear.
Shakespeare.

This keeps the understanding long in converse with an object, and long converse brings acquaintance. South.

In what manner he lived with those, who were of his neighbourhood and acquaintance; how obliging his carriage was to them, what kind offices he did, and was always ready to do them; I forbear, particularly to say. Atterbury.

3. A slight or initial knowledge, short of friendship, as applied to persons.

I hope, I am pretty near seeing you; and therefore I would cultivate an acquaintance: because, if you do not know me, when we meet; you need only keep one of my letters, and compare it with my face; for my face and letters are counterparts of my heart. Swift to Pope.

A long noviciate of acquaintance should precede the vows of friendship. Bolingbroke.

4. The person with whom we are acquainted; him, of whom we have some knowledge, without the intimacy of friendship.

In this sense, the plural is, in some authors, acquaintance; in others, acquaintances.

But she, all vow'd unto the red-cross knight,
His wand'ring peril closely did lament;
Ne in this new acquaintance could delight,
But her dear heart with anguish did torment.
Fairy Queen.

That young men travel under some tutor, I allow well; so that he be such a one, that may be able to tell them, what acquaintances they are to seek, what exercise or discipline the place yieldeth. Bacon.

This, my lord, has justly acquired you as many friends, as there are persons, who have the honour to be known to you; a mere acquaintance you have none; you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they, who have conversed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryden.

We see, he is ashamed of his nearest acquaintances. Boyle against Bentley.

ACQUA'INTED, adj. [from acquaint.] Familiar, well known; not new.

Now call we our high court of parliament;
That war or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakesp.

ACQUE'ST, n. s. [acquest, Fr. from acquerir; written by some acquist, with a view to the word acquire, or acquisita.] Attachment, acquisition; the thing gained.

New acquests are more burden than strength.
Bacon.

Mud, reposed near the ostea of rivers, makes continual additions to the land, thereby excluding the sea; and preserving these shells, as trophies and signs of its new acquests and encroachments.
Woodward.

To ACQUIE'SCE, v. n. [acquiescer, Fr. acquiescere, Lat.] To rest in, or remain satisfied with, without opposition or discontent. It has in, before the object.

Others will, upon account of the receivedness of the proposed opinion, think it rather worthy to be examined, than acquiesced in. Boyle.

Neither mere bare approbation of, nor a mere wishing, nor unactive complacency in; nor, lastly, a natural inclination to things virtuous and good, can pass before God for a man's willing of such things: and, consequently, if men, upon this account, will needs take up and acquiesce in an airy ungrounded persuasion, that they will those things which really they not will; they fall thereby, into a gross and fatal delusion. South.

He hath employed his transcendent wisdom and power, that by these he might make way for his benignity; as the end, wherein they ultimately acquiesce. Grew.

ACQUIE'SCENCE, n. s. [from acquiesce.]

1. A silent appearance of content; distinguished on one side, from avowed consent; on the other, from opposition.

Neither from any of the nobility, nor of the clergy, who were thought most averse from it, there appeared any sign of contradiction to that; but an entire acquiescence in all, the bishops thought fit to do. Clarendon.

2. Satisfaction, rest, content.

Many indeed have given over their pursuits after fame, either from disappointment, or from experience of the little pleasure which attends it, or the better informations or natural coldness of old age; but seldom from a full satisfaction and acquiescence in their present enjoyments of it.
Addison.

3. Submission, confidence.

The greatest part of the world take up their persuasions concerning good and evil, by an implicit faith, and a full acquiescence in the word of those, who shall represent things to them under these characters. South.

ACQUI'RABLE, adj. [from acquire.] That, which may be acquired or obtained; attainable.

Those rational instincts, the connate principles engraven in the human soul, though they are truths acquirable and deducible by rational consequence and argumentation, yet seem to be inscribed in the very crasis and texture of the soul, antecedent to any acquisition by industry or the exercise of the discursive faculty in man.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

If the powers of cogitation and volition and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion or modification of it; it necessarily follows, that they proceed from some cogitative substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit and soul. Bentley.

To ACQUI'RE, v. a. [acquerir, Fr. acquiro, Lat.]

1. To gain, by one's own labour or power; to obtain, what is not received from nature, or transmitted by inheritance.

Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame; while he, we serve, is away. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

2. To come to; to attain.

Motion cannot be perceived, without the perception of its terms; viz. the parts of space, which it immediately left; and those, which it next acquires. Glanville's Scepsis.

ACQUI'RED, particip. adj. [from acquire.] Gained by one's self; in opposition to those things, which are bestowed by nature.

We are seldom at ease, and free enough from the solicitation of our natural or adopted desires; but a constant succession of uneasiness, out of that stock, which natural wants or acquired habits have heaped up, take the will in their turns.
Locke.

ACQUI'RER, n. s. [from acquire.] The person, that acquires; a gainer.

ACQUI'REMENT, n. s. [from acquire.] That, which is acquired; gain; attainment. The word may be properly used, in opposition to the gifts of nature.

These his acquirements, by industry, were exceedingly both enriched and enlarged, by many excellent endowments of nature.
Hayward on Edward VI.

By a content and acquiescence in every species of truth, we embrace the shadow thereof; or so much, as may palliate its just and substantial acquirements. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

It is very difficult, to lay down rules for the acquirement of a taste: the faculty must, in some degree, be born with us. Addison.

ACQUISITION, n. s. [acquisitio, Lat.]

1. The act of acquiring or gaining.

Each man has but a limited right to the good things of the world; and the natural allowed way, by which he is to compass the possession of these things, is by his own industrious acquisition of them. South.

2. The thing gained; acquirement.

Great Sir, all acquisition
Of glory as of empire, here I lay before
Your royal feet. Denham's Sophy.

A state can never arrive to its period, in a more deplorable crisis; than, when some prince lies hovering like a vulture, to dismember its dying carcase; by which means it becomes only an acquisition to some mighty monarchy, without hopes of a resurrection. Swift.

ACQUI'SITIVE. adj. [acquisitivus, Lat.] That which is acquired or gained.

He died, not in his acquisitive, but in his native soil; nature herself, as it were, claiming a final interest in his body, when fortune had done with him. Wotton.

ACQUI'ST. n. s. [See ACQUEST.] Acquirement; attainment; gain. Not in use.

His servant he, with new acquist
Of true experience from this great event,
With peace and consolation hath dismist. Milton.

To ACQUI'T v. a. [acquieter, Fr. See QUIT.]

1. To set free.

Ne do I wish (for wishing were but vain)
To be acquit from my continual smart;
But joy, her thrall for ever to remain,
And yield for pledge my poor captived heart. Spenser.

2. To clear from a charge of guilt; to absolve; opposed to condemn, either simply with an accusative, as, the jury acquitted him; or with the particles from or of, which is more common, before the crime.

If I sin, then thou markest me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity. Job, x. 14

By the suffrage of the most and best, he is already acquitted; and, by the sentence of some, condemned. Dryden

He that judges, without informing himself to the utmost that he is capable, cannot acquit himself of judging amiss. Locke.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation. Swift

3. To clear from any obligation.

Steady to my principles, and not dispirited with my afflictions, I have, by the blessing of God on my endeavours, overcome all difficulties; and, in some measure, acquitted myself of the debt, which I owed the publick, when I undertook this work. Dryden.

4. In a similar sense, it is said, The man hath acquitted himself well; that is, he hath discharged his duty.

ACQUI'TMENT. n. s. [from acquit.] The state of being acquitted; or act of acquitting.

The word imports properly an acquitment or discharge of a man, upon some precedent accusation; and a full trial and cognizance of his cause, had thereupon. South.

ACQUI'TTAL. n. s. In law, is a deliverance and setting free, from the suspicion or guiltiness of an offence. Cowell.

The constant design of both these orators was, to drive some one particular point, either the condemnation or acquittal of an accused person. Swift.

To ACQUI'TTANCE. v. a. To procure an acquittance; to acquit; a word not in present use.

But, if black scandal and foul-fac'd reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition;
Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shakespeare.

ACQUI'TTANCE. n. s. [from acquit.]

1. The act of discharging from a debt.

But soon shall find
Forbearance, no acquittance, ere day end
Justice shall not return, as beauty, scorn'd. Milton.

2. A writing, testifying the receipt of a debt.

You can produce acquittances
For such a sum, from special officers
Of Charles his father. Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.

They quickly pay their debt; and then
Take no acquittance, but pay again. Donne.

The same man bought and paid to himself, paid the money, and gave the acquittance. Arbuthnot.

ACRE. n. s. [Ecre, Sax.] A quantity of land containing in length forty perches, and four in breadth, or four thousand eight hundred and forty square yards. Dict.

Search every acre in the high-grown field,
And bring him to our eye. Shakesp. King Lear.

A'CRID. adj. [acer, Lat.] Of a hot biting taste; bitter; so, as to leave a painful heat upon the organs of taste.

Bitter and acrid differ, only by the sharp particles of the first being involved in a greater quantity of oil, than those of the last. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACRIMO'NIOUS. adj. Abounding with acrimony; sharp; corrosive.

If gall cannot be rendered acrimonious and bitter of itself; then, whatever acrimony or amaritude redounds in it, must be from the admixture of melancholy. Harvey on Consumptions.

ACRIMONY. n. s. [acrimonia, Lat.]

1. Sharpness, corrosiveness.

There be plants, that have a milk in them when they are cut; as, figs, old lettuce, sow-thistles, spurge. The cause may be an inception of putrefaction; for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenitive Bacon's Natural History

The chymists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fusible in the fire; congealable again by cold, into brittle glebes or crystals; soluble in water, so as to disappear; not malleable; and having something in it, which affects the organs of taste with a sensation of acrimony or sharpness. Arbuthnot.

2. Sharpness, of temper, severity, bitterness of thought or language.

John the Baptist set himself, with much acrimony and indignation, to baffle this senseless arrogant conceit of theirs; which made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them, and not at all belonging to them. South.

A'CRITUDE. n. s. [from acrid.] An acrid taste; a biting heat on the palate.

In green vitriol, with its astringent and sweetish tastes, is joined some acritude. Grew's Museum

ACROAMA'TICAL. adj. [ἀκροάομαι, Gr. I hear.] Of or pertaining to deep learning; the opposite of exoterical.

ACROA'TICKS. n. s. [ἀκροατικὰ, Gr.] Aristotle's lectures, on the more nice and principal parts of philosophy; to which, none but friends and scholars were admitted by him.

ACRO'NYCAL. adj. [from ἄκρος summus, and νὺξ nox; importing the beginning of night.] A term of astronomy, applied to the stars; of which the rising or setting is called acronycal, when they either appear above or sink below the horizon at the time of sunset. It is opposed to cosmical.

ACRO'NYCALLY. adv. [from acronycal.] At the acronycal time.

He is tempestuous in the summer, when he rises heliacally; and rainy in the winter, when he rises acronycally. Dryden.

A'CROSPIRE. n. s. [from ἄκρος and σπεῖρα, Gr.] A shoot or sprout from the end of seeds, before they are put in the ground.

Many corns will smilt, or have their pulp turned into a substance like thick cream; and will send forth their substance in an acrospire. Mortimer.

A'CROSPIRED. part. adj. Having sprouts, or having shot out.

For want of turning, when the malt is spread on the floor, it comes and sprouts at both ends; which is called acrospired, and is fit only for swine. Mortimer.

ACRO'SS. adv. [from a for at, or the French à, as it is used in à travers, and cross.] Athwart; laid over something so, as to cross it.

The harp hath the concave, not along the strings, but across the strings; and no harp hath the sound so melting and penetrating as that of the trumpet. Bacon.

This view'd, and that descry'd, with eyes across
He stood, reflecting on his country's loss. Dryden.

There is a set of men; who, by the help of several poles, which they lay across each other's shoulders, build themselves up into a kind of pyramid; so that you see a row of men in the air, of four or five rows, rising one above another. Addison.

ACRO'STICK. n. s. [from ἄκρος and στίχος, Gr.] A poem, in which the first letter of every line being taken, makes up the name of the person or thing, on which the poem is written.

ACRO'STICK. adj.

1. That, which relates to an acrostick.

2. That, which contains acrosticks.

Leave writing plays; and choose for thy command
Some peaceful province in acrostick land:
There thou may'st wings display, and altars raise
And torture one poor word ten thousand ways. Dryden.

A'CROTERS, or ACROTERIA. n. s. [from ἄκρον, Gr. the extremity of any body.] Little pedestals without bases, placed at the middle and the two extremes of pediments; sometimes serving, to support statues.

To ACT. v. n. [ago, actum, Lat.]

1. To be in action, not to rest.

He hangs between, in doubt to act or rest. Pope.

2. To perform the proper functions.

Albeit the will is not capable of being compelled to any of its actings; yet it is capable of being made to act with more or less difficulty, according to the different impressions it receives from motives or objects. South.

3. To practise arts or duties; to conduct one's self.

'Tis plain, that she (who for a kingdom now
Would sacrifice her love, and break her vow)
Not out of love, but interest, acts alone;
And would, ev'n in my arms, lie thinking of a throne. Dryden's Conquest of Granada.

The desire of happiness, and the constraint it puts upon us to act for it, no body accounts a abridgment of liberty. Locke.

The splendor of his office, is the token of that sacred character, which he inwardly bears; and one of these ought constantly to put him in mind of the other, and excite him to act up to it, through the whole course of his administration. Atterbury's Sermons.

It is our part and duty, to co-operate with this grace, vigorously to exert those powers, and act up to those advantages to which it restores us. He has given eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame. Rogers's Sermons.

4. To produce effects, in some passive subject.

Hence, 'tis we wait the wond'rous cause to find,
How body acts upon impassive mind. Garth's Dispensary.

The stomach, the intestines, the muscles of the lower belly, all act upon the aliment: besides, the chyle is not sucked, but squeezed, into the mouths of the lacteals, by the action of the fibres of the guts. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ACT. v. a.

1. To bear a borrowed character, as a stage-player.

Honour and shame from no condition rise:
Act well your part; there all the honour lies.
Pope.

2. To counterfeit; to feign by action.

His former trembling once again renew'd,
With acted fear the villain thus pursu'd. Dryd.

3. To actuate; to put in motion; to regulate the movements.

Most people in the world are acted by levity and humour, by strange and irrational changes. South.

Perhaps they are as proud as Lucifer, as covetous as Demas, as false as Judas; and, in the whole course of their conversation, act and are acted, not by devotion, but design. South.

We suppose two distinct incommunicable consciousnesses, acting the same body; the one constantly by day, the other by night; and, on the other side, the same consciousness acting by intervals two distinct bodies. Locke.

ACT. n. s. [actum, Lat.]

1. Something done; a deed; an exploit, whether good or ill.

A lower place, not well,
May make too great an act:
Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame.
Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

The conscious wretch must all his acts reveal;
Loth to confess, unable to conceal;
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.

2. Agency; the power of producing an effect.

I will try the forces
Of these thy compounds on such creatures, as
We count not worth the hanging, but none human;
To try the vigour of them, and apply
Allayments to their act; and by them gather
Their several virtues and effects.
Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

3. Action; the performance of exploits; production of effects.

'Tis so much in your nature to do good, that your life is but one continued act of placing benefits on many; as the sun is always carrying his light to some part or other of the world. Dryden's Fables.

Who forth from nothing call'd this comely frame,
His will and act, his word and work the same.
Prior.

4. The doing of some particular thing; a step taken; a purpose executed.

This act persuades me,
That this remotion of the duke and her
Is practice only. Shakesp. King Lear.

5. A state of reality; effect.

The seeds of herbs and plants at the first are not in act (but in possibility) that which they afterwards grow to be. Hooker.

God alone excepted; who actually and everlastingly is, whatsoever he may be; and which cannot hereafter be that, which now he is not: all other things besides are somewhat in possibility, which as yet they are not in act. Hooker.

Sure they're conscious
Of some intended mischief; and are fled,
To put it into act. Denham's Sophy.

6. Incipient agency; tendency to an effort.

Her legs were buskin'd; and the left before,
In act to shoot: a silver bow she bore. Dryden.

7. A part of a play, during which the action proceeds without interruption.

Many never doubt, but the whole condition required by Christ (the repentance, he came to preach) will, in that last scene of their last act, immediately before the exit, be as opportunely and acceptably performed, as at any other point of their lives. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Five acts are the just measure of a play.
Roscommon

8. A decree of a court of justice, or edict of a legislature.

They make edicts for usury, to support usurers; repeal daily any wholesome act, established against the rich; and provide more piercing statutes daily, to chain up and restrain the poor.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

You, that are king, though he do wear the crown,
Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

9. Record of judicial proceedings.

Judicial acts are all those matters, which relate to judicial proceedings; and, being reduced into writing by a public notary, are recorded by the authority of the judge. Ayliffe.

A'CTION. n. s. [action Fr. actio, Lat.]

1. The quality or state of acting, opposite to rest.

O noble English, that could entertain,
With half their forces, the full power of France;
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action.
Shakespeare's Henry V.

2. An act, or thing done; a deed.

This action, I now go on,
Is for me better grace. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

God never accepts a good inclination instead of a good action, where that action may be done; nay, so much the contrary, that, if a good inclination be not seconded by a good action, the want of that action is made so much the more criminal and inexcusable. South.

3. Agency, operation.

It is better therefore, that the earth should move about its own center, and make those useful vicissitudes of night and day, than expose always the same side to the action of the sun. Bentley

He has settled laws, and laid down rules; conformable to which, natural bodies are governed in their actions upon one another. Cheyne

4. The series of events, represented in a fable.

This action should have three qualifications. First, it should be but one action; secondly, it should be an entire action; and, thirdly, it should be a great action. Addison

5. Gesticulation; the accordance of the motions of the body, with the words spoken; a part of oratory.

—He, that speaks, doth gripe the hearer's wrist;
While he, that hears, makes fearful action
With wrinkled brows. Shakesp. King John.

Our orators are observed to make use of less gesture or action, than those of other countries.
Addison.

6. [In law.] It is used with the preposition against, before the person; and for, before the thing.

Actions are personal, real, and mixed. Action personal belongs to a man against another, by reason of any contract, offence, or cause; of like force with a contract or offence, made or done by him or some other, for whose fact he is to answer. Action real is given to any man against another, that possesses the thing required or sued for, in his own name, and no other man's. Action mixt, is that, which lies as well against or for the thing, which we seek; as against the person, that hath it: called mixt, because it hath a mixt respect, both to the thing and to the person.

Action is divided into civil, penal, and mixt. Action civil is that, which tends only to the recovery of that, which is due to us; as a sum of money formerly lent. Action penal is that, which aims at some penalty or punishment in the party sued, be it corporal or pecuniary; as, in common law, the next friends of a man feloniously slain shall pursue the law against the murderer. Action mixt is that, which seeks both, the thing whereof we are deprived, and a penalty also for the unjust detaining of the same.

Action upon the case, is an action given for redress of wrongs, done without force against any man, by law not specially provided for.

Action upon the statute, is an action brought against a man upon breach of a statute. Cowell.

There was never man, could have a juster action against filthy fortune, than I; since, all other things being granted me, her blindness is the only lett. Sidney.

For our reward then;
First, all our debts are paid, dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments, against us, quitted.
B. Jonson.

7. In the plural, in France, the same as stocks in England.

A'CTIONABLE. adj. [from action.] That, which admits an action in law to be brought against it; punishable.

His process was formed; whereby he was found guilty of nought else, that I could learn, which was actionable, but of ambition.
Howell's Vocal Forest.

No man's face is actionable: these singularities are interpretable from more innocent causes.
Collier.

A'CTIONARY, or ACTIONIST. n. s. [from action.] One, that has a share in actions or stocks.

A'CTION-TAKING. adj. Accustomed to resent by means of law; litigious.

A knave, a rascal, a filthy worsted-stocking knave; a lily-liver'd action-taking knave.
Shakesp.

ACTITA'TION. n. s [from actito, Lat.] Action quick and frequent. Dict.

To A'CTIVATE. v. a. [from active.] To make active. This word is perhaps used only by the author alleged.

As snow and ice, especially being holpen, and then cold activated by nitre or salt, will turn water into ice, and that in a few hours, so, it may be, it will turn wood or still clay into stone, in longer time. Bacon.

A'CTIVE. adj. [activus, Lat.]

1. That, which has the power or quality of acting.

These particles have not only a vis inertiæ, accompanied with such passive laws of motion, as naturally result from that force; but also they are moved by certain active principles, such as is that of gravity, and that, which causes fermentation, and the cohesion of bodies. Newton's Optics.

2. That, which acts; opposed to passive, or that which suffers.

—When an even flame two hearts did touch;
His office was, indulgently to fit
Actives to passives: correspondency
Only his subject was. Donne.

If you think that, by multiplying the additaments in the same proportion that you multiply the ore, the work will follow, you may be deceived: for quantity in the passive will add more resistance, than the quantity in the active will add force. Bacon.

3. Busy, engaged in action; opposed to idle or sedentary, or any state of which the duties are performed only by the mental powers.

'Tis virtuous action, that must praise bring forth;
Without which, slow advice is little worth:
Yet they, who give good counsel, praise deserve;
Tho', in the active part they cannot serve. Denham.

4. Practical; not merely theoretical.

The world hath had in these men fresh experience, how dangerous such active errors are.
Hooker.

5. Nimble; agile; quick.

Some bend the stubborn bow for victory;
And some with darts their active sinews try
Dryden.

6. In grammar.

A verb active is that, which signifies action; — as I teach. Clarke's Latin Grammar

A'CTIVELY. adv. [from active.] In an active manner; busily; nimbly. In an active signification; as, the word is used actively.

A'CTIVENESS. n. s. [from active.] The quality of being active; quickness; nimbleness. This is a word more rarely used than activity.

What strange agility and activeness do our common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to, by continual exercise! Wilkin's Math. Magick.

ACTI'VITY. n. s. [from active.] The quality of being active, applied either to things or persons.

Salt put to ice, as in the producing of the artificial ice, increaseth the activity of cold. Bacon.

Our adversary will not be idle, though we are: he watches every turn of our soul, and incident of our life; and, if we remit our activity, will take advantage of our indolence. Rogers.

A'CTOR. n. s. [actor, Lat.]

1. He that acts or performs any thing.

The virtues of either age may correct the defects of both: and good for succession, that young men may be learners, while men in age are actors. Bacon.

He, who writes an Encomium Neronis, if he does it heartily, is himself but a transcript of Nero in his mind; and would gladly enough see such pranks, as he was famous for, acted again, though he dares not be the actor of them himself. South.

2. He that personates a character; a stage-player.

Would you have
Such an Herculean actor in the scene,
And not this hydra? They must sweat no less,
To fit their properties, than t'express their parts. Ben Jonson.

When a good actor doth his part present,
In every act he on attention draws;
That at the last he may find just applause. Denham.

These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rainbow; when the actor ceases to shine upon them, they vanish in a twinkling. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

A'CTRESS. n. s. [actrice, Fr.]

1. She that performs any thing.

Virgil has indeed admitted Fame, as an actress, in the Æneid: but the part she acts is very short; and none of the most admired circumstances of that divine work Addison.

We sprights have just such natures,
We had (for all the world) when human creatures;
And therefore I, that was an actress here,
Play all my tricks in hell, a goblin there. Dryden.

2. A woman, that plays on the stage.

A'CTUAL. adj. [actuel, Fr.]

1. That, which comprises action.

In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what at any time have you heard her say? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Really in act; not merely potential.

Sin, there in pow'r, before
Once actual; now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant. Milton.

3. In act; not purely in speculation.

For he, that but conceives a crime in thought,
Contracts the danger of an actual fault:
Then, what must he expect, that still proceeds
To finish sin, and work up thoughts to deeds? Dryden.

ACTUA'LITY. n. s. [from actual.] The state of being actual.

Th' actuality of these spiritual qualities is thus imprisoned, though their potentiality be not quite destroyed: and thus a crass, extended, impenetrable, passive, divisible, unintelligent substance is generated, which we call matter. Cheyne.

A'CTUALLY. adv. [from actual.] In act; in effect; really.

All mankind acknowledge themselves able and sufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South.

Read one of the Chronicles; and you will think, you were reading a history of the kings of Israel or Judah, where the historians were actually inspired; and where, by a particular scheme of providence, the kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Addison.

Though our temporal prospects should be full of danger, or though the days of sorrow should actually overtake us, yet still we must repose ourselves on God. Rogers.

A'CTUALNESS. n. s. [from actual.] The quality of being actual.

A'CTUARY. n. s. [actuarius, Lat.] The register who compiles the minutes of the proceedings of a court; a term of the civil law.

Suppose the judge should say, that he would have the keeping of the acts of court remain with him, and the notary will have the custody of them with himself; certainly in this case the actuary or writer of them ought to be preferred. Ayliffe.

A'CTUATE. adj. [from the verb To actuate.] Put into action; animated; brought into effect.

The active informations of the intellect, filling the passive reception of the will, like form closing with matter, grew actuate into a third and distinct perfection of practice. South.

To* A'CTUATE. v. a. [from ago, actum, Lat.] To put into action; to invigorate, or increase the powers of motion.

The light, made by this animal, depends upon a living spirit; and seems by some vital irradiation, to be actuated into this lustre. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Such is every man, who has not actuated the grace given him, to the subduing of every reigning sin. Decay of Piety.

Men of the greatest abilities are most fired with ambition; and, on the contrary, mean and narrow minds are the least actuated by it. Addison.

Our passions are the springs, which actuate the powers of our nature. Rogers.

ACTUO'SE. adj. [from act.] That which hath strong powers of action; a word little used.

To* A'CUATE. v. a. [acuo, Lat.] To sharpen; to invigorate with any powers of sharpness.

Immoderate feeding upon powdered beef, pickled meats, and debauching with strong wines, do inflame and acuate the blood; whereby it is capacitated to corrode the lungs. Harvey on Consump.

ACU'LEATE. adj. [aculeatus, Lat.] That, which has a point or sting: prickly; that, which terminates in a sharp point.

ACU'MEN. n. s [Lat.] A sharp point; figuratively, quickness of intellects.

The word was much affected by the learned Aristarchus in common conversation, to signify genius or natural acumen. Pope.

ACU'MINATED. part. adj. Ending in a point; sharp-pointed.

This is not acuminated and pointed, as in the rest; but seemeth, as it were, cut off. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I appropriate this word, Noli me tangere, to a small round acuminated tubercle; which hath not much pain, unless touched or rubbed, or exasperated by topicks. Wiseman.

ACUTE. adj. [acutus Lat.]

1. Sharp, ending in a point; opposed to obtuse or blunt.

Having the ideas of an obtuse and an acute angled triangle, both drawn from equal bases and between parallels; I can by intuitive knowledge, perceive the one not to be the other; but cannot that way know, whether they be equal. Locke.

2. In a figurative sense, applied to men; ingenious; penetrating; opposed to dull or stupid.

The acute and ingenious author, among many very fine thoughts and uncommon reflections, has started the notion of seeing all things in God. Locke.

3. Spoken of the senses, vigorous; powerful in operation.

Were our senses altered, and made much quicker and acuter, the appearance and outward scheme of things would have quite another face to us. Locke.

4. Acute disease. Any disease, which is attended with an increased velocity of blood, and terminates in a few days; opposed to chronical. Quincy.

5. Acute accent; that, which raises or sharpens the voice.

ACU'TELY. adv. [from acute.] After an acute manner; sharply: it is used, as well in the figurative as primitive sense.

He, that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there, perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism. Locke.

ACU'TENESS. n. s. [from acute, which see.]

1. Sharpness.

2. Force of intellects.

They would not be so apt to think, that there could be nothing added to the acuteness and penetration of their understandings. Locke.

3. Quickness and vigour of senses.

If eyes so framed could not view at once the hand and the hour-plate, their owner could not be benefited by that acuteness; which, whilst it discovered the secret contrivance of the machine, made him lose its use. Locke.

4. Violence and speedy crisis of a malady.

We apply present remedies, according to indications; respecting rather the acuteness of the disease, and precipitancy of the occasion, than the rising and setting of stars. Browne.

5. Sharpness of sound.

This acuteness of sound will shew that, whilst to the eye the bell seems to be at rest, yet the minute parts of it continue in a very brisk motion, without which they could not strike the air. Boyle.

ADA'CTED. part. adj. [adactus, Lat.] Driven by force; a word little used. The verb adact is not used. Dict.

A'DAGE. n. s. [adagium, Lat.] A maxim, handed down from antiquity; a proverb.

Shallow unimproved intellects are confident pretenders to certainty; as if, contrary to the adage, science had no friend but ignorance. Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

Fine fruits of learning! old ambitious fool,
Dar'st thou apply that adage of the school:
As if 'tis nothing worth, that lies conceal'd;
And science is not science, till reveal'd? Dryd.

ADA'GIO. n. s. [Italian, at leisure.] A term used by musicians, to mark a slow time.

A'DAMANT. n. s. [adamas, Lat. ἀδάμας, Gr. from ἀ and δαμάω, to tame or subdue; that is insuperable, infrangible.]

1. A stone, imagined by writers, of impenetrable hardness.

So great a fear my name amongst them spread;
That they suppos'd I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant. Shakesp.

Satan, with vast and haughty strides advanc'd,
Came tow'ring, arm'd in adamant and gold. Milt.

Eternal Deities,
Who rule the world with absolute decrees;
And write, whatever time shall bring to pass,
With pens of adamant, on plates of brass. Dryd.

2. The diamond.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies; and among them, the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree thereof, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it: the factitious stones of chymists in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on the Crea.

3. Adamant is taken for the loadstone.

You draw mé, you hard-hearted adamant!
But yet you draw not iron; for my heart
Is true as steel. Shakespeare.

Let him change his lodging from one part of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. Bacon.

ADAMANTE'AN. adj. [from adamant.] Hard as adamant.

He, weaponless himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail

This word occurs perhaps only in this passage.

ADAMA'NTINE. adj. [adamantinus Lat.]

1. Made of adamant.

Wide is the fronting gate; and, rais'd on high
With adamantine columns, threats the sky. Dryd.

2. Having the qualities of adamant; as, hardness; indissolubility.

Could Eve's weak hand, extended to the tree,
In sunder rend that adamantine chain;
Whose golden links effects and causes be;
And which to God's own chair doth fix'd remain?
Davies.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fixed and fastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of specific gravity; if the Almighty had not spoken and said, 'Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit, after its kind:' and it was so. Bentley.

In adamantine chains shall death be bound,
And hell's grim tyrant feel th' eternal wound.
Pope.

Tho' adamantine bonds the chief restrain,
The dire restraint his wisdom will defeat,
And soon restore him to his regal seat. Pope.

A'DAM'S-A'PPLE. n. s. [in anatomy.] A prominent part of the throat.

To ADA'PT. v. a. [adapto, Lat.] To fit one thing to another; to suit; to proportion.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,
My eyes are somewhat dimmish grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your decays adapts my sight. Swift.

It is not enough that nothing offends the ear; but a good poet will adapt the very sounds, as well as words, to the things he treats of.
Pope's Letters.

ADAPTA'TION. n. s. [from adapt.] The act of fitting one thing to another; the fitness of one thing to another.

Some species there be of middle natures; that is, of bird and beast, as batts: yet are their parts so set together, that we cannot define the beginning or end of either; there being a commixtion of both, rather than adaptation or cement of the one unto the other. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Adhesion may be in part ascribed, either to some elastical motion in the pressed glass; or to the exquisite adaptation of the almost numberless (though very small) asperities of the one, and the numerous little cavities of the other; whereby the surfaces do lock in with one another, or are (as it were) clasped together. Boyle.

ADA'PTION. n. s. [from adapt.] The act of fitting.

It were alone a sufficient work, to shew all the necessities, the wise contrivances, and prudent adaptions, of these admirable machines, for the benefit of the whole. Cheyne.

ADA'PTNESS. n. s. [for adaptedness, from adapt.]

Some notes are to display the adaptness of the sound to the sense. Dr. Newton.

This word I have found no where else.

To ADCO'RPORATE. v. a. [from ad and corpus.] To unite one body with another; more usually wrote accorporate; which see.

To ADD. v. a. [addo, Lat.]

1. To join something to that which was before.

Mark if his birth makes any difference;
If, to his words, it adds one grain of sense Dryd.
They, whose muses have the highest flown,
Add not to his immortal memory,
But do an act of friendship to their own. Dryd.

2. To perform the mental operation of adding one number or conception to another. To add to is proper; but to add together seems a solecism.

Whatsoever positive idea a man has in his mind, of any quantity; he can repeat it, and add it to the former, as easily as he can add together the ideas of two days or two years. Locke.

A'DDABLE. adj. [from add.] That to which something may be added: Addible is more proper. It signifies more properly that which may be added.

The first number, in every addition, is called the addable number; the other, the number or numbers added; and the number invented by the addition, the aggregate or sum. Cocker.

To ADDE'CIMATE. v. a. [addecimo, Lat.] To take or ascertain tithes. Dict.

To ADDE'EM. v. a. [from deem.] To esteem; to account. This word is now out of use.

She scorns to be addeem'd so worthless-base,
As to be moved to such an infamy.
Daniel's Civil Wars.

A'DDER. n. s. [Ættep, Ættop, Naddpe, as it seems from cittep, Sax. poison.] A serpent, a viper, a poisonous reptile; perhaps of any species. In common language, adders and snakes are not the same.

Or is the adder better than the eel,
Because his painted skin contents the eye?
Shakespeare.

An adder did it; for, with doubler tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.
Shakespeare.

The adder teaches us where to strike, by her curious and fearful defending of her head.
Taylor.

A'DDER'S-GRASS. n. s. The name of a plant, imagined by Skinner to be so named, because serpents lurk about it.

A'DDER'S-TONGUE. n. s. [ophioglossum, Lat.] The name of an herb.

It hath no visible flower; but the seeds are produced on a spike, which resembles a serpent's tongue; which seed is contained in many longitudinal cells. Miller.

The most common simples are comfrey, bugle, agrimony, sanicle, paul's-betony, fluellin, periwinkle, adder's-tongue. Wiseman's Surgery.

A'DDER'S-WO'RT. n. s. An herb; so named on account of its virtue, real or supposed, of curing the bite of serpents.

A'DDIBLE. adj. [from add.] Possible to be added. See ADDABLE.

The clearest idea it can get of infinity, is the confused incomprehensible remainder of endless addible numbers, which affords no prospect of stop or boundary. Locke.

ADDIBI'LITY. n. s. [from addible.] The possibility of being added.

This endless addition or addibility (if any one like the word better) of numbers, so apparent to the mind, is that which gives us the clearest and most distinct idea of infinity. Locke.

A'DDICE. n. s. [for which we corruptly speak and write adz, from adeye, Sax. an axe.]

The addice hath its blade made thin, and somewhat arching. As the axe hath its edge parallel to its handle, so the addice hath its edge athwart the handle, and is ground to a basil on its inside to its outer edge. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

To ADDI'CT. v. a. [addico, Lat.]

1. To devote, to dedicate, in a good sense; which is rarely used.

Ye know the house of Stephanus; that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints. 1 Cor. xvi. 15.

2. It is commonly taken in a bad sense; as, he addicted himself to vice.

3. To devote one's self to any person, party, or persuasion. A Latinism.

I am neither author or fautor of any sect: I will have no man addict himself to me; but, if I have any thing right, defend it as truth's.
Ben Jonson.

ADDI'CTEDNESS. n. s. [from addicted.] The quality or state of being addicted.

Those know how little I have remitted of my former addictedness to make chymical experiments.
Boyle.

ADDI'CTION. n. s. [addictio, Lat.]

1. The act of devoting, or giving up.

2. The state of being devoted.

It is a wonder how his grace should glean it,
Since his addiction was to courses vain;
His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports.
Shakesp.

A'DDITAMENT. n. s. [additamentum, Lat.] The addition, or thing added.

Iron will not incorporate with brass, nor other metals, of itself, by simple fire; so as the enquiry must be upon the calcination, and the additament, and the charge of them. Bacon.

In a palace, there is first the case or fabrick, or moles of the structure itself; and besides that, there are certain additaments, that contribute to its ornament and use; as, various furniture, rare fountains and aqueducts, divers things appendicated to it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ADDI'TION. n. s. [from add.]

1. The act of adding one thing to another; opposed to diminution.

The infinite distance between the Creator and the noblest of all creatures can never be measured, nor exhausted by endless addition of finite degrees. Bentley.

2. Additament, or the thing added.

It will not be modestly done, if any of our own wisdom intrude or interpose, or be willing to make additions to what Christ and his apostles have designed. Hammond.

Some such resemblances, methinks, I find
Of our last evening's talk, in this thy dream;
But with addition strange! Milton.

The abolishing of villanage, together with the custom (permitted among the nobles) of selling their lands, was a mighty addition to the power of the commons. Swift.

3. In arithmetick.

Addition is the reduction of two or more numbers of like kind together into one sum or total.
Cocker's Arithmetic.

4. In law. A title given to a man, over and above his christian name and surname; shewing his estate, degree, occupation, trade, age, place of dwelling. Cowel.

Only retain
The name, and all th' addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution,
Beloved sons, be yours; which to confirm,
This coronet part between you.
Shakesp. K. Lear.

From this time,
For what he did before Corioli, call him,
With all th' applause and clamour of the host,
Caius Marcius Coriolanus. Bear th'addition nobly ever. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

There arose new disputes, upon the persons named by the king; or rather, against the additions and appellations of title, which were made to their names. Clarendon.

ADDI'TIONAL. adj. [from addition.] That which is added.

Our kalendar being once reformed and set right, it may be kept so, without any considerable variation, for many ages, by omitting one leap-year; i. e. the additional day, at the end of every 134 years. Holder on Time.

The greatest wits, that ever were produced in one age, lived together in so good an understanding, and celebrated one another with so much generosity; that each of them receives an additional lustre, from his cotemporaries. Addison.

They include in them that very kind of evidence, which is supposed to be powerful: and do (withal) afford us several other additional proofs, of great force and clearness. Atterbury.

ADDI'TIONAL. n. s. Additament; something added. Not in use.

May be, some little additional may further the incorporation. Bacon.

A'DDITORY. adj. [from add.] That which has the power or quality of adding.

The additory fiction gives to a great man a larger share of reputation, than belongs to him; to enable him, to serve some good end or purpose. Arbuthnot.

A'DDLE. adj. [from abel, a disease, Sax. according to Skinner and Junius: perhaps from ydel idle, barren, unfruitful.] Originally applied to eggs; and signifying such as produce nothing, but grow rotten under the hen: thence transferred to brains, that produce nothing.

There's one with truncheon, like a ladle;
That carries eggs too fresh or addle;
And still at random, as he goes,
Among the rabble rout bestows. Hudibras.

After much solitariness, fasting or long sickness, their brains were addle; and their bellies as empty of meat, as their heads of wit. Burton on Melancholy.

Thus far the poet: but his brains grow addle;
And all the rest is purely from this noddle. Dryd.

To A'DDLE. v. a. [from addle, adj.] To make addle; to corrupt; to make barren.

This is also evidenced in eggs, whereof the sound ones sink; and such, as are addled, swim; as do also those, that are termed hypanemæ, or wind eggs. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To A'DDLE. v. n. To grow; to increase. Obsolete.

Where ivy embraceth the tree very sore,
Kill ivy, else tree will addle no more
Tusser's Husbandry.

A'DDLE-PA'TED. adj. Having addled brains. See ADDLE.

Poor slaves in metre, dull and addle-pated;
Who rhyme, below even David's psalms translated.
Dryden.

To ADDRE'SS. v. a. [addresser, Fr. from dereçar, Span. from dirigo, directum, Lat.]

1. To prepare one's self, to enter upon any action; as, he addressed himself to the work. It has to, before the thing.

With him the Palmer eke, in habit sad,
Himself addrest to that adventure hard. Fairy Q.
It lifted up its head, and did address
Itself to motion, like as it would speak.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

Then Turnus, from his chariot leaping light,
Address'd himself on foot to single fight. Dryd.

2. To get ready; to put in a state for immediate use.

They fell directly on the English battle; whereupon the earl of Warwick addressed his men, to take the flank. Hayward.

Duke Frederick hearing, how that every day
Men of great worth resorted to this forest,
Address'd a mighty power, which were on foot,
In his own conduct purposely to take
His brother here. Shakespeare, As you like it.

To-night in Harfleur we will be your guest;
To-morrow for the march we are addrest. Shakesp.

3. To apply to another by words, with various forms of construction.

4. Sometimes without a preposition.

To such I would address, with this most affectionate petition. Decay of Piety.

Among the crowd, but far above the rest,
Young Turnus to the beauteous maid addrest.
Dryden.

Are not your orders to address the senate?
Addison.

5. Sometimes with to.

Addressing to Pollio, his great patron, and himself no vulgar poet, he began to assert his native character, which is sublimity. Dryden.

6. Sometimes with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he addressed himself to the general.

7. Sometimes with the accusative of the matter of the address, which may be the nominative to the passive.

The young hero had addressed his prayers to him for his assistance. Dryden.

The prince himself, with awful dread possess'd,
His vows to great Apollo thus address'd. Dryden.

His suit was common; but, above the rest,
To both the brother-princes thus address'd. Dryden.

8. To address [in law] is, to apply to the king in form.

The representatives of the nation in parliament, and the privy-council, address'd the king, to have it recalled. Swift.

ADDRESS. n. s. [addresse, Fr.]

1. Verbal application to any one, by way of persuasion; petition.

Henry, in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half-confess'd and half-conceal'd his flame,
Upon this tree: and, as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address;
That, as the wound, the passion might increase.
Prior.

Most of the persons, to whom these addresses are made, are not wise and skilful judges; but are influenced by their own sinful appetites and passions. Watts's Imp. of the Mind.

2. Courtship.

They often have reveal'd their passions to me:
But, tell me, whose address thou favour'st most;
I long to know, and yet I dread to hear it.
Addison.

A gentleman, whom (I am sure) you yourself would have approved, made his addresses to me. Addison.

3. Manner of addressing another; as, we say, a man of a happy or a pleasing address; a man of an awkward address.

4. Skill, dexterity.

I could produce innumerable instances from my own observation, of events imputed to the profound skill and address of a minister; which, in reality, were either mere effects of negligence, weakness, humour, passion, or pride; or at best but the natural course of things, left to themselves. Swift.

5. Manner of directing a letter; a sense chiefly mercantile.

ADDRE'SSER. n. s. [from address.] The person that addresses or petitions.

ADDU'CENT. adj. [adducens, Lat.] A word applied to those muscles, that bring forward, close, or draw together, the parts of the body to which they are annexed. Quincy.

To ADDU'LCE. v. a. [addoucir, Fr. dulcis, Lat.] To sweeten, a word not in use now.

Thus did the French ambassadors, with great show of their king's affection, and many sugared words, seek to addulce all matters between the two kings. Bacon's Henry VII.

A'DELING, n. s. [from æbel, Sax. illustrious.] A word of honour among the Angles, properly appertaining to the king's children; king Edward the Confessor, being without issue, and intending to make Edgar his heir, called him Adeling. Cowell.

ADENO'GRAPHY. n. s. [from ἀδήν a gland, and γράφω, to write, Gr.] A treatise of the glands.

ADE'MPTION. n. s. [adimo, ademptum, Lat.] Taking away; privation. Dict.

ADE'PT. n. s. [from adeptus, Lat. that is, adeptus artem.] He, that is completely skilled in all the secrets of his art. It is, in its original signification, appropriated to the chymists; but is now extended, to other artists.

The preservation of chastity is easy to true adepts. Pope.

ADE'PT. adj. Skilful; thoroughly versed.

If there be really such adept philosophers, as we are told of; I am apt to think that, among their arcana, they are masters of extremely potent menstruums. Boyle.

A'DEQUATE. adj. [adequatus, Lat.] Equal to; proportionate; correspondent to, so as to bear an exact resemblance or proportion. It is used generally in a figurative sense, and often with the particle to.

Contingent death seems to be the whole adequate object of popular courage; but a necessary and unavoidable coffin strikes paleness into the stoutest heart. Harvey on Consumptions.

The arguments were proper, adequate, and sufficient to compass their respective ends. South.

All our simple ideas are adequate; because being nothing but the effects of certain powers in things, fitted and ordained by God to produce such sensations in us, they cannot but be correspondent and adequate to those powers. Locke.

Those are adequate ideas, which perfectly represent their archetypes or objects. Inadequate are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes, to which they are referred. Watts's Logick.

A'DEQUATELY. adv. [from adequate.

1. In an adequate manner; with justness of representation; with exactness of proportion.

Gratitude consists adequately, in these two things: first, that it is a debt; and, secondly, that it is such a debt, as is left to every man's ingenuity, whether he will pay or no. South.

2. It is used with the particle to.

Piety is the necessary Christian virtue, proportioned adequately to the omniscience and spirituality of that infinite Deity. Hammond's Fundam.

A'DEQUATENESS. n. s. [from adequate.] The state of being adequate; justness of representation; exactness of proportion.

ADESPO'TICK. adj. Not absolute; not despotic. Dict.

To ADHE'RE. v. n. [adhæreo, Lat.]

1. To stick to; as wax to the finger; with to, before the thing.
2. To stick, in a figurative sense; to be consistent; to hold together.

Why every thing adheres together, that no dram of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no incredulous or unsafe circumstance—
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

3. To remain firmly fixed to a party, person, or opinion.

Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you; And sure I am, two men there are not living, To whom he more adheres. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Every man of sense will agree with me, that singularity is laudable; when, in contradiction to a multitude, it adheres to the dictates of conscience, morality, and honour. Boyle.

ADHE'RENCE. n. s. [from adhere.] See ADHESION.

1. The quality of adhering or sticking; tenacity.
2. In a figurative sense; fixedness of mind; steadiness, fidelity.

The firm adherence of the Jews to their religion is no less remarkable than their dispersion; considering it as persecuted or contemned over the whole earth. Addison.

A constant adherence to one sort of diet may have bad effects on any constitution.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Plain good sense, and a firm adherence to the point, have proved more effectual, than those arts, which are contemptuously called the spirit of negociating. Swift.

ADHE'RENCY. n. s. [The same with adherence.]

1. Steady attachment.
2. That which adheres.

Vices have a native adherency of vexation.
Decay of Piety.

ADHE'RENT. adj. [from adhere.]

1. Sticking to.

Close to the cliff, with both his hands he clung; And stuck adherent, and suspended hung. Pope.

2. United with.

Modes are said to be inherent or adherent; that is, proper or improper. Adherent or improper modes arise, from the joining of some accidental substance to the chief subject, which yet may be separated from it: so, when a bowl is wet, or a boy is clothed, these are adherent modes; for the water and the clothes are distinct substances, which adhere to the bowl or to the boy. Watts's Logick.

ADHE'RENT. n. s. [from adhere.]

1. The person that adheres; one that supports the cause, or follows the fortune of another; a follower, a partisan.

Princes must give protection to their subjects and adherents when worthy occasion shall require it.
Raleigh.

A new war must be undertaken, upon the advice of those who, with their partisans and adherents, were to be the sole gainers by it. Swift.

2. Any thing outwardly belonging to a person.

When they cannot shake the main fort, they must try if they can possess themselves of the outworks; raise some prejudice against his discretion, his humour, his carriage, and his extrinsic adherents. Government of the Tongue.

ADHE'RER. n. s. [from adhere.] He that adheres.

He ought to be indulgent to tender consciences; but, at the same time, a firm adherer to the established church. Swift.

ADHE'SION. n. s. [adhæsio, Lat.]

1. The act or state of sticking to something. Adhesion is generally used in the natural and adherence in the metaphorical sense: as, the adhesion of iron to the magnet; and adherence of a client to his patron.

Why therefore may not the minute parts of other bodies, if they be conveniently shaped for adhesion, stick to one another as well as stick to this spirit? Boyle.

The rest (consisting wholly in the sensible configuration, as smooth and rough; or else more or less firm adhesion of the parts, as hard and soft, tough and brittle) are obvious. Locke.

——Prove that all things (on occasion)
Love union, and desire adhesion. Prior.

2. It is sometimes taken (like adherence) figuratively, for firmness to an opinion, or steadiness in a practice.

The same want of sincerity, the same adhesion to vice, and aversion from goodness, will be equally a reason for their rejecting any proof whatsoever. Atterbury.

ADHE'SIVE. adj. [from adhesion.] Sticking; tenacious.

If slow, yet sure, adhesive to the tract,
Hot steaming up. Thomson.

To ADHIBIT. v. a. [adhibeo, Lat.] To apply; to make use of.

Salt, a necessary ingredient in all sacrifices, was adhibited and required in this view only, as an emblem of purification.
President Forbes's Letter to a bishop.

ADHI'BITION. n. s. [from adhibit.] Application; use. Dict.

ADJA'CENCY. n. s. [from adjaceo, Lat.]

1. The state of lying close to another thing.
2. That which is adjacent. See ADJACENT.

Because the Cape hath sea on both sides near it, and other lands (remote as it were) equidistant from it; therefore, at that point, the needle is not distracted by the vicinity of adjacencies. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADJA'CENT. adj. [adjacens, Lat.] Lying near or close; bordering upon something.

It may corrupt within itself, although no part of it issue into the body adjacent. Bacon.

Uniform pellucid mediums, such as water, have no sensible reflection but in their external superficies, where they are adjacent to other mediums of a different density. Newton.

ADJA'CENT. n. s. That which lies next another.

The sense of the author goes visibly in its own train; and the words, receiving a determined sense from their companions and adjacents, will not consent to give countenance and colour to what must be supported at any rate. Locke.

ADIA'PHOROUS. adj [ἀδιάφορος, Gr.] Neutral; particularly used of some spirits and salts, which are neither of an acid or alkaline nature. Quincy.

Our adiaphorous spirit may be obtained by distilling the liquor that is afforded by woods and divers other bodies.

ADIA'PHORY. n. s. [ἀδιαφορία, Gr.] Neutrality; indifference.

To ADJECT. v. a. [adjicio, adjectum, Lat.] To add to; to put to another thing.

ADJE'CTION. n. s. [adjectio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjecting or adding.
2. The thing adjected or added.

That unto every pound of sulphur, an adjection of one ounce of quicksilver; or unto every pound of peter, one ounce of sal-ammoniac, will much intend the force, and consequently the report, I find no verity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADJECTI'TIOUS. adj. [from adjection.] Added; thrown in upon the rest.

A'DJECTIVE. n. s. [adjectivum, Lat.] A word added to a noun, to signify the addition or separation of some quality, circumstance, or manner of being; as, good, bad, are adjectives; because, in speech, they are applied to nouns, to modify their signification, or intimate the manner of existence in the things signified thereby. Clark's Latin Gram.

All the versification of Claudian is included within the compass of four or five lines, perpetually closing his sense at the end of a verse; and that verse commonly, which they call golden; or two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them, to keep the peace. Dryden

A'DJECTIVELY. adv. [from adjective.] After the manner of an adjective; a term of grammar.

ADIEU'. adv. [from à Dieu, used elliptically for à Dieu je vous commende, used at the departure of friends.] The form of parting, originally importing a commendation to the Divine care; but now used in a popular sense, sometimes to things inanimate; farewell!

Ne gave him leave to bid that aged sire
Adieu; but nimbly ran her wonted course.
Fairy Queen.

Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords; you restrained yourself within the list of too cold an adieu: be more expressive to them.
Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

While now I take my last adieu,
Heave thou no sigh, nor shed no tear;
Lest yet my half-clos'd eye may view
On earth an object worth its care. Prior.

To ADJO'IN, v. a. [adjoindre, Fr. adjungo, Lat.]

1. To join to; to unite to; to put to.

As one, who long in populous city pent,
Forth issuing on a summer's morn to breathe
Among the pleasant villages and farms
Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight.
Milton

Corrections or improvements should be as remarks adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places; and superadded to a regular treatise. Watts.

2. To fasten by a joint or juncture.

As a massy wheel,
Fixt on the summit of the highest mount,
To whose huge spoke ten thousand lesser things
Are mortis'd and adjoined. Shakespeare.

To ADJO'IN. v. n. To be contiguous to; to lie next, so as to have nothing between.

Th' adjoining fane the assembled Greeks express'd,
And hunting of the Caledonian beast. Dryd.

In learning any thing, as little should be proposed to the mind at once as is possible; and, that being understood and fully mastered, proceed to the next adjoining, yet unknown, simple, unperplexed proposition, belonging to the matter in hand, and tending to the clearing what is principally designed. Locke.

To ADJOURN. v. a. [adjourner, Fr.]

1. To put off to another day, naming the time; a term used in juridical proceedings; as, of parliaments, or courts of justice.

The queen being absent, 'tis needful fitness,
That we adjourn this court to further day.
Shakespeare.

By the king's authority alone and by his writs, they are assembled; and by him alone are they prorogued and dissolved: but each house may adjourn itself. Bacon.

2. To put off; to defer; to let stay to a future time.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Why hast thou thus adjourn'd
The graces for his merits due,
Being all to dolours turn'd. Shakesp. Cymb.

Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught:
Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought.
Dryden.

The formation of animals being foreign to my purpose, I shall adjourn the consideration of it to another occasion. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

ADJO'URNMENT. n. s. [adjournement, Fr.]

1. An assignment of a day; or a putting off, till another day.

Adjournment in eyre, an appointment of a day, when the justices in eyre mean to sit again. Cowell.

2. Delay; procrastination; dismission to a future time.

We will, and we will not; and then we will not again, and we will. At this rate we run our lives out, in adjournments from time to time; out of a fantastical levity, that holds us off and on, betwixt hawk and buzzard. L'Estrange.

A'DIPOUS. adj. [adiposus, Lat] Fat. Dict.

A'DIT. n. s. [aditus, Lat.] A passage, for the conveyance of water under ground; a passage under ground in general; a term among the miners.

For conveying away the water, they stand in aid of sundry devices; as, adits, pumps, and wheels, driven by a stream, and interchangeably filling and emptying two buckets. Carew.

The delfs would be so flown with waters (it being impossible, to make any adits or soughs to drain them) that no gins or machines could suffice, to lay and keep them dry. Ray.

ADI'TION. n. s. [from adeo, aditum, Lat.] The act of going to another. Dict.

To ADJU'DGE. v. a. [adjudico, Lat.]

1. To give the thing controverted, to one of the parties, by a judicial sentence; with the particle to, before the person.

The way of disputing in the schools is, by insisting on one topical argument; by the success of which, victory is adjudged to the opponent or defendant. Locke.

The great competitors for Rome,
Cæsar and Pompey, on Pharsalian plains;
Where stern Bellona, with one final stroke,
Adjudg'd the empire of this globe to one. Phillips.

2. To sentence, or condemn to a punishment; with to before the thing.

But, though thou art adjudged to the death;
Yet I will favour thee, in what I can. Shakesp.

3. Simply, to judge; to decree; to determine.

He adjudged him unworthy of his friendship, purposing sharply to revenge the wrong he had received. Knolles.

ADJUDICA'TION. n. s. [adjudicatio, Lat.] The act of judging, or of granting something to a litigant, by a judicial sentence.

To ADJU'DICATE. v. a. [adjudico, Lat.] To adjudge; to give something controverted to one of the litigants, by a sentence or decision.

To A'DJUGATE. v. a. [adjugo, Lat.] To yoke to; to join to another by a yoke. Dict.

A'DJUMENT. n. s. [adjumentum, Lat.] Help; support. Dict.

A'DJUNCT. n. s. [adjunctum, Lat.]

1. Something adherent or united to another, though not essentially part of it.

Learning is but an adjunct to ourself;
And, where we are, our learning likewise is. Shak.

But I make haste, to consider you as abstracted from a court; which (if you will give me leave to use a term of logick) is only an adjunct, not a propriety, of happiness. Dryden.

The talent of discretion, in its several adjuncts and circumstances, is no where so serviceable as to the clergy. Swift.

2. A person joined to another. This sense rarely occurs.

He made him the associate of his heir-apparent together with the lord Cottington (as an adjunct of singular experience and trust) in foreign travels, and in a business of love. Wotton.

A'DJUNCT. adj. United with; immediately consequent.

So well, that what you bid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjunct to my act,
I'd do't. Shakesp. King John.

ADJU'NCTION. n. s. [adjunctio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjoining or coupling together.

2. The thing joined.

ADJU'NCTIVE. n. s. [adjunctivus, Lat.]

1. He that joins.

2. That, which is joined.

ADJURA'TION. n. s. [adjuratio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjuring, or proposing an oath to another.

2. The form of oath, proposed to another.

When these learned men saw sickness and frenzy cured, the dead raised, the oracles put to silence, the dæmons and evil spirits forced to confess themselves no gods, by persons, who only made use of prayer and adjurations in the name of their crucified Saviour how could they doubt of their Saviour's power, on the like occasions?
Addison on the Christian Religion.

To ADJU'RE. v. a. [adjuro, Lat.] To impose an oath upon another, prescribing the form in which he shall swear.

Thou know'st, the magistrates
And princes of my country came in person;
Solicited, commanded, threaten'd, urg'd,
Adjur'd by all the bonds of civil duty
And of religion; press'd; how just it was,
How honourable. Milton.

Ye lamps of heaven! (he said, and lifted high
His hands now free) thou venerable sky!
Ye sacred altars, from whose flames I fled!
Be all of you adjured. Dryden.

To ADJUST. v. a. [adjuster, Fr.]

1. To regulate; to put in order; to settle in the right form.

Your lordship removes all difficulties, and supplies all our wants, faster than the most visionary projector can adjust his schemes. Swift.

2. To reduce to the true state or standard; to make accurate.

The names of mixed modes, for the most part, want standards in nature, whereby men may rectify and adjust their signification; therefore they are very various and doubtful. Locke.

3. To make conformable. It requires the particle to, before the thing to which the conformity is made.

As to the accomplishment of this remarkable prophecy, whoever reads the account given by Josephus, without knowing his character; and compares it, with what our Saviour foretold; would think, the historian had been a Christian; and that he had nothing else in view, but to adjust the event to the prediction. Addison.

ADJU'STMENT. n. s. [adjustement, Fr.]

1. Regulation; the act of putting in method; settlement.

The farther and clearer adjustment of this affair, I am constrained to adjourn to the larger treatise. Woodward.

2. The state, of being put in method, or regulated.

It is a vulgar idea we have of a watch or clock, when we conceive of it, as an instrument made to shew the hour; but it is a learned idea, which the watch-maker has of it; who knows all the several parts of it, together with the various connections and adjustments of each part. Watts's Logick.

A'DJUTANT. n. s. A petty officer, whose duty is to assist the major, by distributing the pay, and overseeing the punishment, of the common men.

To ADJU'TE. v. a. [adjuvo, adjutum, Lat.] To help; to concur; a word not now in use.

For there be
Six bachelors as bold as he,
Adjusting to his company;
And each one hath his livery.
Ben Jonson's Underwoods.

ADJU'TOR. n. s. [adjutor, Lat.] A helper. Dict.

ADJU'TORY. adj. [adjutorius, Lat.] That, which helps. Dict.

ADJU'TRIX. n. s. [Lat.] She, who helps. Dict.

A'JUVANT. adj. [adjuvans, Lat.] Helpful; useful. Dict.

To A'DJUVATE. v. a. [adjuvo, Lat.] To help; to further; to put forward. Dict.

ADME'ASUREMENT. n. s. [See MEASURE.] The adjustment of proportions; the act or practice of measuring according to rule.

Admeasurement is a writ, which lieth for the bringing of those to a mediocrity, that usurp more than their part. It lieth in two cases: one is termed admeasurement of dower, where the widow of the deceased holdeth (from the heir or his guardian) more in the name of her dower, than belongeth to her: the other is admeasurement of pasture, which lieth between those, that have common of pasture appendant to their freehold, or common by vicinage; in case, any one of them (or more) do surcharge the common with more cattle than they ought. Cowell.

In some counties they are not much acquainted, with admeasurement by acre; and thereby the writs contain twice or thrice so many acres more, than the land hath. Bacon.

ADMENSURA'TION. n. s. [ad and mensura, Lat.] The act, or practice, of measuring out to each his part.

ADMI'NICLE. n. s. [adminiculum, Lat.] Help; support; furtherance. Dict.

ADMINI'CULAR. adj. [from adminiculum, Lat.] That, which gives help. Dict.

To ADMINISTER. v. a. [administro, Lat.]

1. To give; to afford; to supply.

Let zephyrs bland
Administer their tepid genial airs;
Nought fear he from the west, whose gentle warmth
Discloses well the earth's all-teeming womb.
Philips.

2. To act, as the minister or agent in any employment or office; generally, but not always, with some hint of subordination; as, to administer the government.

For forms of government let fools contest;
Whate'er is best administer'd, is best. Pope.

3. To administer justice; to distribute right.

4. To administer the sacraments, to dispense them.
Have not they the old popish custom of administering the blessed sacrament of the holy eucharist with wafer cakes? Hooker.
5. To administer an oath; to propose or require an oath authoritatively; to tender an oath.
Swear by the duty that you owe to heav'n
To keep the oath that we administer. Shakespeare.
6. To administer physick; to give physick, as it is wanted.
I was carried on men's shoulders administering physick and phlebotomy. Wafer's Voyage.
7. To administer to; to contribute; to bring supplies.
I must not omit, that there is a fountain rising in the upper part of my garden, which forms a little wandering rill; and administers to the pleasure as well as the plenty of the place. Spectator.
8. To perform the office of an administrator, in law. See ADMINISTRATOR.
Neale's order was never performed, because the executors durst not administer.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

To ADMI'NISTRATE. v. a. [administro, Lat.] To exhibit; to give as physick. Not in use.
They have the same effects in medicine, when inwardly administrated to animal bodies.
Woodward.

ADMINISTRA'TION. n. s. [administratio, Lat.]
1. The act of administering or conducting any employment; as, the conducting the public affairs; dispensing the laws.
I then did use the person of your father;
The image of his power lay then in me:
And in th' administration of his law,
While I was busy for the commonwealth,
Your highness pleased to forget my place.
Shakespeare.
In the short time of his administration, he shone so powerfully upon me; that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate. Dryden.
2. The active or executive part of government.
It may pass for a maxim in state, that the administration cannot be placed in too few hands, nor the legislature in too many. Swift.
3. Collectively; those, to whom the care of public affairs is committed; as,
The administration has been opposed in parliament.
4. Distribution; exhibition; dispensation.
There is, in sacraments, to be observed their force, and their form of administration. Hooker.
By the universal administration of grace (begun by our blessed Saviour, enlarged by his apostles, carried on by their immediate successors, and to be completed by the rest to the world's end) all types, that darkened this faith, are enlightened.
Sprat's Sermons.

ADMI'NISTRATIVE. adj. [from administrate.] That, which administers; that by which any one administers.

ADMINISTRA'TOR. n. s. [administrator, Lat.]
1. It is properly taken for him, that has the goods of a man dying intestate, committed to his charge by the ordinary; and is accountable for the same, whenever it shall please the ordinary to call upon him thereunto. Cowell.
He was wonderfully diligent to enquire and observe, what became of the king of Arragon, in holding the kingdom of Castille; and whether he did hold it in his own right, or as administrator to his daughter. Bacon's Henry VII.
2. He, that officiates in divine rites.
I feel my conscience bound to remember the death of Christ, with some society of Christians or other, since it is a most plain command; whether the person, who distributes these elements, be only an occasional or a settled administrator.
Watts.
3. He, that conducts the government.
The residence of the prince, or chief administrator of the civil power. Swift.

ADMINISTRA'TRIX, n. s. [Lat.] She, who administers in consequence of a will.

ADMINISTRA'TORSHIP. n. s. [from administrator.] The office of administrator.

ADMIRABI'LITY. n. s. [admirabilis, Lat.] The quality or state of being admirable. Dict.

A'DMIRABLE. adj. [admirabilis, Lat.] To be admired; worthy of admiration; of power to excite wonder: always taken in a good sense, and applied either to persons or things.
The more power he hath to hurt, the more admirable is his praise, that he will not hurt.
Sidney.
God was with them in all their afflictions; and at length, by working their admirable deliverance, did testify that they served him not in vain.
Hooker.
What admirable things occur, in the remains of several other philosophers! Short, I confess, of the rules of christianity, but generally above the lives of christians. South's Sermons.
You can at most
To an indiff'rent lover's praise pretend:
But you would spoil an admirable friend. Dryden.

A'DMIRABLENESS. n. s. [from admirable.] The quality of being admirable; the power of raising wonder.

A'DMIRABLY. v. a. [from admirable.] So as to raise wonder, in an admirable manner.
The theatre is the most spacious, of any I ever saw; and so admirably well contrived, that, from the very depth of the stage, the lowest sound may be heard distinctly to the farthest part of the audience, as in a wispering place; and yet, raise your voice as high as you please, there is nothing (like an echo) to cause the least confusion. Addis.

A'DMIRAL. n. s. [amiral, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]
1. An officer or magistrate, that has the government of the king's navy, and the hearing and determining all causes (as well civil as criminal) belonging to the sea. Cowell.
2. The chief commander of a fleet.
He also, in battle at sea, overthrew Roderick Rotundus, admiral of Spain; in which fight, the admiral with his son were both slain, and seven of his gallies taken. Knolles
Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all
The English youth flock to their admiral. Waller.
3 The ship, which carries the admiral or commander of the fleet.
The admiral galley, wherein the emperor himself was, by great mischance struck upon a sand.
Knolles

A'DMIRALSHIP. n. s. [from admiral.] The office or power of an admiral.

A'DMIRALTY. n. s. [amiraulte, Fr.] The power or officers appointed for the administration of naval affairs.

ADMIRA'TION. n. s. [admiratio, Lat.]
1. Wonder; the act of admiring or wondering.
Indu'd with human voice and human sense,
Reasoning to admiration. Milton.
The passions always move, and therefore (consequently) please: for, without motion, there can be no delight; which cannot be considered, but as an active passion. When we view those elevated ideas of nature, the result of that view is admiration, which is always the cause of pleasure.
Dryden.
There is a pleasure in admiration; and this is that, which properly causeth admiration; when we discover a great deal in an object, which we understand to be excellent; and yet we see (we know not how much) more beyond that, which our understandings cannot fully reach and comprehend. Tillotson.
2. It is taken sometimes in a bad sense, though generally in a good.
Your boldness I with admiration see.
What hope had you, to gain a queen like me?
Because a hero forc'd me once away,
Am I thought fit to be a second prey? Dryden.

To ADMI'RE. v. a. [admiro, Lat. admirer, Fr.]
1. To regard with wonder, generally in a good sense.
'Tis here, that knowledge wonders; and there is an admiration, that is not the daughter of ignorance. This indeed stupidly gazeth at the unwonted effect; but the philosophic passion truly admires and adores the supreme efficient.
Glanville.
2. It is sometimes used in more familiar speech, for to regard with love.
3. It is used but rarely in an ill sense.
You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting,
With most admir'd disorder. Shakesp. Macbeth

To ADMI'RE. v. n. To wonder; sometimes with the particle at.
The eye is already so perfect, that I believe the reason of a man would easily have rested here, and admir'd at his own contrivance. Ray on the Creat.

ADMI'RER. n. s. [from admire.]
1. The person, that wonders, or regards with admiration.
Neither Virgil nor Horace would have gained so great reputation, had they not been the friends and admirers of each other. Addison.
Who most, to shun or hate mankind, pretend;
Seek an admirer, or would fix a friend. Pope.
2. In common speech, a lover.

ADMI'RINGLY. adv. [from admire.] With admiration; in the manner of an admirer.
The king very lately spoke of him admiringly and mournfully. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.
We may yet further admiringly observe, that men usually give freeliest, where they have not given before. Boyle.

ADMI'SSIBLE. adj. [admitto, admissum, Lat.] That, which may be admitted.
Suppose that this supposition were admissible; yet this would not any way be inconsistent with the eternity of the divine nature and essence.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ADMI'SSION. n. s. [admissio, Lat.]
1. The act or practice of admitting.
There was also enacted that charitable law, for the admission of poor suitors without fee; whereby poor men became rather able to vex, than unable to sue. Bacon's Henry VII.
By means of our solitary situation, and our rare admission of strangers, we know most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown.
Bacon's New Atalantis.
2. The state of being admitted.
My father saw you ill designs pursue;
And my admission shew'd his fear of you. Dryd.

God did then exercise man's hopes with the expectations, of a better paradise, or a more intimate admission to himself. South's Sermons.

Our king descends from Jove:
And hither are we come, by his command,
To crave admission in your happy land. Dryden.

3. Admittance; the power of entering, or being admitted

All springs have some degree of heat, none ever freezing, no not in the longest and severest frosts; especially those, where there is such a site and disposition of the strata, as gives free and easy admission to this heat. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

4. [In the ecclesiastical law.] It is, when the patron presents a clerk to a church that is vacant; and the bishop, upon examination, admits and allows of such clerk to be fitly qualified, by saying, Admitto te habilem. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. The allowance of an argument; the grant of a position not fully proved.

To ADMIT. v. a. [admitto, Lat.]

1. To suffer to enter; to grant entrance.

Mirth, admit me of thy crew. Milton.
Does not one table Bavius still admit? Pope.

2. To suffer to enter upon an office; in which sense the phrase of admission into a college, &c. is used.

The treasurer found it no hard matter, so far to terrify him; that, for the king's service, as was pretended, he admitted, for a six-clerk, a person recommended by him. Clarendon.

3. To allow an argument or position.

Suppose, no weapon can thy valour's pride
Subdue; that, by no force, thou may'st be won:
Admit, no steel can hurt or wound thy side;
And be it, heav'n hath thee such favour done. Fairfax.

This argument is like to have the less effect on me, seeing I cannot easily admit the inference. Locke.

4. To allow or grant, in general; sometimes with the particle of.

If you once admit of a latitude, that thoughts may be exalted and images raised above the life; that leads you insensibly, from your own principles to mine. Dryden.

ADMI'TTABLE. adj. [from admit.] The person or thing, which may be admitted.

Because they have not a bladder, like those we observe in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogism not admittable; a fallacy, that needs not the sun to scatter it. Brown.

The clerk, who is presented, ought to prove to the bishop, that he is a deacon, and that he has orders; otherwise the bishop is not bound to admit him; for, as the law then stood, a deacon was admittable. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ADMI'TTANCE n. s. [from admit]

1. The act of admitting; allowance or permission to enter.

It cannot enter any man's conceit to think it lawful, that every man which listeth should take upon him charge in the church; and therefore a solemn admittance is of such necessity, that, without it, there can be no church polity. Hooker.

As to the admittance of the weighty elastic parts of the air into the blood, though the coats of the vessels; it seems contrary to experiments upon dead bodies. Arbuthnot on Aliments

2. The power or right of entering.

What,
If I do line one of their hands?—'tis gold,
Which buys admittance. Shakespeare's Cymb.

Surely a daily expectation at the gate is the readiest way, to gain admittance into the house. South's Sermons.

There's news from Bertran: he desires
Admittance to the king; and cries aloud,
This day shall end our fears. Dryden.

There are some ideas, which have admittance only through one sense, which is peculiarly adapted to receive them. Locke.

3. Custom or prerogative, of being admitted to great persons; a sense now out of use.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, of great admittance; authentick, in your place and person; generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations. Shakespeare.

4. Concession of a position.

Nor could the Pythagorean give easy admittance thereto; for, holding that separate souls successively supplied other bodies, they could hardly allow the raising of souls from other worlds. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To ADMIX. v. a. [admisceo, Lat.] To mingle with something else.

ADMI'XTION. n. s. [from admix.] The union of one body with another, by mingling them.

All metals may be calcined, by strong waters; or by admirtion of salt, sulphur, and mercury. Bacon.

The elements are no where pure, in these lower regions; and if there is any free from the admixtion of another, sure it is above the concave of the moon. Glanville.

There is no way, to make a strong and vigorous powder of saltpetre, without the admixtion of sulphur. Brown's Vulgar Errours

ADMI'XTURE. n. s. [from admix.] The body, mingled with another; perhaps sometimes the act of mingling.

Whatever acrimony or amaritude at any time redounds in it, must be derived from the admixture of another sharp bitter substance,
Harvey on Consumptions

A mass, which to the eye appears to be nothing but mere simple earth, shall, to the smell or taste, discover a plentiful admixture of sulphur, alum, or some other mineral. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

To ADMO'NISH. v. a. [admoneo, Lat.] To warn of a fault; to reprove gently; to counsel against wrong practices; to put in mind of a fault or a duty: with the particle of, or against; which latter is more rare: or the infinitive mood of a verb.

One of his cardinals, who better knew the intrigues of affairs, admonished him against that unskilful piece of ingenuity. Decay of Piety.

He of their wicked ways
Shall them admonish, and before them set
The paths of righteousness. Milton.

But, when he was admonished by his subject to descend, he came down, gently circling in the air and singing, to the ground. Dryden.

ADMO'NISHER. n. s. [from admonish.] The person, that admonishes, or puts another in mind of his faults or duty.

Horace was a mild admonisher; a court satirist, fit for the gentle times of Augustus. Dryden.

ADMO'NISHMENT. n. s. [from admonish.] Admonition; the notice, by which one is put in mind of faults or duties: a word not often used.

But yet be wary, in thy studious care.—
—Thy grave admonishments prevail with me.
Shakesp. Henry V p. 1.

To th' infinitely Good we owe
Immortal thanks; and his admonishment
Receive, with solemn purpose to observe
Immutably his sovereign will, the end
Of what we are. Milton.

ADMONI'TION. n. s. [admonitio, Lat.] The hint of a fault or duty; counsel; gentle reproof.

They must give our teachers leave, for the saving of souls, to intermingle sometimes with other more necessary things, admonition concerning these not unnecessary. Hooker.

From this admonition they took only occasion, to redouble their fault, and to sleep again; so that upon a second and third admonition, they had nothing to plead for their unseasonable drowsiness. South's Sermons.

ADMONI'TIONER. n. s. [from admonition.] A liberal dispenser of admonition; a general adviser. A ludicrous term.

Albeit the admonitioners did seem at first, to like no prescript form of prayer at all; but thought it the best, that their minister should always be left at liberty to pray, as his own discretion did serve; their defender, and his associates, have sithence proposed to the world a form as themselves did like. Hooker.

ADMO'NITORY. adj. [admonitorius, Lat.] That, which admonishes.

The sentence of reason is either mandatory, shewing what must be done; or else permissive, declaring only what may be done; or thirdly, admonitory, opening what is the most convenient for us to do. Hooker.

ADMURMURA'TION. n. s. [admurmuro, Lat.] The act of murmuring or whispering to another. Dict.

To ADMO'VE. v. a. [admoveo, Lat.] To bring one thing to another. A word not in use.

If, unto the powder of loadstone or iron, we admove the north-pole of the loadstone; the powders, or small divisions, will erect and conform themselves thereto. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADO'. n. s. [from the verb to do, with a before it, as the French affaire, from à and faire.

1. Trouble, difficulty.

He took Clitophon prisoner; whom, with much ado, he keepeth alive; the Helots being villainously cruel. Sidney.

They moved, and in the end persuaded (with much ado) the people, to bind themselves by solemn oath. Hooker.

He kept the borders and marches of the pale, with much ado; he held many parliaments, wherein sundry laws were made. Sir John Davies.

With much ado, he partly kept awake;
Not suffring all his eyes, repose to take. Dryden.

2. Bustle; tumult; business; sometimes with the particle about.

Let's follow, to see the end of this ado. Shakesp.

All this ado, about Adam's fatherhood and the greatness of its power, helps nothing to establish the power of those that govern. Locke.

3. It has a light and ludicrous sense, implying more tumult and show of business, than the affair is worth: in this sense it is of late generally used.

I made no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thus: Shakesp. Henry IV

We'll keep no great ado:—a friend or two.—
It may be thought, we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revel much. Shakesp

Come, says Puss, without any more ado, 'tis time to go to breakfast; cats don't live upon dialogues. L'Estrange.

ADOLE'SCENCE. } n. s. [adolescentia,
ADOLE'SCENCY. } Lat.] The age succeeding childhood, and succeeded by puberty: more largely, that part of life, in which the body has not yet reached its full perfection.

He was so far from a boy, that he was a man born, and at his full stature; if we believe Josephus, who places him in the last adolescency, and makes him twenty-five years old. Brown.

The sons must have a tedious time of childhood and adolescence, before they can either themselves assist their parents, or encourage them with new hopes of posterity. Bentley.

To ADO'PT. v. a. [adopto, Lat.]

1. To take a son by choice; to make him a son, who was not so by birth.

Were none of all my father's sisters left;
Nay, were I of my mother's kin bereft;
None, by an uncle's or a grandame's side;
Yet I could some adopted heir provide. Dryden.

2. To place any person or thing, in a nearer relation, than they have by nature, to something else.

Whether, adopted to some neighb'ring star,
Thou roll't above us in thy wand'ring race;
Or, in procession fix'd and regular,
Mov'd with the heaven's majestic pace;
Or call'd to more celestial bliss,
Thou tread'st with seraphims the vast abyss.

We are seldom at ease, from the solicitation of our natural or adopted desires; but a constant succession of uneasinesses (out of that stock, which natural wants or acquired habits have heaped-up) take the will in their turns. Locke.

ADO'PTEDLY. adv. [from adopted.] After the manner of something adopted.

Adoptedly, as school-maids change their names,
By vain (though apt) affection. Shakespeare.

ADOP'TER. n. s. [from adopt.] He, that gives some one by choice the rights of a son.

ADO'PTION. n. s. [adoptio, Lat.]

1. The act of adopting, or taking to one's self what is not native.

2. The state of being adopted.

My bed shall be abused, my reputation gnawn at; and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms; and by him, that does me the wrong. Shakespeare.

She purpos'd,
When she had fitted you with her craft, to work
Her son into th' adoption of the crown. Shakesp.

In every act of our Christian worship, we are taught to call upon him under the endearing character of our Father; to remind us of our adoption; that we are made heirs of God, and joint heirs of Christ. Rogers's Sermons.

ADO'PTIVE, adj. [adoptivus, Lat.]

1. He that is adopted by another, and made his son.

It is impossible, an elective monarch should be so free and absolute, as an hereditary; no more than it is possible for a father, to have so full power and interest in an adoptive son, as in a natural. Bacon.

2. He that adopts another, and makes him his son.

An adopted son cannot cite his adoptive father into court, without his leave. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ADO'RABLE. adj. [adorable, Fr.] That, which ought to be adored; that, which is worthy of divine honours.

'On these two, the love of God and our neigh-'bour, hang both the law and the prophets,' says the adorable Author of Christianity; and the Apostle says, 'the end of the law is charity.' Cheyne.

ADO'RABLENESS. n. s. [from adorable.] The quality of being adorable; worthiness of divine honours.

ADO'RABLY. adv. [from adorable.] In a manner worthy of adoration.

ADORA'TION. n. s. [adoratio, Lat.]

1. The external homage paid to the Divinity, distinct from mental reverence.

Solemn and serviceable worship we name, for distinction sake, whatsoever belongeth to the church (or publick society) of God, by way of external adoration. Hooker.

It is possible to suppose, that those, who believe a supreme excellent Being, may yet give him no external adoration at all. Stillingfleet.

2. Homage, paid to persons in high place, or esteem.

O ceremony! shew me but thy worth!
What is thy toll, O adoration!
Art thou nought else, but place, degree, and form,
Creating awe and fear in other men?
Wherein thou art less happy, being fear'd,
Than they in fearing.
What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,
But poison'd flattery? Shakesp. Henry V.

To ADO'RE. v. a. [adoro, Lat.]

1. To worship with external homage; to pay divine honours.

The mountain nymphs and Themis they adore,
And from her oracles relief implore. Dryden.

2. It is used popularly, to denote a high degree of reverence or regard; to reverence; to honour; to love.

The people appear adoring their prince, and their prince adoring God. Tatler, No. 57.

Make future times thy equal act adore;
And be, what brave Orestes was before. Pope's Ody.

ADO'REMENT. n. s. [from adore.] Adoration; worship: a word scarcely used.

The priests of elder times deluded their apprehensions, with sooth-saying, and such oblique idolatries; and won their credulities to the literal and downright adorement, of cats, lizards, and beetles. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADO'RER. n. s. [from adore.]

1. He, that adores; a worshipper; a term, generally used in a low sense; as, by lovers, or admirers.

Being so far provoked (as I was) in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Whilst as th' approaching pageant does appear,
And echoing crowds speak mighty Venus near;
I, her adorer, too devoutly stand,
Fast on the utmost margin of the land. Prior.

2. A worshipper; in a serious sense.

He was so severe an adorer of truth, as not to dissemble; or to suffer any man to think, that he would do any thing, which he resolved not to do. Clarendon.

To ADO'RN. v. a. [adorno, Lat.]

1. To dress; to deck the person with ornaments.

He hath clothed me, with the garments of salvation; he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness; as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels. Isa. lxi. 10.

Yet 'tis not to adorn and gild each part,
That shews more cost than art;
Jewels, at nose and lips, but ill appear. Cowley.

2. To set out any place or thing, with decorations.

A gallery, adorned with the pictures or statues of the invention of things useful to human life Cowley.

3. To embellish with oratory, or elegance of language.

This will supply men's tongues, with many new things; to be named, adorned, and described, in their discourse, Sprat.

Thousands there are, in darker fame that dwell,
Whose names some nobler poem shall adorn;
For, tho' unknown to me, they sure fought well. Dryden.

ADO'RN. adj. [from the verb.] Adorned; decorated: a word, peculiar to Milton.

She'll to realities yield all her shows;
Made so adorn, for thy delight the more. Milton.

AD'ORNMENT. n. s. [from adorn.] Ornament; embellishment; elegance not now in use.

This attribute was not given to the earth, while it was confused: nor to the heavens, before they had motion and adornment. Raleigh's History of the World.

She held the very garment of Posthum more respect, than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

ADO'WN. adv. [from a and down.] Down; on the ground.

Thrice did she sink adown, in deadly sound;
And thrice he her reviv'd, with busy pain. Fairy Queen.

ADO'WN. prep. Down; towards the ground; from a higher situation, towards a lower.

In this remembrance, Emily, ere day
Arose, and dress'd herself in rich array;
Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair:
Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair. Dryd.

ADRE'AD. adv. [from a and dread; as, aside, athirst, asleep.] In a state of fear; frighted; terrified: now obsolete.

And thinking, to make all men adread to such a one; an enemy, who would not spare nor fear, to kill so great a prince. Sidney.

ADRI'FT. adv. [from a and drift, from drive.] Floating at random; as any impulse may drive.

Then shall this mount
Of Paradise, by might of waves, be moved
Out of his place; push'd by the horned flood
(With all his verdure spoil'd, and trees adrift)
Down the great river, to the opening gulf;
And there take root. Milton.

It seem'd a corps adrift, to distant sight;
But, at a distance, who could judge aright? Dryd.

The custom of frequent reflection will keep their minds, from running adrift; and call their thoughts home, from useless unattentive roving. Locke on Education.

ADRO'IT. adj. [French.] Dextrous; active; skilful.

An adroit stout fellow would sometimes destroy a whole family, with justice apparently against him the whole time. Jervas's Don Quixote.

ADRO'ITNESS. n. s. [from adroit.] Dexterity; readiness; activity. Neither this word, nor adriot, seem yet completely naturalized.

ADRY'. adv. [from a and dry.] Athirst; thirsty; in want of drink.

He never told any of them, that he was his humble servant, but his well-wisher; and would rather be thought a malecontent, than drink the king's health when he was not adry. Spectator.

ADSCITI'TIOUS. adj. [adscititius, Lat.] That, which is taken in, to complete something else, though originally extrinsick; supplemental, additional.

ADSTRI'CTION. n. s. [adstrictio, Lat.] The act of binding together; and applied generally, to medicaments and applications, which have the power of making the part contract.

To ADVA'NCE. v. a. [avancer, Fr.]

1. To bring forward, in the local sense.

Now morn, her rosy steps in the eastern clime
Advancing, sow'd the earth with orient pearl. Milt.

2. To raise to preferment; to aggrandize.

He hath been ever constant, in his course of advancing me; from a private gentlewoman, he made me a marchioness; and from a marchioness, a queen; and now he intends to crown my innocency, with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.

The declaration of the greatness of Mordecai, whereunto the king advanced him. Esther, x. 2.

3. To improve.

What laws can be advised more proper and effectual, to advance the nature of man to its highest perfection, than these precepts of Christianity? Tillotson.

4. To heighten; to grace; to give lustre to.

As the calling dignifies the man, so the man much more advances his calling. As a garment, though it warms the body, has a return with an advantage, being much more warmed by it. South's Sermons.

5. To forward; to accelerate.

These three last were slower, than the ordinary Indian wheat of itself; and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

6. To propose; to offer to the publick; to bring to view or notice.

Phedon I hight, quoth he; and do advance
My ancestry from famous Coradin. Fairy Queen.

I dare not advance my opinion, against the judgment of so great an author; but I think it fair, to leave the decision to the publick. Dryden.

Some ne'er advance a judgment of their own,
But catch the spreading notion of the town. Pope.

To ADVA'NCE. v. n.

1. To come forward.

At this the youth, whose vent'rous soul
No fears of magic art controul,
Advanc'd in open sight. Parnel.

2. To make improvement.

They, who would advance in knowledge, and not deceive and swell themselves with a little articulated air, should not take words for real entities in nature, till they can frame clear and distinct ideas of those entities. Locke.

ADVA'NCE. n. s. [from To advance.]

1. The act of coming forward.

All the foot were put into Abington, with a resolution to quit or defend the town, according to the manner of the enemy's advance towards it. Clarendon.

So, like the sun's advance, your titles shew;
Which, as he rises, does the warmer grow. Waller.

2. A tendency, to come forward to meet a lover; an act of invitation.

In vain are all the practis'd wiles,
In vain those eyes would love impart;
Not all th' advances, all the smiles,
Can move one unrelenting heart. Walsh.

His genius was below
The skill of ev'ry common beau;
Who, though he cannot spell, is wise
Enough to read a lady's eyes;
And will each accidental glance
Interpret, for a kind advance. Swift.

He has described the unworthy passion of the goddess Calypso, and the indecent advances she made to detain him from his own country. Pope.

That prince applied himself, first to the Church of England: and, upon their refusal to fall in with his measures, made the like advances to the Dissenters. Swift.

3. Gradual progression; rise, from one point to another.

Our Saviour raised the ruler's daughter, the widow's son, and Lazarus: the first of these, when she had just expired; the second, as he was carried to the grave on his bier; and the third, after he had been some time buried. And, having (by these gradual advances) manifested his divine power, he at last exerted the highest and most glorious degree of it; and raised himself also, by his own all-quickening virtue, and according to his own express prediction. Atterbury.

Men of study and thought, that reason right, and are lovers of truth, do make no great advances in their discoveries of it. Locke.

4. Improvement; progress towards perfection.

The principle and object, of the greatest importance (in the world) to the good of mankind, and for the advance and perfecting of human nature. Hale.

ADVA'NCEMENT. n. s. [advancement, Fr.]

1. The act of coming forward.

This refinement makes daily advancements; and, I hope, in time will raise our language to the utmost perfection. Swift.

2. The state of being advanced; preferment.

The Percies of the North,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shakesp.

3. The act of advancing another.

In his own grace he doth exalt himself
More, than in your advancement. Shakesp. King Lear.

4. Improvement; promotion to a higher state of excellence.

Nor can we conceive it unwelcome unto those worthies, who endeavour the advancement of learning. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

5. Settlement on a wife. This sense is now disused.

The jointure or advancement of the lady was the third part of the principality of Wales. Bacon.

ADVA'NCER. n. s. [from advance.] He, that advances any thing; a promoter; forwarder.

Soon after the death of a great officer; who was judged no advancer of the king's matters; the king said to his solicitor, 'Tell me truly, what say you 'of your cousin that is gone?' Bacon.

The reporters are greater advancers of defamatory designs, than the very first contrivers. Government of the Tongue.

ADVA'NTAGE. n. s. [avantage, Fr.]

1. Superiority: often with of or over, before a person.

In the practical prudence of managing such gifts, the laiety may have some advantage over the clergy; whose experience is, and ought to be, less of this world than the other. Sprat.

All other sorts and sects of men would evidently have the advantage of us, and a much surer title to happiness than we. Atterbury.

2. Superiority, gained by stratagem or unlawful means.

The common law hath left them this benefit, whereof they make advantage, and wrest it to their bad purposes. Spenser's State of Ireland.

But specially he took advantage of the night, for such privy attempts; insomuch that the bruit of his manliness was spread every where. 2 Macc. viii. 7.

Great malice, backed with a great interest, yet can have no advantage of a man; but from his own expectations of something, that is without him. South's Sermons

As soon, as he was got to Sicily, they sent for him back; designing to take advantage, and prosecute him in the absence of his friends. Swift.

3. Opportunity; convenience.

Give me advantage, of some brief discourse
With Desdemona alone. Shakesp.

4. Favourable circumstances.

Like jewels to advantage set,
Her beauty by the shade does get. Waller.

A face, which is over-flushed, appears to advantage in the deepest scarlet; and the darkest complexion is not a little alleviated, by a black hood. Addison.

True wit is nature, to advantage dress'd;
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd. Pope.

5. Superior excellence.

A man, born with such advantage of constitution, that it adulterates not the images of his mind. Glanville.

6. Gain; profit.

For thou saidst, 'What advantage will it be 'unto thee, and what profit shall I have, if I be 'cleansed from my sin?' Job.

Certain it is, that advantage now sits in the room of conscience; and steers all. South's Sermons.

7. Overplus; something more, than the mere lawful gain.

We owe thee much: within this wall of flesh,
There is a soul, counts thee her creditor;
And, with advantage, means to pay thy love. Shakesp.

You said, you neither lend nor borrow
Upon advantage. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

8. Preponderation, on one side of the comparison.

Much more should the consideration of this pattern arm us with patience, against ordinary calamities; especially, if we consider his example with this advantage; that though his sufferings were wholly undeserved, and not for himself but for us, yet he bore them patiently. Tillotson.

To ADVA'NTAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To benefit.

Convey, what I set down, to my lady; it shall advantage more, than ever the bearing of letter did. Shakesp

The trial hath endamag'd thee no way;
Rather more honour left, and more esteem;
Me nought advantag'd, missing what I aim'd. Milton.

The great business of the senses being, to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body; it is wisely ordered by nature, that pain should accompany the reception of several ideas. Locke.

We should have pursued some other way, more effectual, for distressing the common enemy, and advantaging ourselves. Swift.

2. To promote; to bring forward; to gain ground to.

The stoic (that opinioned, the souls of wise men dwelt about the moon, and those of fools wandered about the earth) advantaged the conceit of this effect. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To ennoble it with the spirit, that inspires the Royal Society, were to advantage it in one of the best capacities, in which it is improveable. Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

ADVA'NTAGEABLE. adj. [from advantage.] Profitable; convenient; gainful.

As it is advantageable to a physician, to be called to the cure of a declining disease; so it is for a commander, to suppress a sedition which has passed the height. Sir J. Hayward.

ADVA'NTAGED. adj. [from To advantage.] Possessed of advantages; commodiously situated or disposed.

In the most advantaged tempers, this disposition is but comparative; whereas, the most of men labour under disadvantages, which nothing can rid them of. Glanville.

ADVA'NTAGE GROUND. n. s. Ground, that gives superiority, and opportunities of annoyance or resistance.

This excellent man, who stood not upon the advantage-ground before; from the time of his promotion to the archbishoprick, provoked or underwent the envy, and reproach, and malice, of men of all qualities and conditions; who agreed in nothing else. Clarendon.

ADVANTA'GEOUS. adj. [avantageux, Fr.]

1. Of advantage; profitable; useful; opportune; convenient.

The time of sickness or affliction is, like the cool of the day to Adam, a season of peculiar propriety for the voice of God to be heard; and may be improved into a very advantageous opportunity of begetting or increasing spiritual life. Hammond.

Here perhaps
Some advantageous act may be achiev'd,
By sudden onset; either with hell-fire
To waste his whole creation, or possess
All as our own. Milton.

2. It is used, with relation to persons; and followed, by to.

Since every painter paints himself in his own works, 'tis advantageous to him to know himself; to the end, that he may cultivate those talents, which make his genius. Dryden.

ADVANTA'GEOUSLY. adv. [from advantageous] Conveniently; opportunely; profitably.

It was advantageously situated; there being an easy passage from it to India, by sea. Arbuthnot.

ADVANTA'GEOUSNESS. n. s. [from advantageous.] Quality of being advantageous; profitableness; usefulness; convenience.

The last property which qualifies God for the fittest object of our love, is the advantageousness of his to us, both in the present and the future life. Boyle's Seraphic Love.

To ADVE'NE. v. n. [advenio, Lat.] To accede to something; to become part of something else, without being essential; to be superadded.

A cause, considered in judicature, is stiled an accidental cause; and the accidental of any act is said to be, whatever advenes to the act itself already substantiated. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ADVE'NIENT. adj. [adveniens, Lat.] Advening; coming from outward causes; superadded.

Being thus divided from truth in themselves, they are yet farther removed by advenient deception; for they are daily mocked into errour, by subtler devisers. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

If, to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advenient, be a great error in philosophy; almost all the world hath been mistaken. Glanville's Vanity of Dogmatism.

A'DVENT. n. s. [from adventus; that is, adventus Redemptoris.] The name of one of the holy seasons, signifying the coming; that is, the coming of our Saviour: which is made the subject of our devotion, during the four weeks before Christmas. Common Prayer.

ADVE'NTINE. adj. [from advenio, adventum.] Adventitious; that, which is extrinsically added; that, which comes from outward causes: a word scarcely in use.

As for the peregrine heat, it is thus far true; that, if the proportion of the adventine heat be greatly predominant to the natural heat and spirits of the body, it tendeth to dissolution or notable alteration. Bacon

ADVENTI'TIOUS. adj. [adventitius, Lat.] That, which advenes; accidental; supervenient; extrinsically added, not essentially inherent.

Diseases of continuance get an adventitious strength from custom, besides their material cause from the humours. Bacon.

Though we may call the obvious colours natural, and the others adventitious; yet such changes of colours, from whatsoever cause they proceed, may be properly taken in. Boyle.

If his blood boil, and the adventitious fire
(Rais'd by high meats, and higher wines) require
To temper and allay the burning heat;
Waters are brought, which by decoction get
New coolness. Dryden.

In the gem kind, of all the many sorts reckoned up by lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original; their diversities, as to lustre, colour, and hardness, arising from the different admixture of other adventitious mineral matter. Woodward.

ADVE'NTIVE. n. s. [from advenio, Lat.] The thing or person, that comes from without: a word not now in use.

That the natives be not so many; but that there may be elbow-room enough for them, and for the adventives also. Bacon.

ADVE'NTUAL. adj. [from advent.] Relating to the season of advent.

I do also daily use one other collect; as, namely, the collects adventual, quadragesimal, paschal, or pentecostal, for their proper seasons. Bishop Saunderson.

ADVE'NTURE. n. s. [Fr.]

1. An accident; a chance; a hazard; an event, of which we have no direction.

The general summoned three castles: one, desperate of succour, and not desirous to dispute the defence, presently yielded; but two stood upon their adventure. Hayward.

2. In this sense is used the phrase, at all adventures; [à l'aventure, Fr.] By chance; without any rational scheme.

Blows flew at all adventures; wounds and deaths, given and taken unexpected; many scarce knowing their enemies, from their friends. Hayward.

Where the mind does not perceive probable connection, there men's opinions are the effects of chance and hazard; of a mind, floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Locke.

3. The occasion of casual events; an enterprise, in which something must be left to hazard.

For I must love, and am resolv'd to try
My fate; or, failing in th' adventure, die. Dryden.

4. This noun, with all its derivatives, is frequently written without ad; as, venture, venturous.

To ADVE'NTURE. v. n. [aventure. Fr.] To try the chance; to dare.

Be not angry,
Most mighty princess, that I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a false report. Shakespeare.

The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground, for delicateness and tenderness. Deut. xxviii. 26.

To ADVE'NTURE. v. a. To put into the power of chance.

For my father fought for you, and adventured his life far; and delivered you, out of the hand of Midian. Judges, ix. 17.

It is often used with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he adventured himself.

ADVE'NTURER. n. s. [aventurier, Fr.] He, that seeks occasions of hazard; he, that puts himself in the hands of chance.

He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard assay foregone. Spenser.

The kings of England did not make the conquest of Ireland: it was begun, by particular adventurers, and other voluntaries, who came to seek their fortunes. Sir J. Davies.

He intended, to hazard his own action; that so the more easily he might win adventurers, who else were like to be less forward. Raleigh.

Had it not been for the British, which the late wars drew over; and adventurers or soldiers, seated here; Ireland had, by the last war and plague, been left destitute. Temple.

Their wealthy trade from pirate's rapine free,
Our merchants shall no more advent'rers be. Dryden.

ADVE'NTUROUS. adj. [aventureux, Fr.]

1. He, that is inclined to adventures; and, consequently, bold, daring, courageous.

At land and sea, in many a doubtful fight,
Was never known a more advent'rous knight;
Who oftner drew his sword, and always for the right. Dryden.

2. Applied to things; that, which is full of hazard; which requires courage; dangerous.

But I've already troubled you too long;
Nor dare attempt a more advent'rous song:
My humble verse demands a softer theme;
A painted meadow, or a purling stream. Addison.

ADVE'NTUROUSLY. adv. [from adventurous.] After an adventurous manner; boldly; daringly.

They are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously. Shakespeare's Henry V

ADVE'NTURESOME. adv. [from adventure.] The same, with adventurous; a low word, scarcely used in writing.

ADVE'NTURESOMENESS. n. s. [from adventuresome.] The quality of being adventuresome. Dict.

AD'VERB. n. s. [adverbium, Lat.] A word, joined to a verb or adjective; and solely applied, to the use of qualifying and restraining the latitude of their signification, by the intimation of some circumstance thereof; as, of quality, manner, degree. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

Thus we say, he runs swiftly; the bird flies aloft; he lives virtuously.

ADVE'RBIAL. adv. [adverbialis, Lat.] That, which has the quality or structure of an adverb.

ADVE'RBIALLY. adv. [adverbialiter, Lat.] Like an adverb; in the manner of an adverb.

I should think, alta was joined adverbially with tremit; did Virgil make use of so equivocal a syntax. Addison.

ADVE'RSABLE. adj. [from adverse.] Contrary to; opposite to. Dict.

ADVERSA'RIA. n. s. [Lat. A book, as it should seem, in which Debtor and Creditor were set in opposition.] A common-place; a book to note in.

These parchments are supposed to have been St. Paul's adversaria. Bull's Sermons.

A'DVERSARY. n. s. [adversaire, Fr. adversarius, Lat.] An opponent; antagonist; enemy; generally applied to those, that have verbal or judicial quarrels; as controvertists or litigants: sometimes, to an opponent in single combat. It may sometimes imply an open profession of enmity; as we say, a secret enemy is worse than an open adversary.

Yet am I noble, as the adversary
I come to cope. Shakesp. King Lear.

Those rites and ceremonies of the church therefore (which are the self-same now, that they were, when holy and virtuous men maintained them, against profane and deriding adversaries) her own children have in derision. Hooker.

Mean while th' adversary of God and man,
Satan, with thoughts inflam'd of highest design,
Puts on swift wings. Milton.

An adversary makes a stricter search into us, and discovers every flaw and imperfection in our tempers: a friend exaggerates a man's virtues; an enemy inflames his crimes. Addison.

ADVE'RSATIVE. adj. [adversativus, Lat.] A term of grammar, applied to a word, which makes some opposition or variety; as, in this sentence; This diamond is orient, but it is rough: But is an adversative conjunction.

A'DVERSE. adj. [adversus, Lat.]
In prose, it has now the accent on the first syllable; in verse, it is accented on the first by Shakespeare; on either, indifferently, by Milton; on the last, by Dryden; on the first, by Roscommon.

1. Acting with contrary directions; as, two bodies in collision.
Was I, for this, nigh wreckt upon the sea;
And twice by adverse winds, from England's bank
Drove back again unto my native clime? Shakesp.
As, when two polar winds, blowing adverse,
Upon the Cronian sea together drive
Mountains of ice Milton.
With adverse blast upturns them from the south,
Notus and Afer. Milton.
A cloud of smoke envelopes either host;
And, all at once, the combatants are lost;
Darkling, they join adverse, and shock unseen;
Coursers with coursers justling, men with men.
Dryden.

2. Figuratively; contrary to the wish or desire; thence, calamitous; afflictive; pernicious. It is opposed to prosperous.
What, if he hath decreed, that I shall first
Be try'd in humble state, and things adverse;
By tribulations, injuries, insults,
Contempts, and scorns, and snares, and violence?
Milton.
Some, the prevailing malice of the great
(Unhappy men!) or adverse fate
Sunk deep, into the gulfs of an afflicted state.
Roscommon.

3. Personally opponent; the person, that counteracts another, or contests any thing.
Well she saw her father was grown her adverse party; and yet her fortune such, as she must favour her rivals. Sidney.

ADVE'RSITY. n. s. [adversité, Fr.] Affliction; calamity; that is, opposition to our wishes.

1. The cause of our sorrow; affliction; misfortune. In this sense, it may have a plural.
Let me embrace these sour adversities;
For wise men say, it is the wisest course.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

2. The state of unhappiness; misery.
Concerning deliverance itself from all adversity, we use not to say, 'Men are in adversity,' whensoever they feel any small hindrance of their welfare in this world; but, when some notable affliction or cross, some great calamity or trouble, befalleth them. Hooker.
Sweet are the uses of adversity;
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head.
Shakespeare.
A remembrance of the great use he had made of prosperity, contributed to support his mind under the heavy weight of adversity, which then lay upon him. Atterbury.

AD'VERSELY. adv. [from adverse.] In an adverse manner; oppositely; unfortunately.
What I think, I utter, and spend my malice in my breath: if the drink you give me, touch my palate adversely; I make a crooked face at it.
Shakesp.

To ADVERT. n. v. [adverto, Lat.] To attend to; to regard; to observe: with the particle to, before the object of regard.
The mind of man being not capable, at once to advert to more than one thing; a particular view and examination of such an innumerable number of vast bodies, will afford matter of admiration.
Ray on the Creation.
Now to the universal whole advert:
The earth regard, as of that whole a part;
In which wide frame, more noble worlds abound;
Witness, ye glorious orbs, which hang around.
Blackmore.
We sometimes say, To advert the mind to an object.

ADVE'RTENCE. n. s. [from advert.] Attention to; regard to; consideration.
Christianity may make Archimedes his challenge: give it, but where it may set its foot; allow, but a sober advertence to its proposals; and it will move the whole world. Decay of Piety.

ADVE'RTENCY. n. s. [from advert.] The same with advertence. Attention; regard; heedfulness.
Too much advertency is not your talent; or else you had fled from that text, as from a rock. Swift.

ADVE'RTENT. adj. [from advert.] Attentive; vigilant; heedful.
This requires choice parts, great attention of mind, sequestration from the importunity of secular employments, and a long advertent and deliberate connexion of consequents.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To ADVERTI'SE. v. a. [advertir, Fr. It is now spoken with the accent upon the last syllable; but appears to have been anciently accented on the second.]

1. To inform another; to give intelligence; with an accusative, of the person informed.
The bishop did require a respite,
Wherein he might the king his lord advertise,
Whether our daughter were legitimate. Shakesp.
As I by friends am well advertised;
Sir Edmund Courtn y, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confederates, are in arms. Shakesp.
The king was not so shallow, nor so ill advertised, as not to perceive the intention of the French king. Bacon.
I hope, ye will advertise me fairly, of what they dislike. Digby.

2. To inform; to give notice: with of, before the subject of information.
Ferhates, understanding that Solyman expected more assured advertisement, unto the other Bassas declared the death of the emperor; of which they advertised Solyman, firming those letters with all their hands and seals. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
They were to advertise the chief hero, of the distresses of his subjects occasioned by his absence. Dryden.

3. To give notice of any thing, by means of an advertisement in the public prints; as, He advertised his loss.

ADVERTI'SEMENT, or ADVE'RTISEMENT, n. s. [advertissement, Fr.]

1. Instruction; admonition.
—'Tis all men's office, to speak patience
To those, that wring under the load of sorrow;
But no man's virtue nor sufficiency,
To be so moral, when he shall endure
The like himself: therefore give me no counsel;
My griefs are louder than advertisement.
Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.
Cyrus was once minded, to have put Crœsus to death; but, hearing him report the advertisement of Solon, he spared his life.
Abbot's Descrip. of the World.

2. Intelligence; information.
Then, as a cunning prince, that useth spies,
If they return no news, doth nothing know;
But, if they make advertisement of lies,
The prince's counsels all awry do go.
Sir John Davies.
He had received advertisement, that the party, which was sent for his relief, had received some brush, which would much retard their march.
Clarendon.
The drum and trumpet, by their several sounds, serve for many kinds of advertisements, in military affairs; the bells serve, to proclaim a scare-fire; and, in some places, water-breaches; the departure of a man, woman, or child; time of divine service; the hour of the day; day of the month.
Holder.

3. Notice of any thing, published in a paper of intelligence.

ADVERTI'SER. n. s. [adertiseur, Fr.]

1. He, that gives intelligence or information.

2. The paper, in which advertisements are published.

ADVE'RTISING, or ADVERTI'SING. part. adj. [from advertise.] Active, in giving intelligence; monitory: a word, not now in use.
As I was then
Advertising, and holy to your business,
Not changing heart with habit; I am still
Attornied at your service.
Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

To ADVE'SPERATE v. n. [advespero, Lat.] To draw towards evening. Dict.

ADVI'CE. n. s. [avis, advis, Fr. from adviso, low Lat.]

1. Counsel; instruction: except that, instruction implies superiority, and advice may be given by equals or inferiors.
Break we our watch up; and, by my advice,
Let us impart, what we have seen to-night,
Unto young Hamlet. Shakesp. Hamlet.
O troubled, weak and coward as thou art!
Without thy poor advice, the lab'ring heart
To worse extremes with swifter steps would run;
Not sav'd by virtue, yet by vice undone. Prior.

2. Reflection; prudent consideration: as, he always acts with good advice.
What he hath won, that he hath fortified:
So hot a speed, with such advice disposed;
Such temperate order, in so fierce a course;
Doth want example. Shakesp. King John.

3. Consultation; deliberation: with the particle with.
Great princes, taking advice with workmen, with no less cost set their things together.
Bacon's Essays.

4. Intelligence: as, the merchants received advice of their loss. This sense is somewhat low, and chiefly commercial.

ADVI'CE-BO'AT. n. s. A vessel employed to bring intelligence.

ADVI'SABLE. adj. [from advise.] Prudent; fit to be advised.
Some judge it advisable for a man, to account with his heart every day; and this, no doubt, is the best and surest course: for still, the oftner, the better. South's Sermons.
It is not advisable to reward, where men have the tenderness not to punish. L'Estrange's Fables.

ADVI'SABLENESS. n. s. [from advisable.] The quality of being advisable, or fit; fitness; propriety.

To ADVI'SE. v. a. [aviser, Fr.]

1. To counsel: with the particle to, before the thing advised.
If you do stir abroad, go arm'd.——
——Arm'd, brother!——
——Brother, I advise you to the best.
Shakesp. King Lear.
I would advise all gentlemen, to learn merchants accounts; and not to think it a skill, that belongs not to them. Locke.
When I consider the scruples and cautions, I here lay in your way; methinks it looks, as if I advised you to something which I would have offered at, but in effect not done. Locke.

2. To give information; to inform; to make acquainted with any thing: often with the particle of, before the thing told.

You were advis'd, his flesh was capable
Of wounds and scars; and that his forward spirit
Would lift him, where most trade of danger rang'd.
Shakespeare.

Such discourse bring on,
As may advise him of his happy state;
Happiness in his power, left free to will. Par. Lost.

A posting messenger, dispatch'd from hence,
Of this fair troop advis'd their aged prince.
Dryden's Æneid.

To ADVI'SE. v. n.

1. To consult: with the particle with, before the person consulted; as, he advised with his companions.

2. To consider; to deliberate.

Advise, if this be worth
Attempting; or to sit in darkness here,
Hatching vain empires. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

ADVI'SED. participial adj. [from advise.]

1. Acting with deliberation and design; prudent; wise.

Let his travel appear, rather in his discourse, than in his apparel or gesture; and, in his discourse, let him be rather advised in his answers, than forward to tell stories. Bacon's Essays.

Th' Almighty Father, where he sits
Shrin'd in his sanctuary of heav'n secure,
Consulting on the sum of things foreseen,
This tumult (and permitted all) advis'd.
Paradise Lost, b. vi.

2. Performed with deliberation; done on purpose; acted with design.

By that, which we work naturally (as, when we breathe, sleep, and move) we set forth the glory of God, as natural agents do; albeit we have no express purpose, to make that our end; nor any advised determination, therein to follow a law. Hooker, b. i. p. 49.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight,
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I oft found both. Shakesp. Mercht. of Venice.

ADVI'SEDLY. adv. [from advised.] Soberly; heedfully; deliberately; purposely; by design; prudently.

This book, advisedly read and diligently followed but one year at home, would do more good, than three years travel abroad. Ascham.

Surprise may be made by moving things, when the party is in haste; and cannot stay, to consider advisedly of that which is moved.
Bacon, Essay xxiii.

Thou stilest second thoughts (by all allowed the best) a relapse; and accusest constancy of mischief, in what is natural, and advisedly undertaken.
Sir John Suckling.

ADVI'SEDNESS. n. s. [from advised.] Deliberation; cool and prudent procedure.

While things are in agitation, private men may modestly tender their thoughts to the consideration of those, that are in authority; to whose care it belongeth, in prescribing concerning indifferent things, to proceed with all just advisedness and moderation. Saunderson's Judgment in one View.

ADVI'SEMENT. n. s [advisement, Fr.]

1. Counsel; information.

Mote I wote,
What strange adventure do ye now pursue?
Perhaps my succour, or advisement meet,
Mote stead you much. Fairy Queen.

I will, according to your advisement, declare the evils, which seem most hurtful.
Spenser's State of Ireland.

2. It is taken likewise, in old writers, for prudence and circumspection. It is now, in both cases, antiquated.

ADVI'SER. n. s. [from advise.] The person, that advises, or gives counsel; a counsellor.

Here, free from court compliances, he walks;
And with himself, his best adviser, talks. Waller.

They never fail of their most artful and indefatigable address, to silence this impertinent adviser, whose severity awes their excesses.
Rogers's Sermons.

ADULA'TION. n. s. [adulation, Fr. adulatio, Lat.] Flattery; high compliment.

O be sick, great Greatness!
And bid thy ceremony give thee cure.
Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation? Shakesp. Hen. V.

They, who flattered him most before; mentioned him now with the greatest bitterness; without imputing the least crime to him, committed since the time of that exalted adulation; or that was not then as much known to them, as it could be now.
Clarendon.

ADULA'TOR. n. s. [adulator, Lat.] A flatterer. Dict.

A'DULATORY. adj. [adulatorius, Lat.] Flattering; full of compliments.

ADU'LT. adj. [adultus, Lat.] Grown up; past the age of infancy and weakness.

They would appear less able to approve themselves, not only to the confessor, but even to the catechist, in their adult age; than they were, in their minority; as having scarce ever thought of the principles of their religion, since they conned them to avoid correction. Decay of Piety

The earth (by these applauded schools 'tis said)
This single crop of men and women bred;
Who grown adult, so chance (it seems) enjoin'd,
Did, male and female, propagate their kind.
Blackmore.

ADU'LT. n. s. A person above the age of infancy, or grown to some degree of strength; sometimes, full grown: a word used chiefly by medicinal writers.

The depression of the cranium, without a fracture, can but seldom occur; and then it happens to children, whose bones are more pliable and soft, than those of adults. Sharpe's Surgery.

ADU'LTNESS. n. s. [from adult.] The state of being adult. See ADOLESCENCE. Dict.

To ADU'LTER. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adultero, Lat.] To commit adultery with another; a word not classical.

His chaste wife
He adulters still: his thoughts lie with a whore.
Ben Jonson.

ADU'LTERANT. n. s. [adulterans, Lat.] The person or thing, which adulterates.

To ADU'LTERATE. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adultero, Lat.]

1. To commit adultery.

But fortune (oh!)
Adulterates hourly with thine uncle John Shakesp.

2. To corrupt by some foreign admixture; to contaminate.

Common pot-ashes, bought of them, that sell it in shops; who are not so foolishly knavish, as to adulterate them with salt-petre, which is much dearer than pot-ashes. Boyle.

Could a man be composed to such an advantage of constitution, that it should not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this second nature would alter the crasis of his understanding.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica, c. xvi.

The present war has so adulterated our tongue, with strange words; that it would be impossible for one of our great-grandfathers, to know what his posterity has been doing. Spectator.

ADU'LTERATE. adj. [from To adulterate.]

1. Tainted with the guilt of adultery.

I am possess'd with an adulterate blot;
My blood is mingled, with the grime of lust;
Being strumpeted by thy contagion.
Shakespeare's Comedy of Errours.

—That incestuous, that adulterate beast.
Shakesp.

2. Corrupted, with some foreign mixture.

It does indeed differ no more, than the maker of adulterate wares does from the vender of them.
Government of the Tongue.

They will have all their gold and silver; and may keep their adulterate copper at home.
Swift's Miscellanies.

ADU'LTERATENESS. n. s. [from adulterate.] The quality or state, of being adulterate or counterfeit.

ADULTERA'TION. n. s. [from adulterate.]

1. The act of adulterating or corrupting, by foreign mixture; contamination.

To make the compound pass for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting: but if it be done avowedly, and without disguising, it may be a great saving of the richer metal.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 798.

2. The state, of being adulterated or contaminated.

Such translations are like the adulteration of the noblest wines; where something of the colour, spirit, and flavour, will remain. Felton on the Classics.

ADU'LTERER. n. s. [adulter, Lat.] The person guilty of adultery.

With what impatience must the muse behold
The wife, by her procuring husband sold;
For, tho' the law makes null th' adulterer's deed
Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed.
Dryden's Juvenal.

ADU'LTERESS. n. s. [from adulterer.] A woman that commits adultery.

The Spartan lady replied, when she was asked, What was the punishment for adultresses? There are no such things here. Govern. of the Tongue, § 3.

Helen's rich attire,
From Argos by the fam'd adult'ress brought,
With golden flow'rs and winding foliage wrought.
Dryden's Virgil.

ADU'LTERINE. n. s. [adulterine, Fr. adulterinus, Lat.] A child born of an adulteress: a term of canon law.

ADU'LTEROUS. adj. [adulter, Lat.] Guilty of adultery.

The adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off;
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That noses it against us. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

An adulterous person is tied to restitution of the injury, so far as it is reparable; and to make provision for the children, that they may not injure the legitimate. Taylor.

Think on whose faith th' adult'rous youth rely'd;
Who promis'd, who procur'd the Spartan bride.
Dryden's Æneid.

ADU'LTERY. n. s. [adulterium, Lat.] The act, of violating the bed of a married person.

All thy domestic griefs at home be left,
The wife's adult'ry, with the servant's theft;
And (the most racking thought which can intrude)
Forget false friends, and their ingratitude.
Dryden's Juvenal.

ADU'MBRANT. adj. [from adumbrate.] That, which gives a slight resemblance.

To ADU'MBRATE. v. a. [from adumbro, Lat.] To shadow out; to give a slight likeness; to exhibit a faint resemblance, like that, which shadows afford of the bodies which they represent.

Heaven is designed for our reward, as well as rescue; and therefore is adumbrated by all those positive excellencies, which can endear or recommend. Decay of Piety.

ADUMBRA'TION. n. s. [from adumbrate.]
1. The act of adumbrating, or giving a slight and imperfect representation. See ADUMBRATE.
To make some adumbration of that we mean; it is rather an impulsion or contusion of the air, that an elision or section of the same.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 187.
2. The slight and imperfect representation of a thing; a faint sketch.
The observers view but the backside of the hangings; the right one is on the other side the grave: and our knowledge is, but like those broken ends; at best, a most confused adumbration.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.
Those of the first sort have some adumbration of the rational nature, as vegetables have of the sensible. Hale's Origin.

ADUNA'TION. n. s. [from ad and unus, Lat.] The state, of being united; union; a word of little use.
When by glaciation, wood, straw, dust, and water, are supposed to be united into one lump, the cold does not cause any real union or aduna-tion; but, only hardening the aqueous parts of the liquor into ice, the other bodies (being accidentally present in that liquor) are frozen up in it, but not really united. Boyle.

ADU'NCITY. n. s. [aduncitas, Lat.] Crookedness; flexure inwards; hookedness.
There can be no question, but the aduncity of the pounces and beaks of the hawks, is the cause of the great and habitual immorality of those animals. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

ADU'NQUE. adj. [aduncus, Lat.] Crooked; bending inwards; hooked.
The birds, that are speakers, are parrots, pies, jays, daws, and ravens; of which, parrots have an adunque bill, but the rest not.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 238.

A'DVOCACY. n. s. [from advocate.] The act of pleading; vindication; defence; apology; a word in little use.
If any there are, who are of opinion, that there are no antipodes, or that the stars do fall; they shall not want herein the applause or advocacy of Satan. Brown's Vulg. Errours, b. i.

A'DVOCATE. n. s. [advocatus, Lat.]
1. He that pleads the cause of another, in a court of judicature.
An advocate (in the general import of the word) is that person, who has the pleading and management of a judicial cause. In a strict way of speaking, only that person is stiled advocate, who is the patron of the cause; and is often, in Latin, termed togatus, and in English, a person of the long robe.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
Learn what thou ow'st thy country and thy friend;
What's requisite to spare, and what to spend:
Learn this; and after, envy not the store
Of the greas'd advocate, that grinds the poor.
Dryden, Persius.
2. He, that pleads any cause, in whatever manner, as a controvertist or vindicator.
If she dares trust me with her little babe,
I'll shew 't the king; and undertake to be
Her advocate to the loudest. Shakesp.
Of the several forms of government, that have been or are in the world, that cause seems commonly the better, that has the better advocate, or is advantaged by fresher experience
Temple's Miscellanies.
3. It is used with the particle for, before the person or thing, in whose favour the plea is offered.
Foes to all living worth, except your own;
And advocates, for folly dead and gone.
Pope's Epistles.
4. In the scriptural and sacred sense, it stands for one of the offices of our Redeemer.
Me, his advocate
And propitiation; all his works on me,
Good or not good, ingraft. Milton's Par. Lost.

ADVOCA'TION. n. s. [from advocate.] The office, or act of pleading; plea; apology.
My advocation is not now in tune:
My lord is not my lord; nor should I know him,
Were he in favour, as in humour, alter'd.
Shakespeare's Othello.

ADVOLA'TION. n. s. [advolo, advolatum, Lat.] The act, of flying to something.
Dict.

ADVOLU'TION. n. s. [advolutio, Lat.] The act, of rolling to something.

ADVO'UTRY. n. s. [avoutrie, Fr.] Adultery.
He was the most perfidious man upon the earth; and he had made a marriage compounded between an advoutry and a rape. Bacon's Henry VII.

ADVOWE'E. n. s. He that has the right of advowson. See ADVOWSON.

ADVO'WSON, or ADVO'WZEN. n. s. [In common law.] A right, to present to a benefice; and signifies as much, as, Jus Patronatûs. In the common law, it is so termed; because they, that originally obtained the right of presenting to any church, were great benefactors thereto; and are therefore termed sometimes Patroni, sometimes Advocati.
Cowell.

To ADU'RE. v. n. [aduro, Lat.] To burn up: not in use.
Such a degree of heat, which doth neither melt nor scorch, doth mellow, and not adure.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 319.

ADU'ST. adj. [adustus, Lat.]
1. Burnt up; hot, as with fire; scorched.
By this means, the virtual heat of the water will enter; and such a heat, as will not make the body adust, or fragile. Bacon.
Which with torrid heat,
And vapours (as the Libyan air) adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milt. P. L.
2. It is generally now applied, in a medicinal or philosophical sense, to the complexion and humours of the body.
Such humours are adust, as by long heat become of a hot and fiery nature; as choler, and the like. Quincy.
To ease the soul of one oppressive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a state.
The same adust complexion has impell'd
Charles to the convent, Philip to the field. Pope.

ADU'STED. adj. [See ADUST.]
1. Burnt; scorched; dried with fire.
Sulphurous and nitrous foam
They found, they mingled; and, with subtle art
Concocted and adusted, they reduced
To blackest grain, and into store convey'd.
Paradise Lost.
2. Hot, as the complexion.
They are but the fruits of adusted choler, and the evaporations of a vindictive spirit. Howell.

ADU'STIBLE. adj. [from adust.] That, which may be adusted or burnt up.
Dict.

ADU'STION. n. s. [from adust.] The act, of burning up or drying, as by fire.
This is ordinarily a consequent of a burning colliquative fever; the softer parts being melted away, the heat, continuing its adustion upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a marcid fever.
Harvey on Consumptions.

ADZ. n. s. See ADDICE.

AE, or Æ. A dipnthong, of very frequent use in the Latin language; which seems not, properly to have any place in the English; since the æ of the Saxons has been long out of use, being changed to e simple; to which, in words frequently occuring, the æ of the Romans is (in the same manner) altered; as in equator, equinoctial, and even in Eneas.

Æ'GLOGUE. n. s. [written instead of eclogue, from a mistaken etymology.] A pastoral; a dialogue in verse, between goat-herds.
Which moved him rather, in æglogues otherwise to write; doubting perhaps his ability, which he little needed; or minding to furnish our tongue with this kind, wherein it faulteth. Spenser's Past.

Æ'GILOPS. n. s. [αἴγιλωψ, Gr. signifying goat-eyed, the goat being subject to this ailment] A tumour or swelling in the great corner of the eye, by the root of the nose, either with or without an inflammation: also a plant so called, for its supposed virtues against such a distemper. Quincy.
Ægilops is a tubercle, in the inner canthus of the eye. Wiseman's Surgery.

ÆGYPTI'ACUM. n. s. An ointment, consisting only of honey, verdigrease, and vinegar. Quincy.

ÆL, or EAL, or AL. [in compound names, as πᾶν in the Greek compounds] signifies all, or altogether. So Ælwin is a complete conqueror. Albert, all, illustrious: Aldred, altogether reverend: Alfred, altogether peaceful. To these Pammachius, Pancratius, Pamphilius, &c. do in some measure answer.
Gibson's Camden.

ÆLF. [which, according to various dialects, is pronounced ulf, welph, hulph, hilp, helfe; and, at this day, helpe] implies assistance. So Ælfwin is victorious; and Ælfwold, an auxiliary governor; Ælfgifa, a lender of assistance: with which Boetius, Symmachus, Epicurus, &c. bear a plain analogy.
Gibson's Camden.

ÆNI'GMA. See ENIGMA.

AE'RIAL. adj. [aërius, Lat.]
1. Belonging to the air, as consisting of it.
The thunder, when to roll
With terrour thr'o the dark aerial hall. Par. Lost.
From all, that can with fins or feathers fly,
Thro' the aerial or the wat'ry sky. Prior.
I gathered the thickness of the air, or aerial interval, of the glasses at that ring. Newton's Optics.
Vegetables abound more with aerial particles, than animal substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
2. Produced by the air.
The gifts of heav'n my following song pursues;
Aerial honey, and ambrosial dews. Dry. Vir. Geor.
3. Inhabiting the air.
Where those immortal shapes
Of bright aerial spirits live inspher'd,
In regions mild of calm and serene air. Par. Reg.
Aerial animals may be subdivided into birds and flies. Locke.
4. Placed in the air.
Here subterranean works and cities see;
There towns aerial, on the waving tree.
Pope's Essay on Man.
5. High; elevated in situation, and therefore in the air.

A spacious city stood, with firmest walls
Sure mounded, and with numerous turrets crown'd.
Aerial spires and citadels, the seat
Of kings and heroes resolute in war. Philips.

A'ERIE. n. s. [airie, Fr.] The proper word (in hawks, and other birds of prey) for that, which we generally call a nest in other birds. Cowell.

AERO'SCOPY. n s. [ἀὴρ and σκόπεω, Gr.] The observation of the air. Dict.

ÆTHIOPS-MI'NERAL. n. s. A medicine, so called from its dark colour; prepared of quicksilver and sulphur, ground together in a marble mortar to a black powder. Such, as have used it most, think its virtues not very great. Quincy.

ÆTI'TES. n. s. [ἀετὸς, an eagle.] Eagle stone. It is about the bigness of a chestnut, and hollow; with somewhat in it, that rattles upon shaking. Quincy.

AFA'R. adv. [from a for at, and far.] See FAR.

1. At a great distance.

So shaken, as we are, so wan with care;
Find we a time for frighted peace, to pant,
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils,
To be commenc'd in strouds afar remote?
Shakesp. Henry IV.

We hear better, when we hold our breath than contrary; insomuch as, in listening to attain a sound afar off, men hold their breath.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 284.

2. To or from a great distance.

Hector hastened to relieve his body.
Dismiss'd his burnish'd helm that shone afar,
The pride of warriours, and the pomp of war.
Dryden.

3. From afar; from a distant place.

The rough Vulturnus, furious in its course,
With rapid streams divides the fruitful grounds,
And from afar in hollow murmur sounds.
Addison on Italy.

4. Afar off; remotely distant.

Much suspecting his secret ends, he entertained a treaty of peace with France, but secretly and afar off, and to be governed as occasions should vary. Sir John Hayward.

AFE'ARD. participial adj. [from to fear, for to fright, with a redundant.]

1. Frighted; terrified; afraid.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard;
And from his wide-devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almost made afeard. F. Qu.

But tell me, Hal, art thou not horribly afeard?
Thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again.
Shakespeare, Henry IV.

Till he cherish too much beard,
And make Love or me afeard.
Ben Jonson's Underwoods.

2. It has the particle of, before the object of fear.

Fear is described by Spenser to ride in armour, at the clashing whereof he looks afeard of himself.
Peacham.

It is now obsolete; the last author, whom I found using it, is Sedley.

A'FER. n. s. [Lat.] The south-west wind.

With adverse blast upturns them from the south,
Notus and Afer, black with thund'rous clouds.
Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

Hearing of her beauty and her wit,
Her affability and bashful modesty,
Her wond'rous qualities, and mild behaviour.
Shakesp.

He was of a most flowing courtesy and affability to all men; and so desirous to oblige them, that he did not enough consider the value of the obligation, or the merit of the person. Clarendon.

All instances of charity, sweetness of conversation, affability, admonition, all significations of tenderness, care, and watchfulness, must be expressed towards children. Taylor.

It is impossible for a publick minister, to be so open and easy to all his old friends, as he was in his private condition: but this may be helped out, by an affability of address. L'Estrange.

A'FFABLE. adj. [affable, Fr. affabilis, Lat.]

1. Easy of manners; accostable; courteous; complaisant. It is used of superiours.

He was affable, and both well and fair spoken; and would use strange sweetness and blandishment of words, where he desired to affect or persuade any thing, that he took to heart. Bacon.

Her father is
An affable and courteous gentleman.
Shakesp. Tam. Shrew.

Gentle to me and affable hath been
Thy condescension, and shall be honour'd ever
With grateful memory. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

I was not born for courts or great affairs;
I pay my debts, believe, and say my prayers. Pope.

A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one, in ranging, disposing, and managing all human affairs Watts's Logick

What St. John's skill in state affairs,
What Ormond's valour, Oxford's cares,
To aid their sinking country lent;
Was all destroy'd, by one event. Swift.

To AFFE'AR. v. n. [from affier, Fr.] To confirm; to give sanction to; to establish: an old term of law.

Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure!
For goodness dares not check thee:
His title is affear'd. Shakesp. Macb.

AFFE'CT. n. s. [from the verb affect.]

1. Affection; passion; sensation.

It seemeth that, as the feet have a sympathy with the head, so the wrists have a sympathy with the heart; we see, the affects and passions of the heart and spirits are notably disclosed by the pulse. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 97.

2. Quality; circumstance.

I find it difficult to make out one single ulcer, as authors describe it; without other symptoms or affects; joined to it. Wiseman.

This is only the antiquated word, for affection.

To AFFE'CT. v. a. [affecter, Fr. affecto, affectum, Lat.]

1. To act upon; to produce effects, in any other thing.

The sun
Had first his precept, so to move, so shine;
As might affect the earth with cold and heat,
Scarce tolerable. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

The generality of men are wholly governed by names, in matters of good and evil; so far as these qualities relate to, and affect, the actions of men. South's Sermons.

Yet even those two particles, do reciprocally affect each other, with the same force and vigour; as they would do, at the same distance, in any other situation imaginable. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To move the passions.

As a thinking man cannot but be very much affected, with the idea of his appearing in the presence of that Being, whom none can see and live: he must be much more affected, when he considers: that this Being, whom he appears before, will examine the actions of his life, and reward or punish him accordingly.
Addison, Spectator, No. 513.

3. To aim at; to endeavour after: spoken of persons.

Artides broke
His silence next, but ponder'd ere he spoke:
Wise are thy words and gen'ral I would obey,
But this proud man affects imperial sway.
Dryden's Iliad.

4. To tend to; to endeavour after; spoken of things.

The drops of every fluid affect a round figure, by the mutual attraction of their parts; as the globe of the earth and sea affects a round figure, by the mutual attraction of its parts by gravity.
Newton's Optics.

5. To be fond of; to be pleased with; to love; to regard with fondness.

That little, which some of the heathen did chance to hear, concerning such matter as the sacred scripture plentifully containeth, they did in wonderful sort affect. Hooker, b. i

There is your crown;
And he that wears the crown immortally,
Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
Than as your honour, and as your renown;
Let me no more from this obedience rise.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

Think not, that wars we love, and strife affect;
Or that we hate sweet peace. Fairfax, b. ii.

None but a woman, could a man direct,
To tell us women, what we most affect.
Dryd. Wife of Bath.

6. To make a shew of something; to study the appearance of any thing; with some degree of hypocrisy.

Another nymph, amongst the many fair,
Before the rest affected still to stand;
And watch'd my eye, preventing my command.
Prior.

These often carry the humour so far, till their affected coldness and indifference quite kills all the fondness of a lover. Addison, Spectator, No. 171.

Coquet and coy at once her air,
Both studied, though both seem neglected;
Careless she is with artful care,
Affecting to seem unaffected. Congreve.

The conscious husband, whom like symptoms seize,
Charges on her the guilt of their disease;
Affecting fury, acts a madman's part;
He'll rip the fatal secret from her heart. Granville.

7. To imitate in an unnatural and constrained manner.

Spenser, in affecting the ancients, writ no language; yet I would have him read for his matter, but as Virgil read Ennius. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

8. To convict of some crime; to attaint with guilt; a phrase, merely juridical.

By the civil law, if a dowry with a wife be promised and not paid, the husband is not obliged to allow her alimony: but, if her parents shall become insolvent by some misfortune, he shall have alimony; unless you can affect them with fraud, in promising, what they knew they were not able to perform. Ayliffe's Parergon.

AFFECTA'TION. n. s. [affectatio, Lat.]

1. Fondness; high degree of liking; commonly with some degree of culpability.

In things of their own nature indifferent, if either councils or particular men have at any time, with sound judgment, misliked conformity between the church of God and infidels; the cause thereof hath been somewhat else, than only affectation of dissimilitude. Hooker, b. iv. § 7.

2. An artificial show; an elaborate appearance; a false pretence.

It has been (from age to age) an affectation, to love the pleasure of solitude, among those, who cannot possibly be supposed qualified for passing life in that manner. Spectator, No. 264.

AFFE'CTED. participial adj. [from affect.]

1. Moved; touched with affection; internally disposed or inclined.

No marvel then, if he were ill affected.
Shakespeare, King Lear

The model they seemed affected to, in their directory, was not like to any of the foreign reformed churches now in the world. Clarendon.

2. Studied with over-much care, or with hypocritical appearance.

These antick, lisping, affected phantasies, these new tuners of accents. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

3. In a personal sense, full of affectation; as, an affected lady.

AFFE'CTEDLY. adv. [from affected.]

1. In an affected manner; hypocritically; with more appearance than reality.

Perhaps they are affectedly ignorant: they are so willing, it should be true, that they have not attempted to examine it.
Government of the Tongue, § 5

Some indeed have been so affectedly vain, as to counterfeit immortality; and have stolen their death, in hopes to be esteemed immortal.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b vii. c. 10

By talking so familiarly of one hundred and ten thousand pounds, by a tax upon a few commodities, it is plain, you are either naturally or affectedly ignorant of our condition. Swift.

2. Studiously; with laboured intention.

Some mispersuasions, concerning the divine attributes, tend to the corrupting men's manners; as if they were designed, and affectedly chosen, for that purpose. Decay of Piety.

AFFE'CTEDNESS. n. s. [from affected.] The quality, of being affected, or of making false appearances.

AFFE'CTION. n. s. [affection, Fr. affectio, Lat.]

1. The state, of being affected by any cause or agent. This general sense is little in use.

Some men there are, love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat;
And others, when the bag-pipe sings i' th' nose,
Cannot contain their urine for affection.
Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

2. Passion of any kind.

Then gan the palmer thus: most wretched man,
That to affections does the bridle lend;
In their beginning they are weak and wan,
But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end.
Fairy Queen.

Impute it to my late solitary life, which is prone to affections. Sidney, b. i.

Affections (as joy, grief, fear, and anger, with such like) being (as it were) the sundry fashions and forms of appetite, can neither rise at the conceit of a thing indifferent, nor yet choose but rise at the sight of some things. Hooker, b. i.

To speak truth of Cæsar;
I have not known, when his affections sway'd,
More than his reason. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Zeal ought to be composed of the highest degrees of pious affections; of which some are milder and gentler, some sharper and more vehement.
Sprat's Sermons.

I can present nothing beyond this, to your affections; to excite your love and desire. Tillotson.

3. Love; kindness; good will to some persons: often with to or towards, before the person.

I have acquainted you,
With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
Who mutually hath answer'd my affection.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

My king is tangled in affection, to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.
Shakesp.

What warmth is there in your affections, towards any of these princely suitors?
Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

Makes his interest depend upon mutual affection and good correspondence with others.
Collier on General Kindness.

Nor at first sight, like most, admires the fair:
For you he lives; and you alone shall share
His last affection as his early care. Pope.

4. Good will to any object; zeal; passionate regard.

I have reason to distrust mine own judgment; as that, which may be overborn by my zeal and affection to this cause. Bacon.

Set your affection upon my words; desire them, and ye shall be instructed. Wisdom, vi. 11

His integrity to the king was without blemish; and his affection to the church so notorious, that he never deserted it. Clarendon

All the precepts of Christianity command us, to moderate our passions, to temper our affections towards all things below. Temple.

Let not the mind of a student be under the influence of warm affection to things of sense, when he comes to the search of truth.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

5. State of the mind, in general.

There grows,
In my most ill compos'd affection, such
A stanchless avarice; that were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands.
Shakesp. Macbeth

The man, that hath no musick in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils;
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections dark as Erebus:
Let no such man be trusted.
Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

6. Quality; property.

The certainty and accurateness, which is attributed to what mathematicians deliver, must be restrained to what they teach, concerning those purely mathematical disciplines, arithmetick and geometry; where the affections of quantity are abstractedly considered. Boyle.

The mouth, being necessary to conduct the voice to the shape of its cavity, necessarily gives the voice some particular affection of sound in its passage, before it come to the lips.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

God may have joined immaterial souls to other kinds of bodies, and in other laws of union; and, from those different laws of union, there will arise quite different affections, and natures, and species of the compound beings. Bentley's Sermons

7. State of the body, as acted upon by any cause.

It seemed to me a venereal gonorrhœa; and others thought, it arose from some scorbutical affection. Wiseman's Surgery.

8. Lively representation in painting.

Affection is the lively representment of any passion whatsoever; as if the figures stood, not upon a cloth or board; but as if they were acting upon a stage. Wotton's Architecture.

9. It is used by Shakespeare sometimes, for affectation.

There was nothing in it, that could indict the author of affection. Shakesp.

AFFE'CTIONATE. adj. [affectionné, Fr. from affection.]

1. Full of affection; strongly moved; warm; zealous.

In their love of God, and desire to please him, men can never be too affectionate; and it is as true, that, in their hatred of sin, men may be sometimes too passionate. Sprat's Sermons.

2. Strongly inclined to; disposed to; with the particle to.

As for the parliament, it presently took fire; being affectionate of old, to the war of France.
Bacon's Henry VIII.

3. Fond; tender.

H found me sitting, beholding this picture, I know not with how affectionate countenance; but, I am sure, with a most affectionate mind. Sidney.

Away they fly,
Affectionate; and, undesiring, bear
The most delicious morsel to their young.
Thomson's Spring.

4. Benevolent; tender.

When we reflect, on all this affectionate care of Providence for our happiness; with what wonder must we observe the little effect it has on men!
Roger's Sermons.

AFFE'CTIONATELY. adv. [from affectionate.] In an affectionate manner; fondly; tenderly; benevolently.

AFFE'CTIONATENESS. n. s. [from affectionate.] The quality or state, of being affectionate; fondness; tenderness; good will; benevolence.

AFFIANCE. n. s. [affiance, from affier, Fr.]

1. A marriage contract.

At last such grace I found, and means I wrought,
That I that lady to my spouse had won;
Accord of friends, consent of parents sought,
Affiance made, my happiness begun.
Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. Trust, in general; confidence; secure reliance.

The duke is virtuous, mild; and too well given,
To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.—
—Ah! what's more dangerous, than this fond affiance?
Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrowed.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

3. Trust in the divine promises and protection. To this sense it is now almost confined.

Religion receives man, into a covenant of grace; where there is pardon reached out, to all truly penitent sinners, and assistance promised, and engaged, and bestowed, upon very easy conditions; viz. humility, prayer, and affiance in him.
Hammond's Fundamentals.

There can be no surer way to success, than by disclaiming all confidence in ourselves, and referring the events of things to God with an implicit affiance. Atterbury's Sermons.

To AFFI'ANCE. v. a. [from the noun affiance.]

1. To betroth; to bind any one by promise, to marriage.

To me (sad maid, or rather widow sad)
He was affianced, long time before;
And sacred pledges he both gave and had;
False errant knight, infamous and foresworn.
Fairy Queen.

Her should Angelo have married, was affianced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed; between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, his brother was wrecked, having in that vessel the dowry of his sister.
Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

2. To give confidence.

Stranger! whoe'er thou art, securely rest
Affiance'd in my faith, a friendly guest. Pope's Odys.

The art of painting hath wonderful affinity with that of poetry. Dryd Dufresnoy, Pref.

Man is more distinguished, by devotion than by reason; as several brute creatures discover something, like reason; though they betray not any thing, that bears the least affinity to devotion.
Addison Spect. No. 201.

To AFFI'RM. v. n. [affirmo, Lat.] To declare; to tell confidently: opposed to the word deny.

Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the land Salike lies in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elve.
Shakesp. Henry V.

To AFFI'RM. v. a.

1. To declare positively; as, to affirm a fact.

2. To ratify or approve a former law, or judgment: opposed to reverse or repeal.

The house of peers hath a power of judicature in some cases, properly to examine, and then to affirm; or, if there be cause, to reverse the judgments, which have been given in the court of king's bench. Bacon's Advice to Sir G. Villiers.

In this sense we say, to affirm the truth.

AFFI'RMABLE. adj. [from affirm.] That, which may be affirmed.

Those attributes and conceptions, that were applicable and affirmable of him when present, are now affirmable and applicable to him though past. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

AFFI'RMANCE. n. s. [from affirm.] Confirmation: opposed to repeal.

This statute did but restore an ancient statute, which was itself also made but in affirmance of the common law. Bacon.

AFFI'RMANT. n. s. [from affirm.] The person, that affirms; a declarer. Dict.

AFFIRMA'TION. n. s. [affirmatio, Lat.]

1. The act of affirming or declaring: opposed to negation or denial.

This gentleman vouches, upon warrant of bloody affirmation, his to be more virtuous, and less attemptable, than any of our ladies.
Shakesp. Cymbeline.

2. The position affirmed.

That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation, whereon his despair is founded; and 'one way of removing this dismal apprehension is, to convince him, that Christ's death (if he perform the condition required) shall certainly belong to him. Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Confirmation; opposed to repeal.

The learned in the laws of our land observe, that our statutes sometimes are only the affirmation or ratification of that, which by common law was held before. Hooker

AFFI'RMATIVE. adj [from affirm.]

1. That, which affirms; opposed to negative: in which sense, we use the affirmative absolutely; that is, the affirmative position.

For the affirmative, we are now to answer such proofs of theirs, as have been before alleged.
Hooker.

Whether there are such beings or not, 'tis sufficient for my purpose, that many have believed the affirmative. Dryden.

2. That, which can or may be affirmed: a sense, used chiefly in science.

As in algebra, where affirmative quantities vanish or cease, there negative ones begin; so in mechanicks, where attraction ceases, there a repulsive virtue ought to succeed. Newt. Opt.

3. Applied to persons; he, who has the habit of affirming with vehemence; positive; dogmatical.

Be not confident and affirmative, in an uncertain matter; but report things modestly and temperately, according to the degree of that persuasion; which is, or ought to be, begotten by the efficacy of the auth rity, or the reason inducing thee. Taylor

AFFI'RMATIVELY. adv. [from affirmative.] In an affirmative manner; on the positive side; not negatively.

The reason of man hath no such restraint, concluding not only affirmatively, but negatively, not only affirming, there is no magnitude beyond the last heavens, but also denying, there is any vacuity within them. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

AFFI'RMER. n. s. [from affirm.] The person, that affirms.

If, by the word virtue, the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man; and the denier, by the word virtue, means only courage, or (at most) our duty towards our neighbour, without including (in the idea of it) the duty which we owe to God. Watts's Logick.

To AFFI'X. v. a. [affigo, affixum, Lat.]

1. To unite to the end, or à posteriori; to subjoin.

He, that has settled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to discern their differences one from another.
Locke

If men constantly affixed applause and disgrace, where they ought; the principle of shame would have a very good influence, on publick conduct; though, on secret villanies, it lays no restraint.
Roger's Sermons.

2. To connect consequentially.

The doctrine of irresistibility of grace, in working whatsoever it works; if it be acknowledged, there is nothing to be affixt to gratitude.
Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Simply, to fasten or fix. Obsolete.

Her modest eyes, abashed to behold
So many gazers as on her do stare,
Upon the lowly ground affixed are. Spenser.

AFFI'X. n. s. [affixum, Lat.] A term of grammar. Something, united to the end of a word.

In the Hebrew language, the noun has its affixa, to denote the pronouns possessive or relative.
Clarke's Latin Grammar.

AFFI'XION. n. s. [from affix.]

1. The act of affixing.

2. The state of being affixed. Dict.

AFFLA'TION. n. s. [afflo, afflatum, Lat.] The act of breathing upon any thing. Dict.

AFFLA'TUS. n. s. [Lat.] Communication of the power of prophecy.

The poet, writing against his genius, will be like a prophet without his afflatus. Spence on the Odyssey.

To AFFLI'CT. v. a. [afflicto, afflictum, Lat.]

1. To put to pain; to grieve; to torment.

It teacheth us, how God thought fit to plague and afflict them: it doth not appoint, in what form and manner we ought to punish the sin of idolatry in others. Hooker, b. v. § 17.

O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me! The lights burn blue.—Is it not dead midnight? Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh. Shakesp. Rich. III.

Give not over thy mind to heaviness, and afflict not thyself in thine own counsel. Eccles. xxx. 21.

A father, afflicted with untimely mourning, when he hath made an image of his child soon taken away, now honoured him as a God, which was then a dead man; and delivered, to those that were under him, ceremonies and sacrifices. Wisdom.

A melancholy tear afflicts my eye;
And my heart labours with a sudden sigh. Prior.

2. The passive (to be afflicted) has often at, before the causal noun; by is likewise proper.

The mother was so afflicted, at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son; that she died for grief of it. Addison, Spect.

AFFLI'CTEDNESS. n. s. [from afflicted.] The state of affliction, or of being afflicted; sorrowfulness; grief.

AFFLI'CTER. n. s. [from afflict.] The person that afflicts.

AFFLI'CTION. n. s. [afflictio, Lat.]

1. The cause of pain or sorrow; calamity.

To the flesh (as the apostle himself granteth) all affliction is naturally grievous; therefore nature, which causeth fear, teacheth to pray against all adversity. Hooker, b. v. § 48.

We'll bring you to one, that you have cozened of money; I think, to repay that money, will be a biting affliction. Shakespeare.

2. The state of sorrowfulness; misery: opposed to joy or prosperity.

Besides you know,
Prosperity's the very bond of love;
Whose fresh complexion, and whose heart together,
Affliction alters. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Where shall we find the man, that bears affliction,
Great and majestic in his griefs, like Cato? Addison's Cato.

Some virtues are only seen in affliction, and some in prosperity. Addison, Spectator, No. 257.

AFFLI'CTIVE. adj. [from afflict.] That, which causes affliction; painful; tormenting.

They found martyrdom a duty; dressed up indeed with all, that was terrible and afflictive to human nature; yet, not at all the less a duty. South.

Nor can they find,
Where to retire themselves, or where appease
Th' afflictive keen desire of food; expos'd
To winds and storms, and jaws of savage death. Philips.

Restless Proserpine,—
—On the spacious land and liquid main,
Spreads slow disease, and darts afflictive pain. Prior.

A'FFLUENCE. n. s. [affluence, Fr. affluentia, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to any place; concourse. It is almost always used figuratively.

I shall not relate the affluence of young nobles, from hence into Spain; after the voice, of our prince being there, had been noised. Wotton.

2. Exuberance of riches; stream of wealth; plenty.

Those degrees of fortune, which give fulness and affluence to one station, may be want and penury in another. Rogers.

Let joy or ease, let affluence or content,
And the gay conscience of a life well spent,
Calm ev'ry thought, inspirit ev'ry grace. Pope.

A'FFLUENCY. n. s. The same, with affluence.

A'FFLUENT. adj. [affluent, Fr. affluens, Lat.]

1. Flowing to any part.

These parts are no more, than foundation piles of the ensuing body; which are afterwards to be increased and raised to a greater bulk, by the affluent blood, that is transmitted out of the mother's body. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. Abundant; exuberant; wealthy.

I see thee, Lord and end of my desire,
Loaded and blest with all the affluent store,
Which human vows at smoking shrines implore. Prior

A'FFLUENTNESS. n. s. [from affluent.] The quality of being affluent. Dict.

A'FFLUX. n. s. [afluxus, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to some place; affluence.

2. That, which flows to another place.

The cause hereof cannot be a supply by procreations; ergo, it must be, by new affluxes to London out of the country. Graunt.

The infant grows bigger out of the womb, by agglutinating one afflux of blood to another. Harvey on Consumptions.

An animal, that must lie still, receives the afflux of colder or warmer, clean or foul water, as it happens to come to it. Locke.

AFFLU'XION. n. s. [affluxio, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to a particular place.

2. That, which flows from one place to another.

An inflammation; either simple, consisting of an hot and sanguineous affluxion; or else denominable from other humours, according unto the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To AFFO'RD. v. a. [affourrer, affourrager, Fr.]

1. To yield or produce; as, the soil affords grain; the trees afford fruits. This seems to be the primitive signification.

2. To grant, or confer any thing; generally in a good sense, and sometimes in a bad, but less properly.

So soon, as Maurmon there arriv'd, the door
To him did open, and afforded way. Fairy Queen.

This is the consolation of all good men, unto whom his ubiquity affordeth continual comfort and security; and this is the affliction of hell, to whom it affordeth despair and remediless calamity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. To be able to sell. It is used always, with reference to some certain price; as, I can afford this for less than the other.

They fill their magazines, in times of the greatest plenty; that so they may afford cheaper, and increase the public revenue, at a small expence of its members. Addison on Italy.

4. To be able to bear expences; as, traders can afford more finery in peace than war.

The same errours run through all families; where there is wealth enough to afford, that their sons may be good for nothing. Swift on Modern Education.

To AFFO'REST. v. a. [afforestare, Lat.] To turn ground into forest.

It appeareth, by Charta de Foresta, that he afforested many woods and wastes, to the grievance of the subject, which by that law were disafforested. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

AFFORESTA'TION. n. s. [from afforest.]

The charter de Foresta was, to reform the encroachments made in the time of Richard I. and Henry II.; who had made new afforestations, and much extended the rigour of the forest laws. Hale's Common Law of England.

To AFFRAN'CHISE. v. a. [affrancher, Fr.] To make free.

To AFFRA'Y. v. a. [effrayer, or effriger, Fr.] which Menage derives from fragor; perhaps it comes from frigus.] To fright; to terrify; to strike with fear This word is not now in use

The same to wight he never would disclose;
But when as monsters huge he would dismay,
Or daunt unequal armies of his foes,
Or when the flying heavens he would affray. Fairy Queen.

AFFRA'Y, or AFFRA'YMENT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A tumultuous assault of one or more persons upon others; a law term. A battle: in this sense it is written fray.

2. Tumult; confusion: out of use.

Let the night be calm and quietsome,
Without tempestuous storms or sad affray. Spenser.

AFFRI'CTION. n. s. [affrictio, Lat.] The act of rubbing one thing upon another.

I have divers times observed, in wearing silver-hilted swords, that, if they rubbed upon my cloaths, if they were of a light-coloured cloth, the affriction would quickly blacken them; and, congruously hereunto, I have found pens blacked almost all over, when I had a while carried them about me in a silver case. Boyle.

To AFFRI'GHT. v. a. [See FRIGHT.]

1. To affect with fear; to terrify. It generally implies a sudden impression of fear.

Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death. Shakesp, Henry VI.

Godlike his courage seem'd; whom nor delight
Could soften, nor the face of death affright. Waller.

He, when his country (threat'n'd with alarm)
Requires his courage and his conq'ring arm,
Shall more than once the Punic bands affright. Dryden's Æneid.

2. It is used in the passive, sometimes with at, before the thing feared.

Thou shalt not be affrighted at them; for the Lord thy God is among you. Deut. vii. 21.

3. Sometimes with the particle with, before the thing feared.

As one affright
With hellish fiends, or furies mad uproar,
He then uprose. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5.

AFFRI'GHT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Terrour; fear. This word is chiefly poetical.

As the moon, cloathed with cloudy night,
Does shew to him, that walks in fear and sad affright. Fairy Queen.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close
In streets, but here and there a straggling house;
Yet still he was at hand, without request,
To serve the sick, to succour the distress'd;
Tempting, on foot, alone, without affright,
The dangers of a dark tempestuous night. Dryden's Fables.

2. The cause of fear; a terrible object; dreadful appearance.

I see the gods
Upbraid our suff'rings, and would humble them,
By sending these affrights, while we are here;
That we might laugh, at their ridiculous fear.
B. Jons. Cataline.

The war at hand appears with more affright,
And rises ev'ry moment to the sight. Dryd. Æneid.

AFFRI'GHTFUL. adj. [from affright.] Full of affright or terrour; terrible; dreadful.

There is an absence of all, that is destructive or affrightful to human nature. Decay of Piety.

AFFRI'GHTMENT. n. s. [from affright].

1. The impression of fear; terrour.

She awaked, with the affrightment of a dream. Wotton

Passionate words or blows, from the tutor, fill the child's mind with terrour and affrightment; which immediately takes it wholly up, and leaves no room for other impression. Locke.

2. The state of fearfulness.

Whether those, that (under any anguish of mind) return to affrightments or doubtings, have not been hypocrites. Hammond.

To AFFRO'NT. v. a. [affronter, Fr. that is, ad frontem stare; ad frontem contumeliam allidere, to insult a man to his face.

1. To meet face to face; to encounter. This seems the genuine and original sense of the word; which was formerly indifferent to good or ill.

We have closely sent for Hamlet hither;
That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront Ophelia. Shakesp. Hamlet.

The seditious, the next day, affronted the king's forces at the entrance of a highway; whom when they found both ready and resolute to fight, they desired enterparlance. Sir John Hayward.

2. To meet in an hostile manner, front to front.

His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd,
And with their darkness durst affront his light.
Paradise Lost.

3. To offer an open insult; to offend avowedly. With respect to this sense, it is observed by Cervantes; that, 'if 'a man strike another on the back, and 'then run away; the person so struck is 'injured, but not affronted; an affront 'always implying a justification of the 'act.'

Did not this fatal war affront thy coast?
Yet sattest thou an idle looker-on. Fairfax, i. 51.

But harm precedes not sin; only our foe,
Tempting, affronts us, with his foul esteem
Of our integrity. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

I would learn the cause, why Torrismond
(Within my palace walls, within my hearing,
Almost within my sight) affronts a prince,
Who shortly shall command him. Dry. Span. Friar.

This brings to mind Faustina's fondness for the gladiator, and is interpreted as satire: but how can one imagine, that the Fathers would have dared to affront the wife of Aurelius? Addison.

AFFRO'NT. n. s. [from the verb affront.]

1. Open opposition; encounter; a sense not frequent, though regularly deducible from the derivation.

Fearless of danger, like a petty god
I walk'd about admir'd of all, and dreaded,
On hostile ground, none daring my affront.
Samson Agonistes.

2. Insult, offered to the face; contemptuous or rude treatment; contumely.

He would often maintain Plantianus, in doing affronts to his son. Bacon's Essays.

You've done enough, for you design'd my chains:
The grace is vanished; but the affront remains.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

He, that is found reasonable in one thing, is concluded to be so in all; and, to think or say otherwise, is thought so unjust an affront, and so senseless a censure, that nobody ventures to do it. Locke.

There is nothing, which we receive with so much reluctance, as advice: we look upon the man, who gives it us, as offering an affront to our understanding, and treating us like children or ideots. Addison, Spectator, No. 512.

3. Outrage; act of contempt, in a more general sense.

Oft have they violated
The temple, oft the law, with foul affronts.
Abominations rather. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

4. Disgrace; shame. This sense is rather peculiar to the Scottish dialect.

Antonius attacked the pirates of Crete; and, by his too great presumption, was defeated; upon the sense of which affront, he died with grief. Arbuthnot on Coins.

AFFRO'NTER. n. s. [from affront.] The person that affronts.

AFFRO'NTING. participial adj. [from affront.] That, which has the quality of affronting; contumelious.

Among words, which signify the same principal ideas, some are clean and decent, others unclean; some are kind, others are affronting and reproachful; because of the secondary idea, which custom has affixed to them. Watts's Logick.

To AFFU'SE. v. a. [affundo, affusum, Lat.] To pour one thing upon another.

I poured acid liquors, to try if they contained any volatile salt or spirit; which would probably have discovered itself, by making an ebullition with the affused liquor. Boyle.

AFFU'SION. n. s. [affusio, Lat.] The act of pouring one thing upon another.

Upon the affusion of a tincture of galls, it immediately became as black as ink. Grew's Museum.

To AFFY'. v. a. [affier, Fr. affidare mulierem, Bracton.] To betroth, in order to marriage.

Wedded be thou to the hags of hell,
For daring to affy a mighty lord,
Unto the daughter of a worthless king.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

To AFFY'. v. n. To put confidence in; to put trust in; to confide. Not in use.

Marcus Andronicus, so I do affy
In thy uprightness and integrity,
That I will here dismiss my loving friends.
Shakesp. Titus Andr.

AFI'ELD. adv. [from a and field. See FIELD.] To the field.

We drove afield; and both together heard,
What time the grey fly winds her sultry horn;
Batt'ning our flocks, with the fresh dews of night.
Milton.

Afield I went, amid the morning dew,
To milk my kine; for so should housewives do. Gay.

AFLA'T. adv. [from a and flat. See FLAT.] Level with the ground.

When you would have many new roots of fruit-trees, take a low tree; and bow it, and lay all his branches aflat upon the ground, and cast earth upon them: and every twig will take root. Bacon's Nat. History.

AFLO'AT. adv. [from a and float. See FLOAT.] Floating; borne up in the water; not sinking: in a figurative sense, within view; in motion.

There is a tide, in the affairs of men;
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries:
On such a full sea, are we now afloat;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Take any passion of the soul of man, while it is predominant and afloat; and, just in the critical height of it, nick it with some lucky or unlucky word; and you may as certainly over-rule it to your own purpose, as a spark of fire, falling upon gunpowder, will infallibly blow it up South.

There are generally several hundred loads of timber afloat: for they cut, above twenty-five leagues up the river; and other rivers bring in their contributions. Addison's Italy.

AFO'OT. adv. [from a and foot.]

1. On foot; not on horseback.

He thought it best, to return, for that day, to a village not far off; and, dispatching his horse in some sort, the next day early, to come afoot thither. Shakespeare.

2. In action; as, a design is afoot.

I pr'ythee, when thou seest that act afoot,
Ev'n with the very comment of thy soul
Observe mine uncle. Shakesp

3. In motion.

Of Albany's and Cornwall's pow'rs you heard not.—
'Tis said, they are afoot. Shakesp. King Lear.

AFO'RE. prep. [from a and fore. See BEFORE.]

1. Not behind; as, he held the shield afore: not in use.

2. Before; nearer in place to any thing; as, he stood afore him.

3. Sooner in time.

If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore you. Shakesp. King Lear.

AFO'RE. adv.

1. In time foregone or past.

Whosoever should make light of any thing afore spoken or written, out of his own house a tree should be taken, and he thereon be hanged. Esdras, vi. 22.

If he never drank wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. Shakesp. Tempest.

2. First in the way.

Æmilia, run you to the citadel;
And tell my lord and lady, what hath hap'd:
Will you go on afore? Shakesp. Othello.

3. In front; in the fore part.

Approaching nigh, he reared high afore
His body monstrous, horrible, and vast. Fairy Q.

AFO'REGOING. participial adj. [from afore and going.] Going before.

AFO'REHAND. adv. [from afore and hand.]

1. By a previous provision.

Many of the particular subjects of discourse are occasional, and such as cannot aforehand be reduced to any certain account. Government of the Tongue.

2. Provided; prepared; previously fitted.

For it will be said, that in the former times whereof we have spoken, Spain was not so mighty as now it is; and England, on the other side, was more aforehand in all matters of power. Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain

AFO'REMENTIONED. adj. [from afore and mentioned.] Mentioned before.

Among the nine other parts, five are not in a condition to give alms or relief to those aforementioned; being very near reduced themselves, to the same miserable condition. Addison.

AFO'RENAMED. adj. [from afore and named.] Named before.

Imitate something of circular form; in which, as in all other aforenamed proportions, you shall help yourself by the diameter. Peacham on Drawing.

AFO'RESAID. adj. [from afore and said.] Said before.

It need not go for repetition, if we resume again that, which we said in the aforesaid experiment. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 771.

AFO'RETIME. adv. [from afore and time.] In time past.

O thou, that art waxen old in wickedness? Now thy sins, which thou hast committed aforetime, are come to light. Susannah.

AFRA'ID. participial adj. [from the verb affray: it should therefore properly be written with ff.]

1. Struck with fear; terrified; fearful.

So persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm. Psalm lxxxiii. 15.

2. It has the particle of, before the object of fear.

There, loathing life, and yet of death afraid,
In anguish of her spirit thus she pray'd.
Dryden's Fables.

If, while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
It hap'ly be thy will, that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great Sire, dispel
The clouds, that press my soul. Prior.

AFRE'SH. adv. [from a and fresh. See FRESH.] Anew; again, after intermission.

The Germans, serving upon great horses, and charged with heavy armour, received great hurt by light skirmishes; the Turks, with their light horses, easily shunning their charge, and again (at their pleasure) charging them afresh, when they saw the heavy horses almost weary.
Knolles's History of the Turks.

When once we have attained these ideas, they may be excited afresh by the use of words.
Watts's Logick.

AFRO'NT. adv. [from a and front.] In front; in direct opposition to the face.

These four came all afront, and mainly thrust at me. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

A'FTER. prep. [æfter, Sax.]

1. Following in place. After is commonly applied to words of motion; as, he came after, and stood behind him. It is opposed to before.

What says Lord Warwick? Shall we after them?—
—After them! nay, before them, if we can.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

2. In pursuit of.

After whom is the king of Israel come out? After whom dost thou pursue? After a dead dog, after a flea. 1 Sam. xxiv. 14.

3. Behind. This is not a common use.

Sometimes I placed a third prism after a second, and sometimes also a fourth after a third; by all which, the image might be often refracted sideways. Newton's Opticks.

4. Posterior in time.

Good after ill, and after pain delight;
Alternate, like the scenes of day and night.
Dryden's Fables.

We shall examine the ways of conveyance of the sovereignty of Adam to princes, that were to reign after him. Locke.

5. According to.

He, that thinketh Spain our over-match, is no good mint-man; but takes greatness of kingdoms, according to bulk and currency, and not after their intrinsic value. Bacon.

6. In imitation of.

There are among the old Roman statues, several of Venus, in different postures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her, made after the same design. Addison's Italy.

This allusion is after the oriental manner: thus, in the Psalms, how frequently are persons compared to cedars. Pope's Odyssey, notes.

A'FTER. adv.

1. In succeeding time. It is used of time, mentioned as succeeding some other. So we cannot say, 'I shall be happy after, 'but hereafter;' but we say, 'I was 'first made miserable by the loss, but 'was after happier.'

Far be it from me, to justify the cruelties, which were at first used towards them, which had their reward soon after. Bacon.

Those, who (from the pit of hell,
Roaming to seek their prey on earth) durst fix
Their seats long after, next the seat of God.
Paradise Lost.

2. Following another.

Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill; lest it break thy neck, with following it: but the great one, that goes upward, let him draw thee after. Shakesp. King Lear.

AFTER is compounded with many words, but almost always in its genuine and primitive signification; some, which occurred, will follow, by which others may be explained.

A'FTER-ACCEPTATION. n. s. [from after and acceptation.] A sense afterwards, not at first admitted.

'Tis true, some doctors in a scantier space,
I mean in each apart, contract the place:
Some, who to greater length extend the line,
The church's after-acceptation join.
Dryden's Hind and Panther.

A'FTER-AGES. n. s. [from after and ages.] Successive times; posterity. Of this word I have found no singular; but see not, why it might not be said, This will be done in some after-age.

Not the whole land, which the Chusites should or might, in future time, conquer; seeing, in after-ages, they became lords of many nations.
Raleigh's History of the World.

Nor to philosophers is praise deny'd,
Whose wise instructions after-ages guide.
Sir J. Denham.

What an opinion will after-ages entertain, of their religion; who bid fair for a gibbet, to bring in a superstition, which their fore-fathers perished in flames to keep out. Addison.

A'FTER-ALL. When all has been taken into the view; when there remains nothing more to be added; at last; in fine; in conclusion; upon the whole; at the most.

They have given no good proof, in asserting this extravagant principle; for which (after-all) they have no ground or colour, but a passage or two of scripture, miserably perverted, in opposition to many express texts. Atterbury's Sermons.

But after-all, if they have any merit, it is to be attributed to some good old authors, whose works I study. Pope on Pastoral Poetry.

A'FTER-BIRTH. n. s. [from after and birth.] The membrane, in which the birth was involved, which is brought away after; the secundine.

The exorbitances or degenerations, whether from a hurt in labour, or from part of the after-birth left behind, produce such virulent distempers of the blood, as make it cast out a tumour.
Wiseman's Surgery.

A'FTER-CLAP. n. s. [from after and clap.] Unexpected events, happening after an affair is supposed to be at an end.

For the next morrow's mead they closely went,
For fear of after-claps to prevent.
Spens. Hub. Tale.

It is commonly taken in an ill sense.

A'FTER-COST. n. s. [from after and cost.] The latter charges; the expense, incurred after the original plan is executed.

You must take care to carry off the land-floods and streams, before you attempt draining; lest your after-cost and labour prove unsuccessful.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'FTER-CROP. n. s. [from after and crop.] The second crop or harvest of the same year.

After-crops I think neither good for the land, nor yet the hay good for the cattle.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'FTER-DINNER. n. s. [from after and dinner.] The hour passing just after dinner, which is generally allowed to indulgence and amusement.

Thou hast nor youth nor age,
But (as it were) an after-dinner's sleep,
Dreaming on both. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

A'FTER-ENDEAVOUR. n. s. [from after and endeavour.] Endeavours, made after the first effort or endeavour.

There is no reason why the sound of a pipe should leave traces in their brains; which, not at first, but by their after-endeavours, should produce the like sounds. Locke.

A'FTER-ENQUIRY. n. s. [from after and enquiry.] Enquiry, made after the fact committed, or after life.

You must either be directed by some, that take upon them to know; or take upon yourself that, which (I am sure) you do not know; or lump the after-enquiry, on your peril. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

To A'FTER-EYE. v. a. [from after and eye.] To keep one in view; to follow in view. This is not in use.

Thou shouldst have made him,
As little as a crow, or less; ere left
To after-eye him. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

A'FTER-GAME. n. s. [from after and game.] The scheme, which may be laid; or the expedients, which are practised, after the original design has miscarried; methods, taken after the first turn of affairs.

This earl, like certain vegetables, did bud and open slowly; nature sometimes delighting to play an after-game, as well as fortune; which had (both) their turns and tides, in course. Wotton.

The fables of the axe-handle and the wedge serve to precaution us, not to put ourselves needlessly upon an after-game; but to weigh beforehand, what we say and do. L'Estrange's Fables.

Our first design, my friend, has prov'd abortive;
Still there remains an after-game to play.
Addison's Cato.

A'FTER-HOURS. n. s. [from after and hours.] The hours, that succeed.

So smile the heav'ns upon this holy act,
That after-hours with sorrow chide us not.
Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

A'FTER-LIVER. n. s. [from after and live.] He, that lives in succeeding times.

By thee my promise sent
Unto myself, let after-livers know. Sidney, b. ii.

A'FTER-LOVE. n. s. [from after and love.] The second or later love.

Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the first, how heinous e'er it be;
To win thy after-love, I pardon thee.
Shakesp. Richard II.

A'FTERMATH. n. s. [from after and math, from mow.] The latter math; the second crop of grass, mown in autumn. See AFTERCROP.

A'FTERNOON. n. s. [from after and noon.] The time, from the meridian to to the evening.

A beauty-waining and distressed widow,
Ev'n in the afternoon of her best days,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye.
Shakesp. Richard III.

However, keep the lively taste you hold
Of God; and love him now, but fear him more:
And in your afternoons think, what you told
And promis'd him at morning-prayer before.
Donne.

Such, all the morning, to the pleadings run;
But, when the bus'ness of the day is done,
On dice, and drink, and drabs, they spend the afternoon. Dryden's Persius, Sat. i.

A'FTERPAINS. n. s. [from after and pain.] The pains after birth, by which women are delivered of the secundine.

A'FTERPART. n. s. [from after and part.] The latter part.

The flexibleness of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe; and, in the afterpart, reason and foresight begin a little to take place, and mind a man of his safety and improvement. Locke.

A'FTERPROOF. n. s. [from after and proof.]

1. Evidence, posterior to the thing in question.
2. Qualities, known by subsequent experience.

All know, that he likewise at first was much under the expectation of his afterproof; such a solar influence there is, in the solar aspect. Wotton.

A'FTERTASTE. n. s. [from after and taste.] A taste, remaining upon the tongue after the draught, which was not perceived in the act of drinking.

A'FTERTHOUGHT. n. s. [from after and thought.] Reflections after the act; expedients, formed too late. It is not properly to be used for secondthought.

Expence, and afterthought, and idle care,
And doubts of motley hue, and dark despair;
Suspicions, and fantastical surmise;
And jealousy, suffus'd with jaundice in her eyes,
Discolouring all she view'd, in tawny dress'd,
Downlook'd, and with a cuckow on her fist.
Dryden's Fables.

A'FTERTIMES. n. s. [from after and time.] Succeeding times. See AFTERAGES.

You promis'd once a progeny divine
Of Romans, rising from the Trojan line,
In aftertimes should hold the world in awe,
And to the land and ocean give the law.
Dryden's Virgil.

AFTERTOSSING. n. s. [from after and toss.] The motion of the sea after a storm.

Confusions and tumults are only the impotent remains of an unnatural rebellion; and are no more than the aftertossings of a sea, when the storm is laid. Addison's Freeholder.

A'FTERWARD. adv. [from after and peapb, Sax.] In succeeding time: sometimes written afterwards, but less properly.

Uses, not thought upon before, may afterward spring up; and be reasonable causes of retaining that, which former considerations did formerly procure to be instituted. Hooker.

An anxious distrust of the divine goodness makes a man more and more unworthy of it, and miserable beforehand, for fear of being so afterward. L'Estrange.

A'FTERWIT. n. s. [from after and wit.] The contrivance of expedients, after the occasion of using them is past. See AFTERTHOUGHT.

There is no recalling, what's gone and past; so that afterwit comes too late, when the mischief is done. L'Estrange.

A'FTER-WRATH. n. s. [from after and wrath.] Anger, when the provocation seems past.

I hear him mock
The luck of Cæsar; which the gods give men,
T' excuse their after-wrath. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

A'GA. n. s. The title of a Turkish military officer.

AGA'IN. adv. [azen, Sax.]

1. A second time; once more: marking the repetition of the same thing.

The poor remnant of human seed, which remained in their mountains, peopled their country again slowly, by little and little. Bacon's New Atalantis.

Should Nature's self invade the world again,
And o'er the centre spread the liquid main;
Thy pow'r were safe. Waller.

Go now, deluded man! And seek again
New toils, new dangers, on the dusty plain.
Dryd. Æneid.

Some are already retired into foreign countries; and the rest, who possess lands, are determined never to hazard them again, for the sake of establishing their superstition. Swift.

2. On the other hand: marking some opposition or contrariety.

His wit increased upon the occasion; and so much the more, if the occasion were sharpened with danger. Again, whether it were the shortness of his foresight, or the strength of his will; certain it is, that the perpetual trouble of his fortunes could not have been without defects in his nature. Bacon.

Those things, that we know not, what to do withal, if we had them; and those things again, which another cannot part with, but to his own loss and shame. L'Estrange's Fables.

3. On another part: marking a transition to some new consideration.

Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounts of snow;
Again, behold the winter's weight,
Oppress the lab'ring woods below. Dryden.

4. In return: noting re-action, or reciprocal action; as, 'his fortune worked 'upon his nature, and his nature again 'upon his fortune.'
5. Back: in restitution.

When your head did but ake,
I knit my handkerchief about your brows,
The best I had; a princess wrought it me;
And I did never ask it you again.
Shakesp. King John.

6. In return for any thing; in recompence.

That he hath given, will he pay again. Prov. xix. 27.

7. In order of rank or succession; marking distribution.

Question was asked of Demosthenes, What was the chief part of an orator? He answered, Action: What next? Action: What next, again? Action. Bacon's Essays.

The cause of the holding green, is the close and compact substance of their leaves, and the pedicles of them; and the cause of that again is, either the tough and viscous juice of the plant, or the strength and heat thereof. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

8. Besides; in any other time or place.

They have the Walloons, who are tall soldiers; yet, that is but a spot of ground: but, on the other side, there is not in the world again such a spring and seminary of brave military people; as in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Bacon.

9. Twice as much: marking the same quantity once repeated.

There are, whom heav'n has blest with store of wit;
Yet want as much again, to manage it:
For wit and judgment ever are at strife,
Th' meant each other's aid, like man and wife.
Pope.

I should not be sorry, to see a chorus on a theatre, more than as large and as deep again as ours, built and adorn'd at a king's charges. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

10. Again and again; with frequent repetition: often.

This is not to be obtained, by one or two hasty readings: it must be repeated again and again, with a close attention to the tenour of the discourse. Locke.

11. In opposition; by way of resistance.

Who art thou, that answerest again? Rom. ix 20.

12. Back; as, returning from some message.

Bring us word again, which way we shall go. Deut. i. 22.

AGA'INST. prep. [ænzeon, onzeonb, Sax.]

1. In opposition to any person.

And he will be a wild man: his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him. Gen. xvi. 12.

2. Contrary; opposite, in general.

That authority of men should prevail with men either against or above reason, is no part of our belief. Hooker.

He is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

We might work any effect, without and against matter; and this not holpen, by the co-operation of angels or spirits; but, only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The preventing goodness of God does even wrest him from himself, and save him (as it were) against his will. South.

The god, uneasy till he slept again,
Resolv'd, at once to rid himself of pain;
And, thro' against his custom call'd aloud.
Dryden.

Men often say, a thing is against their conscience, when really it is not. Swift's Miscel.

3. In contradiction to any opinion.

After all, that can be said against a thing, this will still be true; that many things possibly are, which we know not of; and that many more things may be, than are: and if so, after all our arguments against a thing, it will be uncertain, whether it be or not. Tillotson.

The church-clergy have written the best collection of tracts against popery, that ever appeared in England. Swift.

4. With contrary motion or tendency: used of material action.

Boils and plagues
Plaister you o'er, that one infect another
Against the wind a mile. Shakesp. Coriol.

The kite, being a bird of prey, and therefore hot, delighteth in the fresh air; and many times flieth against the wind, as trouts and salmons swim against the stream. Bacon.

5. Contrary to rule or law.

If aught against my life
Thy country sought of thee, it sought unjustly.
Against the law of nature, law of nations.
Milton.

Against the public sanctions of the peace,
Against all omens of their ill success;
With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,
To force their monarch, and insult the court.
Dryden.

6. Opposite to, in place.

Against the Tiber's mouth, but far away.
Dryden.

7. To the hurt of another. See sense 5.

And, when thou think'st of her eternity,
Think not that death against her nature is;
Think it a birth: and, when thou go'st to die,
Sing like a swan, as if thou went'st to bliss.
Sir J. Davies

8. In provision for; in expectation of.

This mode of speaking probably had its original from the idea of making provision against, or in opposition to, a time of misfortune; but by degrees acquired a neutral sense. It sometimes has the case elliptically suppressed; as, against he comes; that is, against the time, when he comes.

Thence she them brought into a stately hall,
Wherein were many tables fair dispred,
And ready dight with drapets festival,
Against the viands should be ministred.
Fairy Queen.

The like charge was given them against the time, they should come to settle themselves in the land promised unto their fathers. Hooker.

Some say, that ever, 'gainst that season comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long:
And then they say, no spirit walks abroad;
The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike;
No fairy tales, no witch hath power to charm;
So hallow'd and so gracious is the time.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

To that purpose, he made haste to Bristol; that all things might be ready, against the prince came thither. Clarendon.

Against the promis'd time provides with care,
And hastens in the woof the robes he was to wear.
Dryden.

All which, I grant to be reasonably and truly said; and only desire, they may be remembered against another day. Stillingfleet.

A'GALAXY. n. s. [from ἀ and γάλα, Gr.] Want of milk. Dict.

AGA'PE, adv. [from a and gape.] Staring with eagerness; as, a bird gapes for meat.

In himself was all his state;
More solemn than the tedious pomp, that waits
On princes; when their rich retinue long,
Of horses led, and grooms besmear'd with gold,
Dazzles the crowd, and sets them all agape.
Paradise Lost.

Dazzle the crowd, and set them all agape.
Philips.

The whole crowd stood agape, and ready to take the doctor at his word. Spectator, No. 572.

A'GARICK. n. s. [agaricum, Lat.] A drug, of use in physic, and the dying trade. It is divided, into male and female; the male is used only in dying, the female in medicine; the male grows on oaks, the female on larches.

There are two excrescences, which grow upon trees; both of them, in the nature of mushrooms: the one, the Romans call boletus; which groweth upon the roots of oaks, and was one of the dainties of their table: the other is medicinal, that is called agarick, which groweth upon the tops of oaks; though it be affirmed by some, that it groweth also at the roots. Bacon.

AGA'ST. adj. [This word, which is usually by later authors written aghast, is not improbably the true word, derived from agaze; which has been written aghast, from a mistaken etymology. See AGHAST.] Struck with terrour; amazed; frighted to astonishment.

Thus roving on,
In confus'd march forlorn, th' advent'rous bands
(With shudd'ring horrour pale, and eyes agast)
View'd first their lamentable lot, and found
No rest. Milton's Par. Lost.

A'GATE, n. s. [agate, Fr. achates, Lat.] A precious stone of the lowest class, often clouded with beautiful variegations.

In shape no bigger, than an agate stone
On the forefinger of an alderman.
Shakesp. Rom. and Jul.

Agates are only varieties of the flint kind: they have a grey horny ground, clouded, lineated, or spotted with different colours, chiefly dusky, black, brown, red, and sometimes blue. Woodward.

A'GATY. adj. [from agate.] Partaking of the nature of agate.

An agaty flint was above two inches in diameter; the whole covered over, with a friable cretaceous crust. Woodward.

To AGA'ZE. v. a. [from a and gaze, to set a gazing; as, amaze, amuse, and others.] To strike with amazement; to stupify with sudden terrour. The verb is now out of use.

So as they travell'd, so they 'gan espy
An armed knight toward them gallop fast;
That seemed from some feared foe to fly,
Or other grisly thing that him agast. Fairy Queen.

AGA'ZED. participial adj. [from agaze; which see.] Struck with amazement; terrified to stupidity.

Hundreds he sent to hell; and none durst stand him:
Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he flew:
The French exclaim'd, 'The devil was in arms!'
All the whole army stood agazed on him.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

AGE. n. s. [age, Fr. anciently eage, or aage: it is deduced by Menage, from ætatium, of ætas; by Junius, from aa, which (in the Teutonic dialects) signified long duration.]

1. Any period of time, attributed to something, as the whole or part of its duration: in this sense, we say, the age of man, the several ages of the world, the golden or iron age.

One man in his time plays many parts,
His life being seven ages. Shakesp.

And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt, seventeen years: so the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and seven years. Genesis, xlvii. 28.

2. A succession or generation of men.

Hence lastly springs care of posterities;
For things, their kind would everlasting make:
Hence is it, that old men do plant young trees,
The fruit whereof another age shall take.
Sir J. Davies.

Next to the Son,
Destin'd Restorer of mankind, by whom
New heav'n and earth shall to the ages rise,
Or down from heav'n descend. Milton's Par. Lost.

No declining age
E'er felt the raptures of poetic rage. Roscommon.

3. The time, in which any particular man, or race of men, lived, or shall live; as, the age of heroes.

No longer now the golden age appears,
When patriarch wits surviv'd a thousand years.
Pope.

4. The space of a hundred years; a secular period; a century.

5. The latter part of life; old age; oldness.

You see, how full of change his age is; the observation we hav made of it, hath not been little: he always loved our sister most; and, with what poor judgment, he hath now cast her off!
Shakesp. King Lear.

Boys must not have th' ambitious care of men;
Nor men, the weak anxieties of age. Roscommon.

And on this forehead (where, your verse has said,
The loves delighted, and the graces play'd)
Insulting age will trace his cruel way,
And leave sad marks of his destructive sway.
Prior.

6. Maturity; ripeness; years of discretion; full strength of life.

A solemn admission of proselytes; all, that either, being of age, desire that admission for themselves; or that, in infancy, are by others presented to that charity of the church. Hammond.

We thought our sires, not with their own content,
Had (ere we came to age) our portion spent.
Dryden.

7. In law.

In a man, the age of fourteen years is the age of discretion; and twenty-one years is the full age. In a woman, at seven years of age, the lord her father may distrain his tenants for aid to marry her at the age of nine years, she is dowable; at twelve years, she is able finally to ratify and confirm her former consent given to matrimony; at fourteen, she is enabled, to receive her land into her own hands; and shall be out of ward, at the death of her ancestor: at sixteen, she shall be out of ward; though, at the death of her ancestor, she was within the age of fourteen years: at twenty-one, she is able to alienate her lands and tenements. At the age of fourteen, a stripling is enabled to choose his own guardian; at the age of fourteen, a man may consent to marriage.
Cowell.

A'GED. adj. [from age. It makes two syllables in poetry.]

1. Old; stricken in years: applied generally, to animate beings.

If the comparison do stand between man and man, the aged (for the most part) are best experienced, least subject to rash and unadvised passions. Hooker.

Novelty is only in request: and it is as dangerous, to be aged in any kind of course; as it is virtuous, to be constant in any undertaking.
Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

Kindness itself too weak a charm will prove,
To raise the feeble fires of aged love. Prior.

2. Old; applied to inanimate things. This use is rare, and commonly with some tendency to the prosopopœia.

The people did not more worship the images of gold and ivory, than they did the groves: and the same, Quintilian saith, of the aged oaks.
Stillingfleet's Defence of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

A'GEDLY. adv. [from aged.] After the manner of an aged person.

AGE'N. adv. [azen, Sax.] Again; in return. See AGAIN.

This word is now only written in this manner (though it be in reality the true orthography) for the sake of rhime.

Thus Venus: Thus her son reply'd agen;
None of your sisters have we heard or seen.
Dryden.

A'GENCY. n. s. [from agent.]

1. The quality of acting; the state of being in action; action.

A few advances there are in the following papers, tending to assert the superintendence and agency of Providence in the natural world.
Woodward's Preface to Nat. Hist.

2. The office of an agent or factor for another; business performed by an agent.

Some of the purchasers themselves may be content to live cheap in a worse country, rather than be at the charge of exchange and agencies. Swift.

A'GENT. adj. [agens, Lat.] That, which acts; opposed to patient, or that which is acted upon.

This success is oft' truly ascribed, unto the force of imagination upon the body agent; and then, by a secondary means, it may upon a diverse body; as, for example; if a man carry a ring, or some part of a beast, believing strongly that it will help him to obtain his love; it may make him more industrious, and again more confident and persisting, than otherwise he would be. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

A'GENT. n. s.

1. An actor; he, that acts; he, that possesses the faculty of action.

Where there is no doubt, deliberation is not excluded, as impertinent unto the thing; but as needless in regard of the agent, which seeth already what to resolve upon. Hooker.

To whom, nor agent, from the instrument;
Nor pow'r of working from the work is known.
Davies.

Heav'n made us agents, free to good or ill;
And forc'd it not, tho' he foresaw the will:
Freedom was first bestow'd on human race,
And prescience only held the second place. Dryd.

A miracle is a work, exceeding the power of any created agent, consequently being an effect of the divine omnipotence. South's Sermons.

2. A substitute; a deputy; a factor; a person, employed to transact the business of another.

—All hearts in love, use your own tongues;
Let every eye negociate for itself,
And trust no agent. Shakesp.

They had not the wit, to send to them (in any orderly fashion) agents or chosen men, to tempt them, and to treat with them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Remember, Sir, your fury of a wife;
Who, not content to be reveng'd on you,
The agents of your passion will pursue. Dry. Aureng.

3. That, which has the power of operating, or producing effects, upon another thing.

They produced wonderful effects, by the proper application of agents to patients. Temple.

AGGELA'TION. n. s. [Lat. gelu.] Concretion of ice.

It is round in hail, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air; growing greater or lesser, according to the accretion or pluvious aggelation about the fundamental atoms thereof.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

AGGENERA'TION. n. s. [from ad and generatio, Lat.] The state of growing or uniting to another body.

To make a perfect nutrition, there is required a transmutation of nutriment: now, where this conversion or aggeneration is made, there is also required, in the aliment, a similarity of matter.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To A'GGERATE. v. a. [from agger, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.

AGGERO'SE. adj. [from agger, Lat.] Full of heaps. Dict.

To AGGLO'MERATE. v. a. [agglomero, Lat.]

1. To gather up in a ball, as thread.
2. To gather together.

To AGGLO'MERATE. v. n.

Besides, the hard agglomerating salts,
The spoil of ages, would impervious choke
Their secret channels. Thomson's Autumn.

AGGLU'TINANTS. n. s. [from agglutinate.] Those medicines or applications, which have the power of uniting parts together.

To AGGLU'TINATE. v. n. [from ad and gluten, glue, Lat.] To unite one part to another; to join together, so as not to fall asunder. It is a word, almost appropriated to medicine.

The body has got room enough, to grow into its full dimensions; which is performed, by the daily ingestion of food, that is digested into blood; which, being diffused through the body, is agglutinated to those parts, that were immediately agglutinated to the foundation parts of the womb.
Harvey on Consumptions.

AGGLUTINA'TION. n. s. [from agglutinate.] Union; cohesion; the act of agglutinating; the state of being agglutinated.

The occasion of its not healing by agglutination, as the other did, was from the alteration the ichor had begun to make in the bottom of the wound.
Wiseman's Surgery.

AGGLU'TINATIVE. adj. [from agglutinate.] That, which has the power of procuring agglutination.

Rowl up the member, with the agglutinative rowler. Wiseman.

To AGGRANDI'ZE. v. a. [aggrandiser, Fr.] To make great; to enlarge; to exalt; to improve in power, honour, or rank. It is applied to persons generally, sometimes to things.

If the king should use it no better, than the pope did, only to aggrandize covetous churchmen; it cannot be called a jewel in his crown. Ayliffe's Parerg.

These furnish us, with glorious springs and mediums; to raise and aggrandize our conceptions, to warm our souls, to awaken the better passions; and to elevate them, even to a divine pitch, and that for devotional purposes. Watts's Impr. of the Mind.

A'GGRANDIZEMENT. n. s. [aggrandissement, Fr.] The state of being aggrandized; the act of aggrandizing.

A'GGRANDIZER. n. s. [from aggrandize.] The person, that aggrandizes or makes great another.

To AGGRA'TE. v. a. [aggratare, Ital.] To please; to treat with civilities: a word not now in use.

And in the midst thereof, upon the floor,
A lovely bevy of fair ladies sate,
Courted of many a jolly paramour;
The which them did in modest wise amate,
And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Q.

To A'GGRAVATE. v. a. [aggravo, Lat.]

1. To make heavy: used, only in ameta phorical sense; as, to aggravate an accusation, or a punishment.

A grove hard by sprung up with this their change,
(His will, who reigns above!) to aggravate
Their penance; laden with fruit, like that
Which grew in paradise, the bait of Eve,
Us'd by the tempter. Milton's Par. Lost.

Ambitious Turnus in the press appears,
And aggravating crimes augments their fears.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. To make any thing worse, by the addition of some particular circumstance, not essential.

This offence, in itself so heinous, was yet in him aggravated by the motive thereof; which was not malice or discontent, but an aspiring mind to the papacy. Bacon's Henry VII.

AGGRAVA'TION. n. s. [from aggravate.]

1. The act of aggravating, or making heavy.
2. The act of enlarging to enormity.

A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face; and, by a little aggravation of the features, changed it into the Saracen's head. Addison.

3. The extrinsical circumstances or accidents, which increase the guilt of a crime, or the misery of a calamity.

He, to the sins which he commits, hath the aggravation superadded, of committing them against knowledge, against conscience, against sight of the contrary law. Hammond.

If it be weigh'd
By itself, with aggravations not surcharg'd,
Or else with just allowance counterpois'd;
I may, if possible, thy pardon find
The easier towards me, or thy hatred less. Milton.

A'GGREGATE. adj. [aggregatus, Lat.] Framed, by the collection of any particular parts, into one mass, body, or system.

The solid reason of one man with unprejudicate apprehensions, begets as firm a belief, as the authority or aggregate testimony of many hundreds.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

They had, for a long time together, produced many other inept combinations, or aggregate forms of particular things, and nonsensical systems of the whole. Ray on the Creation.

A'GGREGATE. n. s. [from the verb.] The complex or collective result of the conjunction or acervation of many particulars.

The reason of the far greatest part of mankind, is but an aggregate of mistaken phantasms; and, in things not sensible, a constant delusion.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

A great number of living and thinking particles could not possibly, by their mutual contact, and pressing, and striking, compose one greater individual animal, with one mind and understanding, and a vital consension of the whole body; any more, than a swarm of bees, or a crowd of men and women, can be conceived to make up one particular living creature, compounded and constituted of the aggregate of them all. Bentley.

To A'GGREGATE. v. a. [aggrego, Lat.] To collect together; to accumulate; to heap many particulars into one mass.

The aggregated soil
Death, with his mace petrifick, cold and dry,
As with a trident, smote. Milton's Par. Lost.

AGGREGA'TION. n. s. [from aggregate.]

1. Collection, or state of being collected.

Their individual imperfections being great, they are moreover enlarged by their aggregation; and, being erroneous in their single numbers, once huddled together, they will be errour itself.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. The collection, or act of collecting many particulars into one whole.

The water, resident in the abyss, is (in all parts of it) stored with a considerable quantity of heat; and more especially in those, where these extraordinary aggregations of this fire happen.
Woodward's Nat. Hist.

3. The whole, composed by the coacervation of many particulars; an aggregate.

To AGGRE'SS. v. n. aggredior, aggressum, Lat.] To commit the first act of violence; to begin the quarrel.

The glorious pair advance,
With mingled anger and collected might;
To turn the war, and tell aggressing France,
How Britain's sons and Britain's friends can fight. Prior.

AGGRE'SSION. n. s. [aggressio, Lat.] The first act of injury; commencement of a quarrel, by some act of iniquity.

There is no resisting of a common enemy, without an union for a mutual defence; and there may be also, on the other hand, a conspiracy of common enmity and aggression. L'Estrange.

AGGRE'SSOR. n. s. [from aggress.] The person, that first commences hostility; the assaulter or invader, opposed to the defendant.

Fly in nature's face!
But how, if nature fly in my face first?
Then nature's the aggressor. Let her look to't. Dryd.

It is a very unlucky circumstance, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of such authors; whose works are so soon forgotten, that we are in danger already of appearing the first aggressors. Pope and Swift.

AGGRI'EVANCE. n. s. [See GRIEVANCE.] Injury; hardship inflicted; wrong endured.

To AGGRI'EVE. v. a. [from gravis, Lat. See To grieve.]

1. To give sorrow; to cause grief; to vex. It is not improbable, that to grieve was originally neuter, and aggrieve the active.

But while therein I took my chief delight,
I saw, alas! the gaping earth devour
The spring, the place, and all, clean out of sight:
Which yet aggrieves my heart even to this hour.
Spenser.

2. To impose some hardships upon; to harass; to hurt in one's right. This is a kind of juridical sense; and whenever it is used now, it seems to bear some allusion to forms of law.

Sewall, archbishop of York, much aggrieved with some practices of the pope's collectors, took all patiently. Camden.

The landed man finds himself aggrieved, by the falling of his rents, and the streightening of his fortune; whilst the monied man keeps up his gain, and the merchant thrives and grows rich by trade. Locke.

Of injur'd fame, and mighty wrongs receiv'd,
Chloe complains, and wond'rously's aggriev'd.
Granville.

To AGGROU'P v. a. [aggropare, Ital.] To bring together into one figure; to crowd together: a term of painting.

Bodies of divers natures, which are aggrouped (or combined) together, are agreeable and pleasant to the sight. Dryden.

AGHA'ST. [either the participle of agaze (see AGAZE), and then to be written agazed, or agast; or from a and ȝaſt, a ghost; which the present orthography favours: perhaps they were originally different words.] Struck with horrour, as at the sight of a spectre; stupified with terrour. It is generally applied to the external appearance.

She (sighing sore, as if her heart in twaine
Had riven been, and all her heart-strings brast)
With dreary drooping eyne look'd up, like one aghast. Spenser.

The aged earth, aghast
With terrour of that blast,
Shall from the surface to the centre shake. Milton.

Aghast he wak'd; and, starting from his bed,
Cold sweat in clammy drops his limbs o'erspread.
Dryden's Æneid.

I laugh to think, how your unshaken Cato
Will look aghast, while unforeseen destruction
Pours in upon him thus from everyside. Addis. Cato.

A'GILE. adj. [agile, Fr. agilis, Lat.] Nimble; ready; having the quality of being speedily put in motion; active.

With that he gave his able horse the head;
And, bending forward, struck his agile heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade,
Up to the rowel head. Shakesp. Hen. IV

The immediate and agile subservience of the spirits to the empire of the mind or soul.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To guide its actions with informing care,
In peace to judge, to conquer in the war,
Render it agile, witty, valiant, sage;
As fits the various course of human age. Prior.

A'GILENESS. n. s. [from agile.] The quality of being agile; nimbleness; readiness for motion; quickness; activity; agility.

AGI'LITY. n. s. [agilitas, Lat. from agilis, agile.] Nimbleness; readiness to move; quickness; activity.

A limb, over-strained by lifting a weight above its power, may never recover its former agility and vigour. Watts.

AGILLOCHUM. n. s. Aloeswood. A tree in the East-Indies, brought to us in small bits, of a very fragrant scent. It is hot, drying, and accounted a strengthener of the nerves in general: the best is of a blackish purple colour; and so light, as to swim upon water. Quincy.

A'GIO. n. s. [An Italian word, signifying ease or conveniency.] A mercantile term, used chiefly in Holland and Venice, for the difference between the value of bank notes, and the current money. Chambers.

To AGI'ST. v. a. [from giste, Fr. a bed or resting place, or from gister, i. e. stabulari.] To take in and feed the cattle of strangers in the king's forest, and to gather the money. The officers, that do this, are called agistors; in English, guest or gist takers: their function is termed agistment; as, agistment upon the sea-banks. This word agist is also used, for the taking-in of other men's cattle into any man's ground, at a certain rate per week. Blount.

AGI'STMENT. n. s. [See AGIST.] It is taken by the canon lawyers, in another sense, than is mentioned under agist. They seem to intend by it, a modus or composition, or mean rate, at which some right or due may be reckoned: perhaps it is corrupted from addoucissement, or adjustment.

AGI'STOR. n. s. [from agist.] An officer of the king's forest. See AGIST.

A'GITABLE. adj. [from agitate; agitabilis, Lat.] That, which may be agitated, or put in motion; perhaps that, which may be disputed. See AGITATE, and AGITATION.

To A'GITATE. v. a. [agito, Lat.]

1. To put in motion; to shake; to move nimbly; as, 'the surface of the waters 'is agitated by the wind; the vessel was broken, by agitating the liquor.'
2. To be the cause of motion; to actuate; to move.

Where dwells this sov'reign arbitrary soul,
Which does the human animal controul,
Inform each part, and agitate the whole? Blackmore

3. To affect with perturbation; as, 'the mind 'of man is agitated by various passions.'
4. To stir; to bandy from one to another; to discuss; to controvert; as, to agitate a question.

Though this controversy be revived, and hotly agitated among the moderns; yet I doubt, whether it be not, in a great part, a nominal dispute.
Boyle on Colours

5. To contrive; to revolve; to form by laborious thought.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate, than when politicians most agitate desperate designs. King Charles.

AGITA'TION. n. s. [from agitate; agitatio, Lat.]

1. The act of moving or shaking any thing.

Putrefaction asketh rest; for the subtle motion, which putrefaction requireth, is disturbed by any agitation, Bacon.

2. The state of being moved or agitated; as, 'the waters, after a storm, are some 'time in a violent agitation.'
3. Discussion; controversial examination.

A kind of a school question is started in this fable, upon reason and instinct; this deliberative proceeding of the crow was rather a logical agitation of the matter. L'Estrange's Fables.

4. Violent motion of the mind; perturbation; disturbance of the thoughts.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching. In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking, and other actual performances, what have you heard her say? Shakesp. Macbeth.

His mother could no longer bear the agitations of so many passions, as thronged upon her. Tat. No. 55.

5. Deliberation; contrivance; the state of being consulted upon.

The project now in agitation, for repealing of the test act, and yet leaving the name of an establishment to the present national church, is inconsistent. Swift's Miscellanies.

AGITA'TOR. n. s. [from agitate.] He, that agitates any thing; he, who manages affairs: in which sense seems to be used, the agitators of the army.

A'GLET. n. s. [Some derive it from αιγλη, splendour; but it is apparently to be deduced from aiguelette, Fr. a tag to a point; and that, from aigu, sharp.]

1. A tag of a point, curved into some representation of an animal, generally of a man.

He thereupon gave for the garter a chain, worth 200l. and his gown addressed with aglets, esteemed worth 25l. Hayward.

Why, give him gold enough, and marry him to a puppet, or an aglet baby, or an old trot, and ne'er a tooth in her head. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

2. The pendants, at the ends of the chieves of flowers, as in tulips.

A'GMINAL. adj. [from agmen, Lat.] Belonging to a troop. Dict.

A'GNAIL. adj. [from ange, grieved, and nagle, a nail.] A disease of the nails; a whitlow; an inflammation round the nails.

AGNA'TION. n. s. [from agnatus, Lat.] Descent from the same father, in a direct male line; distinct from cognation, or consanguinity, which include descendants from females.

AGNI'TION. n. s. [from agnitio, Lat.] Acknowledgment.

To AGNI'ZE. v. a. [from agnosco, Lat.] To acknowledge; to own; to avow. This word is now obsolete.

I do agnize
A natural and prompt alacrity,
I find in hardness. Shakesp. Othello.

AGNOMINA'TION. n. s. [agnominatio, Lat.] Allusion of one word to another, by resemblance of sound.

The British continueth yet in Wales, and some villages of Cornwall, interimingled with provincial Latin; being very significative, copious, and pleasantly running upon agnominations, although harsh in aspirations. Camden.

AGNUS CASTUS. n. s. [Lat.] The name of the tree, commonly called the Chaste Tree, from an imaginary virtue of preserving chastity.

Of laurel some, of woodbine many more,
And wreathes of agnus castus others bore. Dryden.

AGO'. adv. [agan, Sax. past or gone; whence writers formerly used, and in some provinces the people still use, agone for ago.] Past; as, long ago; that is, long time has past since. Reckoning time towards the present, we use since; as, it is a year since it happened: reckoning from the present, we use ago; as, it happened a year ago. This is not, perhaps, always observed.

The great supply
Are wreck'd three nights ago on Godwin sands.
Shakesp.

This, both by others and myself, I know:
For I have serv'd their sovereign, long ago;
Oft have been caught, within the winding train.
Dryden's Fables.

I shall set down an account of a discourse, I chanced to have with one of them some time ago.
Addison's Freeholder

AGO'G. adv. [a word of uncertain etymology. The French have the term à gogo, in low language; as, ils vivent à gogo, they live to their wish: from this phrase, our word may be (perhaps) derived.]

1. In a state of desire; in a state of warm imagination; heated, with the notion of some enjoyment; longing; strongly excited.

As for the sense and reason of it, that has little or nothing to do here: only let it sound full and round, and chime right to the humour, which is at present agog; just as a big, long, rattling name is said, to command even adoration from a Spaniard: and no doubt, with this powerful, senseless engine, the rabble-driver shall be able to carry all before him. South's Sermons.

2. It is used, with the verbs to be, or to set; as, he is agog, or you may set him agog.

The gawdy gossip, when she's set agog,
In jewels drest, and at each ear a bob,
Goes flaunting out; and, in her trim of pride,
Thinks, all she says or does is justify'd.
Dryd. Juv. Sat. vi.

This maggot has no sooner set him agog, but he gets him a ship; freights her, builds castles in the air, and conceits both the Indies in his coffers. L'Estrange.

It has the particle on, or for, before the object of desire.

On which, the saints are all agog;
And all this, for a bear and dog. Hudibr. cant. ii.

Gypsies generally straggle into these parts, and set the heads of our servant-maids so agog for husbands, that we do not expect to have any business done as it should be, whilst they are in the country. Addison's Spectator.

AGO'ING. participal adj. [from a and going.] In action; into action.

Their first movement, and impressed motions, demanded the impulse of an almighty hand, to set them first agoing. Tatler.

AGO'NE. adv. [agan, Sax.] Ago; past See AGO.

Is he such a princely one,
As you spake him long agone?
Ben Jonson's Fairy Prince.

A'GONISM. n. s. [ἀγώνισμος, Gr.] Contention for a prize. Dict.

A'GONIST. n. s. [ἀγωνίσης, Gr.] A contender for prizes. Dict.

AGONI'STES. n. s. [ἀγωνίσης, Gr.] A prize-fighter; one that contends at any publick solemnity for a prize. Milton has so styled his tragedy; because Samson was called out, to divert the Philistines with feats of strength.

AGONI'STICAL. adj. [from agonistes] Relating to prize-fighting. Dict.

To A'GONIZE. v. n. [from agonizo, low Latin: ἀγωνίζω, Gr. agoniser, Fr.] To feel agonies; to be in excessive pain.

Dost thou behold my poor distracted heart,
Thus rent with agonizing love and rage;
And ask me, what it means? Art thou not false?
Rowe's Jane Shore.

Or touch, if, tremblingly alive all o'er,
To smart and agonize at every pore?
Pope's Essay on Man.

AGONOTHE'TICK. adj. [ἀγων and τίθημι, Gr.] Proposing public contentions for prizes; giving prizes; presiding at publick games. Dict.

A'GONY. n. s. [ἀλὼν, Gr. agon, low Lat. agonie, Fr.]

1. The pangs of death; properly, the last contest between life and death.

Never was there more pity, in saving any, than in ending me; because therein my agony shall end. Sidney.

Thou, who for me didst feel such pain,
Whose precious blood the cross did stain,
Let not those agonies be vain. Roscommon.

2. Any violent or excessive pain of body or mind.

Betwixt them both, they have me done to dy,
Thro' wounds, and strokes, and stubborn handeling;
That death were better, than such agony,
As grief and fury unto me did bring. Fairy Queen.

Thee I have miss'd, and thought it long depriv'd
Thy presence; agony of love! till now
Not felt, nor shall be twice. Milt. Par. Lost.

3. It is particularly used, in devotions for our Redeemer's conflict in the garden.

To propose our desires, which cannot take such effect as we specify, shall (notwithstanding) otherwise procure us his heavenly grace; even as this very prayer of Christ obtained angels to be sent him, as comforters in his agony. Hooker.

AGO'OD adv. [a and good.] In earnest; not fictitiously. Not in use.

At that time I made her weep agood,
For I did play a lamentable part.
Shakesp. Two Gent. of Verona.

AGOU'TY. n. s. An animal of the Antilles; of the bigness of a rabbit, with bright red hair, and a little tail without hair. He has but two teeth in each jaw; holds his meat in his fore paws, like a squirrel; and has a very remarkable cry: when he is angry, his hair stands on end, and he strikes the earth with his hind feet; and, when chased, he flies to a hollow tree, whence he is expelled by smoke. Trevoux.

To AGRA'CE. v. a. [from a and grace.] To grant favours to; to confer benefits upon: a word not now in use.

She granted; and that knight so much agrac'd,
That she him taught celestial discipline.
Fairy Queen.

AGRA'MMATIST. n. s. [ἀ, priv. and γράμμα, Gr.] An illiterate man. Dict.

AGRA'RIAN. adj. [agrarius, Lat.] Relating to fields or grounds: a word seldom used, but in the Roman History; where there is mention of the agrarian law.

To AGRE'ASE. v. a. [from a and grease.] To daub; to grease; to pollute with filth.

The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were,
Engross'd with mud, which did them foul agrease.
Fairy Queen.

To AGREE. v. n. [agreer, Fr. from gré, liking or good-will; gratia and gratus, Lat.]

1. To be in concord; to live without contention; not to differ.

The more you agree together, the less hurt can your enemies do you.
Broome's View of Epic Poetry.

2. To grant; to yield to; to admit; with the particle to, or upon.

And persuaded them, to agree to all reasonable conditions. 2 Maccabees, xi. 14.

We do not prove the origin of the earth, from a chaos; seeing that is agreed on by all, that give it any origin. Burnet.

3. To settle amicably.

A form of words were quickly agreed on between them, for a perfect combination. Clarendon.

4. To settle terms, by stipulation; to accord: followed by with.

Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. Matt. v. 25.

5. To settle a price, between buyer and seller.

Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny? Matt. xx. 13.

6. To be of the same mind or opinion.

He exceedingly provoked or underwent, the envy, and reproach, and malice of men of all qualities and conditions, who agreed in nothing else. Clarendon.

Milton is a noble genius; and the world agrees, to confess it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

7. To concur; to co-operate.

Must the whole man (amazing thought!) return,
To the cold marble and contracted urn?
And never shall those particles agree,
That were in life this individual he? Prior.

8. To settle some point, among many; with upon, before a noun.

Strifes and troubles would be endless; except they gave their common consent all, to be ordered by some, whom they should agree upon. Hooker.

If men, skilled in chymical affairs, shall agree to write clearly, and keep men from being stunned by dark or empty words; they will be reduced, either to write nothing; or books, that may teach us something. Boyle.

9. To be consistent; not to contradict: with to, or with.

For many bare false witness against him; but their witness agreed not together. Mark, xiv. 56.

They that stood by, said again to Peter, 'Surely thou art one of them; for thou art a Galilean, 'and thy speech agreeth thereto.'
Mark, xiv. 70.

Which testimony, I the less scruple to allege; because it agrees very well, with what has been affirmed to me. Boyle.

10. To suit with; to be accommodated to; with to, or with.

Thou feedest thine own people with angels food; and didst send them from heaven bread, agreeing to every taste. Wisdom.

His principles could not be made to agree with that constitution and order, which God had settled in the world; and therefore must needs clash, with common sense and experience. Locke.

11. To cause no disturbance in the body.

I have often thought that, our prescribing asses milk in such small quantities is injudicious; for undoubtedly, with such as it agrees with, it would perform much greater and quicker effects, in greater quantities. Arbuthnot.

To AGREE. v. a.

1. To put an end to a variance.

He saw from far, or seemed for to see,
Some troublous uproar, or contentious fray;
Whereto he drew in haste, it to agree.
Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. To make friends; to reconcile.

The mighty rivals, whose destructive rage
Did the whole world in civil arms engage,
Are now agreed. Roscommon.

AGRE'EABLE. adj. [agréable, Fr.]

1. Suitable to; consistent with; conformable to. It has the particle to, or with.

This paucity of blood is agreeable to many other animals; as frogs, lizards, and other fishes.
Brown's Vulgar Errours

The delight, which men have in popularity; fame, submission, and subjection of other men's minds; seemeth to be a thing (in itself, without contemplation of consequence) agreeable and grateful, to the nature of man. Bacon's Natural Hist.

What you do, is not at all agreeable, either with so good a christian, or so reasonable and so great a person. Temple.

That, which is agreeable to the nature of one thing, is many times contrary to the nature of another. L'Estrange.

As the practice of all piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason; so is it likewise the interest, both of private persons, and of publick societies. Tillotson.

2. In the following passage, the adjective is used (by a familiar corruption) for the adverb agreeably.

Agreeable hereunto, perhaps it might not be amiss, to make children (as soon, as they are capable of it) often to tell a story. Locke on Edu

3. Pleasing; that is suitable, to the inclination, faculties, or temper: it is used in this sense, both of persons and things.

And, while the face of outward things we find
Pleasant and fair, agreeable and sweet.
These things transport. Sir J. Davies.

I recollect in my mind the discourses, which have passed between us; and call to mind a thousand agreeable remarks, which he has made on these occasions. Addison, Spectator, No. 241.

AGRE'EABLENESS. n. s. [from agreeable.]

1. Consistency with; suitableness to: with the particle to.

Pleasant tastes depend, not on the things themselves, but their agreeableness to this or that particular palate; wherein there is great variety. Locke.

2. The quality of pleasing. It is used in an inferior sense; to mark the production of satisfaction, calm and lasting, but below rapture or admiration.

There will be occasion, for largeness of mind, and agreeableness of temper. Collier of Friendship.

It is very much an image of that author's writing; who has an agreeableness that charms us, without correctness; like a mistress, whose faults we see, but love her with them all. Pope.

3. Resemblance; likeness: sometimes, with the particle between.

This relation is likewise seen, in the agreeableness between man and the other parts of the universe. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

AGRE'EABLY. adv. [from agreeable.]

1. Consistently with; in a manner, suitable to.

They may look, into the affairs of Judea and Jerusalem; agreeably to that, which is in the law of the Lord. 1 Esd. xviii. 12.

2. Pleasingly.

I did never imagine, that so many excellent rules could be produced so advantageously and agreeably. Swift.

AGRE'ED. participial adj. [from agree.] Settled by consent.

When they had got known and agreed names, to signify those internal operations of their own minds; they were sufficiently furnished, to make known by words all their ideas. Locke.

AGRE'EINGNESS. n. s. [from agree.] Consistence; suitableness.

AGRE'EMENT. n. s. [agrément, Fr. in law, Latin agreamentum, which Coke would willingly derive from aggregatio mentium.]

1. Concord.

What agreement is there, between the hyena and the dog? and what peace, between the rich and the poor? Eccles. xiii. 18.

2. Resemblance of one thing to another.

The division and quavering, which please so much in musick, have an agreement with the glittering of light; as the moon-beams, playing upon a wave. Bacon.

Expansion and duration have this farther agreement; that, though they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

3. Compact; bargain; conclusion of controversy; stipulation.

And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it. Isaiah, xxviii. 18.

Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me; and then eat ye, every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig-tree. 2 Kings, xviii. 31.

Frog had given his word, that he would meet the company, to talk of this agreement. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

AGRE'STICK, or AGRE'STICAL. adj. [from agrestis, Lat.] Having relation to the country; rude; rustick. Dict.

AGRICOLA'TION. n. s. [from agricola, Lat.] Culture of the ground. Dict.

A'GRICULTURE. n. s. [agricultura, Lat.] The art of cultivating the ground; tillage; husbandry, as distinct from pasturage.

He strictly adviseth, not to begin to sow before the setting of the stars; which, notwithstanding, without injury to agriculture, cannot be observed in England. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

That there was tillage bestowed upon the antediluvian ground, Moses does indeed intimate in general: what sort of tillage that was, is not expressed. I hope to shew that, their agriculture was nothing near so laborious and troublesome, nor did it take so much time, as ours doth. Woodward's Natural History.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to war, rather than the more lucrative, but more secure, method of life, by agriculture and husbandry. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

A'GRIMONY. n. s. [agrimonia, Lat.] The name of a plant. The leaves are rough, hairy, pennated, and grow alternately on the branches; the flower-cup consists of one leaf, which is divided into five segments: the flowers have five or six leaves, and are formed into a long spike; which expands, in form of a rose; the fruit is oblong, dry, and prickly, like the burdock; in each of which, are contained two kernels. Miller.

To AGRI'SE. v. n. [ꝛgꝛiꝛan, Sax.] To look terrible. Out of use. Spenser.

To AGRI'SE. v. a. To terrify. Spens.

AGRO'UND. adv. [from a and ground.]

1. Stranded; hindered by the ground, from passing farther.

With our great ships, we durst not approach the coast; we having been all of us aground. Sir W. Raleigh's Essays.

Say, what you seek, and whither were you bound?
Were you by stress of weather, cast aground? Dryden's Æneid.

2. It is likewise figuratively used, for being hindered in the progress of affairs; as, the negociators were aground at that objection.

A'GUE. n. s. [aigu, Fr. acute.] An intermitting fever, with cold fits succeeded by hot: the cold fit is, in popular language, more particularly called the ague; and the hot, the fever.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn. Here let them lie,
Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakesp.

Though
He feels the heats of youth, and colds of age,
Yet neither tempers nor corrects the other;
As if there were an ague in his nature,
That still inclines to one extreme. Den. Sophy.

A'GUED. adj. [from ague.] Struck with an ague; shivering; chill; cold: a word in little use

All hurt behind, backs red, and faces pale,
With flight and agued fear! Shakesp. Coriolanus.

A'GUE-FIT. n. s [from ague and fit.] The paroxysm of the ague.

This ague-fit of fear is overblown. Shakesp. Rich. II

A'GUE-PROOF. adj. [from ague and proof.] Proof against agues; able to resist the causes which produce agues, without being affected.

When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found 'em, there I smelt 'em out. They told me, I was every thing; 'tis a lie; I am not ague-proof. Shakesp. King Lear.

A'GUE-TREE. n. s. [from ague and tree.] A name, sometimes given to sassafras. Dict.

To AGUI'SE. v. a. [from a and guise. See GUISE.] To dress; to adorn; to deck: a word not in use now.

As her fantastic wit did most delight,
Sometimes her head she fondly would aguise
With gaudy garlands, or fresh flowers dight
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. Fairy Queen.

A'GUISH. adj. [from ague] Having the qualities of an ague.

So calm, and so serene, but now:
What means this change, on Myra's brow?
Her aguish love now glows and burns,
Then chills and shakes, and the cold fit returns. Granville.

A'GUISHNESS. n. s. [from aguish.] The quality of resembling an ague.

AH. Interjection.

1. A word, noting sometimes dislike and censure.

Ah! sinful nation! a people, laden with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers; children, that are corrupters! they have forsaken the Lord. Isaiah, i. 4.

2. Sometimes, contempt and exultation.

Let them not say in their hearts, Ah! so we would have it: let them not say, we have swallowed him up. Psalm xxxv. 25.

3. Sometimes, and most frequently, compassion and complaint.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;
But ah! the mighty bliss is fugitive:
Discolour'd sickness, anxious labour come,
And age and death's inexorable doom. Dryd. Virg. Georg. iii.

Ah me! the blooming pride of May,
And that of beauty, are but one:
At morn, both flourish bright and gay;
Both fade at evening, pale and gone. Prior

4. When it is followed by that, it expresses vehement desire.

In goodness, as in greatness, they excel.
Ah! that we lov'd ourselves, but half so well! Dryden's Juvenal.

AHA'! AHA'! interjection. A word, intimating triumph and contempt.

They opened their mouth wide against me, and said, aha! aha! our eye hath seen it.
Psalm xxxv. 21.

AHE'AD. adv. [from a and head.]

1. Farther onward, than another: a sea term.

And now the mighty Centaur seems to lead;
And now the speedy Dolphin gets ahead.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. Headlong; precipitantly: used of animals, and figuratively of men.

It is mightily the fault of parents, guardians, tutors, and governours, that so many men miscarry. They suffer them at first, to run ahead; and, when perverse inclinations are advanced into habits, there is no dealing with them.
L'Estrange's Fables.

AHE'IGHT. adv. [from a and height.] Aloft; on high.

But have I fall'n or no,—
—From the dread summit of this chalky bourne?
Look up aheight! the shrill-gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard. Shakesp. King Lear.

AHOUA'I. n. s. The name of a poisonous plant.

To* AID. n. s. [aider, Fr. from adjutare, Lat.] To help; to support; to succour.

Into the lake he leapt, his lord to aid;
And, of him catching hold, him strongly staid
From drowning. Fairy Queen.

Neither shall they give any thing unto them, that make war upon them, or aid them with victuals, weapons, money, or ships.
Maccabees, viii 26.

By the loud trumpet, which our coinage auds,
We learn that, sound as well as sense persuades.
Roscommon.

AID. n. s. [from To aid.]

1. Help; support.

The memory of useful things may receive considerable aid, if they are thrown into verse.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Your patrimonial stores in peace possess,
Undoubted all your filial claim confess,
Your private right should impious power invade,
The peers of Ithaca would arm in aid. Pope's Od.

2. The person that gives help or support; a helper; auxiliary.

Thou hast said, it is not good, that man should be alone; let us make unto him an aid, like unto himself. Tobit, viii. 6.

Great aids came in to him, partly upon missives, and partly voluntaries from many parts.
Bacon's Henry VII.

3. In law.

A subsidy. Aid is also particularly used, in matter of pleading, for a petition made in court, for the calling in of help from another, that hath an interest in the cause in question: and is likewise, both to give strength to the party, that prays in aid of him; and also, to avoid a prejudice accruing towards his own right, except it be prevented. as, when a tenant for term of life, courtesy, &c. being impleaded touching his estate, he may pray in aid of him in the reversion; that is, entreat the court, that he may be called in by writ, to allege what he thinks good for the maintenance both of his right and his own. Cowell.

AI'DANCE. n. s. [from aid] Help; support: a word little used.

Oft have I seen a timely parted ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the lab'ring heart;
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the same, for aidance 'gainst the enemy.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

AI'DANT. adj. [aidant, Fr.] Helping; helpful: not in use.

All you, unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate,
In the good man's distress. Shakesp. King Lear.

AI'DER. n. s. [from aid.] He, that brings aid or help; a helper; an ally.

All along, as he went, were punished the adherents and aiders of the late rebels.
Bacon's Henry VII.

AI'DLESS. adj. [from aid and less, an inseparable particle] Helpless; unsupported; undefended.

Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate o' th' city, which he painted
With shunless destiny: aidless came off;
And with a sudden re-enforcement, struck
Corioli, like a planet. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

He had met
Already, ere my best speed could prevent,
The aidless innocent lady, his wish'd prey.
Milton's Comus.

AI'GULET. n. s. [aigulet, Fr.] A point, with tags; points of gold, at the end of fringes.

It all above besprinkled was throughout
With golden aiglets, that glister'd bright,
Like twinkling stars; and, all the skirt about,
Was hemm'd with golden fringes. Fairy Queen.

To* AIL. v. a. [eglan, Sax. to be troublesome]

1. To pain; to trouble; to give pain.

And the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her; 'What aileth thee 'Hagar?' fear not! for God hath heard the voice 'of the lad, where he is.' Gen. xxi. 17.

2. It is used (in a sense less determinate) for to affect in any manner; as, something ails me, that I cannot sit still; what ails the man, that he laughs without reason?

Love smiled, and thus said; 'Want, joined to 'desire, is unhappy; but, if he nought do desire, 'what can Heraclitus ail?' Sidney.

What ails me, that I cannot lose thy thought?
Command, the empress hither to be brought:
I, in her death, shall some diversion find;
And rid my thoughts at once, of woman-kind.
Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

3. To feel pain; to be incommoded

4. It is remarkable, that this word is never used, but with some indefinite term, or the word nothing: as, What ails him? What does he ail? He ails something; he ails nothing. Something ails him; nothing ails him. Thus we never say, a fever ails him, or he ails a fever; or use definite terms with this verb.

AIL. n s. [from the verb.] A disease.

Or heal, O Nurses, thy obsecner ail. Pope.

AI'LMENT. n. s. [from ail.] Pain; disease.

Little ailments oft attend the fair,
Not decent for a husband's eye or ear. Granville.

I am never ill, but I think of your ailments; and repine, that they mutually hinder our being together. Swift's Letters.

A'ILING. participial adj. [from To ail] Sickly; full of complaints.

To* AIM. v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from esmer, to point at; a word which I have not found.]

1. To endeavour to strike with a missive weapon; to direct towards: with the particle at.

Aim'st thou at princes, all amaz'd they said,
The last of games? Pope's Odyssey.

2. To point the view, or direct the steps, towards any thing; to tend towards; to endeavour to reach or obtain; with to formerly, now only with at.

Lo, here the world is bliss; so here the end,
To which all men do aim, rich to be made;
Such grace now, to be happy, is before thee laid.
Fairy Queen.

Another kind there is; which although we desire for itself, as health, and virtue, and knowledge; nevertheless they are not the last mark, whereat we aim; but have their further end, whereunto they are referred. Hooker.

Swoln with applause, and aiming still at more,
He now provokes the sea-gods from the shore.
Dryden's Æneid.

Religion tends, to the ease and pleasure, the peace and tranquility, of our minds; which, all the wisdom of the world did always aim at, as the utmost felicity of this life. Tillotson.

3. To guess.

To* AIM. v. a. To direct a missile weapon; more particularly taken, for the act of pointing the weapon by the eye, before its dimission from the hand

And proud Ideus, Priam's charioteer,
Who shakes his empty reins, and aims his airy spear. Dryden.

AIM. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The direction of a missile weapon.

Ascanius, young and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain of his aim:
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides. Dryden, Æn. vii. l. 691.

2. The point, to which the thing thrown is directed.

That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim;
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
Fly from the field. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

3. In a figurative sense, a purpose; a scheme; an intention; a design.

He trusted, to have equall'd the Most High,
If he oppos'd; and, with ambitious aim,
Against the throne and monarchy of God,
Rais'd impious war. Milt. Par. Lost, b. i. l. 41.

But see, how oft ambitious aims are crost;
And chiefs contend, till all the prize is lost. Pope.

4. The object of a design; the thing, after which any one endeavours.

The safest way is to suppose, that the epistle has but one aim; till (by a frequent perusal of it) you are forced to see, there are distinct independent parts. Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

5. Conjecture; guess.

It is impossible, by aim to tell it; and for experience and knowledge thereof, I do not think that, there was ever any of the particulars thereof.
Spenser on Ireland.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd:
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy
With a near aim, of the main chance of things,
As yet not come to life; which, in their seeds
And weak beginnings, lie intreasured.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

AIR. n. s. [air, Fr. aër, Lat.]

1. The element, encompassing the terraqueous globe.

If I were to tell, what I mean by the word air; I may say, it is that fine matter, which we breathe in and breathe out continually: or it is that thin fluid body, in which the birds fly, a little above the earth; or it is that invisible matter, which fills all places near the earth, or which immediately encompasses the globe of earth and water.
Watts's Logick.

2. The state of the air; or the air, considered with regard to health.

There be many good and healthful airs, that do appear by habitation and other proofs; that differ not in smell from other airs.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 904.

3. Air in motion; a small gentle wind.

Fresh gales and gentle airs
Whisper'd it to the woods; and from their wings
Flung rose, flung odours from the spicy shrub,
Disporting! Milt. Par. Lost, b. viii. l. 515.

But safe repose, without an air of breath,
Dwells here; and a dumb quiet, next to death.
Dryden.

Let vernal airs through trembling osiers play,
And Albion's cliffs resound the rural lay.
Pope's Pastorals.

4. Scent; vapour.

Stinks, which the nostrils straight abhor, are not the most pernicious; but such airs, as have some similitude with the man's body; and so insinuate themselves, and betray the spirits. Bacon.

5. Blast; pestilential vapour.

All the stor'd vengeances of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness.
Shakesp. King Lear.

6. Any thing, light or uncertain; that is as light, as air.

O momentary grace of mortal men!
Which we more hunt for, than the grace of God,
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready with ev'ry nod to tumble down.
Shakesp. Richard III.

7. The open weather; air unconfined.

The garden was inclos'd within the square,
Where young Emilia took the morning air.
Dryden's Fables.

8. Vent; utterance; emission into the air.

I would have ask'd you, if I durst for shame,
If still you lov'd: you gave it air before me.
But ah; why were we not both of a sex?
For then we might have lov'd, without a crime.
Dryden.

9. Publication; exposure to the publick view and knowledge.

I am sorry to find, it has taken air, that I have some hand in these papers. Pope's Letters.

10. Intelligence; information. This is not now in use.

It grew from the airs, which the princes and states abroad received from their ambassadors and agents here. Bacon's Henry VII.

11. Musick, whether light or serious; sound; air modulated.

This musick crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury and my passion,
With its sweet air. Shakesp. Tempest.

Call in some musick. I have heard, soft airs
Can charm our senses, and expel our cares.
Denham's Sophy.

The same airs, which some entertain with most delightful transports, to others are importune.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

Since we have such a treasury of words, so proper for the airs of musick; I wonder that, persons should give so little attention.
Addison, Spectator, No. 406

Borne on the swelling notes, our souls aspire;
While solemn airs improve the sacred fire,
And angels lean from heav'n to hear.
Pope's St. Cæcilia.

—When the soul is sunk with cares,
Exalts her in enliv'ning airs. Pope's St. Cæcilia.

12. Poetry; a song.

The repeated air
Of sad Electra's poet had the pow'r,
To save th' Athenian walls from ruin bare.
Paradise Regained.

13. The mien, or manner, of a person; the look.

Her graceful innocence, her ev'ry air,
Of gesture, or least action, over-aw'd
His malice. Milton's Paradise Lost.

For the air of youth
Hopeful and cheerful, in thy blood shall reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry,
To weigh thy spirits down, and last consume
The balm of life. Milton's Paradise Lost.

But, having the life before us, besides the experience of all they knew; it is no wonder, to hit some airs and features which they have missed.
Dryden on Dramatic Poetry.

There is something wonderfully divine, in the airs of this picture. Addison on Italy.

Yet should the Graces all thy figures place,
And breathe an air divine on ev'ry face. Pope.

14. An affected or laboured manner or gesture; as, a lofty air, a gay air.

Whom Ancus follows, with a fawning air;
But vain within, and proudly popular.
Dryd. Æneid, vi.

There are of these sort of beauties, which last but for a moment; as, the different airs of an assembly, upon the sight of an unexpected and uncommon object; some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, a look of gravity, and a thousand other such like things.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Their whole lives were employed, in intrigues of state; and they naturally give themselves airs of kings and princes, of which the ministers of other nations are only the representatives.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.

To curl their waving hairs,
Assist their blushes, and inspire their airs. Pope.

He assumes and affects an entire set of very different airs: he conceives himself, a being of a superior nature. Swift.

15. Appearance.

As it was communicated with the air of a secret, it soon found its way into the world.
Pope's Ded. to Rape of the Lock.

16. [In horsemanship.] Airs denote the artificial or practised motions of a managed horse. Chambers.

To AIR. v. a. [from the noun air.]

1. To expose to the air; to open to the air.

The others make it, a matter of small commendation in itself; if they, who wear it, do nothing else, but air the robes which their place requireth.
Hooker, b. v. § 29.

Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture; or the chamber and bed-straw kept close, and not aired.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 696.

We have had, in our time, experience twice or thrice; when, both the judges that sat upon the jail, and numbers of those that attended the business, or were present, sickened upon it, and died Therefore, it were good wisdom, that (in such cases) the jail were aired, before they were brought forth. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 914.

As the ants were airing their provisions one winter, up comes a hungry grasshopper to them, and begs a charity. L'Estrange's Fables.

Or wicker-baskets weave, or air the corn.
Dryden's Virgil.

2. To gratify, by enjoying the open air, with the reciprocal pronoun.

Nay, stay a little——
Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

I ascended the highest hills of Bagdat, in order to pass the rest of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myself, on the tops of the mountains; I fell into a profound contemplation, on the vanity of human life.
Addison Spect.

3. To air liquors; to warm them, by the fire: a term, used in conversation.

4. To breed in nests. In this sense, it is derived from aerie, a nest: it is now out of use.

You may add their busy, dangerous, discourteous, yea and sometimes despiteful stealing, one from another, of the eggs and young ones; who if they were allowed to air naturally and quietly, there would be store sufficient, to kill not only the partridges, but even all the good house-wives' chickens, in the country.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

A'IR-BLADDER. n. s. [from air and bladder.]

1. Any cuticle or vesicle, filled with air.

The pulmonary artery and vein pass along the surfaces of these air-bladders, in an infinite number of ramifications. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The bladder in fishes; by the contraction and dilatation of which, they vary the properties of their weight to that of their bulk, and rise or fall.

Though the air-bladder in fishes seems necessary for swimming, yet some are so formed, as to swim without it. Cudworth.

A'IR BUILT. adj. [from air and build.] Built in the air, without any solid foundation.

Hence the fool's paradise, the statesman's scheme,
The air-built castle, and the golden dream,
The maid's romantick wish, the chymist's flame,
And poet's vision of eternal fame.
Pope's Dunciad, b. iii.

AIR-DRAWN. adj. [from air and drawn.] Drawn or painted in air: a word not used.

This is the very painting of your fear;
This is the air-drawn dagger, which (you said)
Led you to Duncan. Shakesp. Macbeth.

A'IRER. n. s. [from To air.] He, that exposes to the air.

A'IR-GUN. n. s. A gun, charged with air instead of powder.

A'IR-HOLE. n. s. [from air and hole.] A hole to admit the air.

A'IRINESS. n. s [from airy.]

1. Openness; exposure to the air.

2. Lightness; gaiety; levity.

The French have indeed taken worthy pains, to make classick learning speak their language: if they have not succeeded, it must be imputed to a certain talkativeness and airiness represented in their tongue; which will never agree, with the sedateness of the Romans, or the solemnity of the Greeks. Felton.

A'IRING. n. s. [from air.] A short journey or ramble, to enjoy the free air.

This little fleet serves, only to fetch them wine and corn, and to give their ladies an airing in the summer season. Addison.

A'IRLESS. adj. [from air.] Wanting communication with the free air.

Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit.
Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

A'IRLING. n. s. [from air, for gayety.] A young, light, thoughtless, gay person.

Some more there be, slight airlings, will be won with dogs, and horses, and perhaps a whore.
Ben Jonson.

A'IR-PUMP. n. s. [from air and pump.] A machine, by whose means the air is exhausted out of proper vessels. The principle, on which it is built, is the elasticity of the air; as that, on which the water-pump is founded, is on the gravity of the air. The invention of this curious instrument is ascribed to Otto de Guerick, consul of Magdebourg, in 1654: but his machine laboured under several defects; the force, necessary to work it, was very great; and the progress, very slow; it was to be kept under water, and allowed of no change of subjects for experiments. Mr. Boyle, with the assistance of Dr. Hooke, removed several inconveniencies; though still the working was laborious, by reason of the pressure of the atmosphere at every exsuction: this labour has been since removed, by Mr. Hawksbee; who

(by adding a second barrel and piston, to rise as the other fell, and fall as it rose) made the pressure of the atmosphere on the descending one, of as much service, as it was of disservice in the ascending one. Vream made a further improvement, by reducion the alternate motion of the hand and winch to a circular one. Chambers

The air, that, in exhausted receivers of air-pumps, is exhaled from minerals, and flesh, and fruits, and liquors, is as true and genuine, as to elasticity and density, or rarefaction, as that we respire in: and yet this factitious air is so far, from being fit to be breathed in; that it kills animals in a moment, even sooner than the absence of air, or a vacuum itself. Bentley.

A'IR SHAFT. n. s. [from air and shaft.] A passage, for the air into mines and subterraneous places.

By the sinking of an air-shaft, the air hath liberty to circulate, and carry out the steams both of the miners breath and the damps, which would otherwise stagnate there. Ray.

A'IRY. adj. [from air; aëreus, Lat.]

1. Composed of air.

The first is the transmission, or emission, of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies; as, in odours and infections: and this is, of all the rest, the most corporeal. Bacon.

2. Relating to the air; belonging to the air.

There are fishes, that have wings, that are no strangers to the airy region. Boyle.

3. High in air

Whole rivers here forsake the fields below;
And, wond'ring at their height, through airy channels flow. Addison.

4. Open to the free air.

Joy'd to range abroad in fresh attire,
Thro' the wide compass of the airy coast. Spenser.

5. Light as air; thin; unsubstantial; without solidity.

I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow. Shak. Hamlet.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train. Dryden.

6. Wanting reality: having no steady foundation in truth or nature; vain; trifling.

Nor think, with wind
Of airy threats to awe, whom yet with deeds
Thou can'st not. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Nor (to avoid such meanness) soaring high,
With empty sound and airy notions fly. Roscommon.

I have found a complaint, concerning the scarcity of money; which occasioned many airy propositions, for the remedy of it. Temple's Miscell.

7. Fluttering; loose; as if to catch the air; full of levity.

The painters draw their nymphs, in thin and airy habits; but the weight of gold and of embroideries is reserved, for queens and goddesses. Dryden.

By this name of ladies, he means all young persons, slender, finely shaped, airy and delicate: such, as are nymphs and Naiads. Dryden.

8. Gay; sprightly; full of mirth; vivacious; lively; spirited; light of heart.

He, that is merry and airy at shore, when he sees a sad tempest on the sea; or dances, when God thunders from heaven; regards not, when God speaks to all the world. Taylor.

AISLE. n. s. [Thus the word is written by Addison, but perhaps improperly: since it seems deducible only from, either aile a wing, or allée a path; and is therefore to be written aile.] The walks in a church, or wings of a quire.

The abbey is by no means so magnificent, as one would expect from its endowments. The church is one huge nef, with a double aisle to it; and, at each end, is a large quire. Addison.

AIT, or EYGHT. n. s. [supposed, by Skinner, to be corrupted from islet.] A small island in a river.

A'JUTAGE. n. s. [ajutage, Fr.] An additional pipe to water-works. Dict.

To AKE. v. n. [from ἄχος Gr. and therefore more grammatically written ache.]

1. To feel a lasting pain, generally of the internal parts; distinguished from smart, which is commonly used of uneasiness in the external parts: but this is no accurate account.

To sue, and be deny'd such common grace,
My wounds ake at you! Shakesp.

Let our finger ake; and it endues
Our other healthful members, with a sense
Of pain. Shakesp.

Were the pleasure of drinking accompanied, the very moment, with that sick stomach and aking head, which in some men are sure to follow; I think, nobody would ever let wine touch his lips. Locke.

His limbs must ake, with daily toils opprest;
Ere long-wish'd night brings necessary rest. Prior.

2. It is frequently applied, in an improper sense, to the heart; as, the heart akes; to imply grief or fear. Shakespeare has used it, still more licentiously, of the soul.

My soul akes
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Here shame dissuades him, there his fear prevails;
And each, by turns, his aking heart assails. Addison.

AKI'N. adj. [from a and kin.]

1. Related to; allied by blood: used of persons.

I do not envy thee, Pamela; only I wish, that being thy sister in nature, I were not so far off akin in fortune. Sidney.

2. Allied to by nature; partaking of the same properties: used of things.

The cankered passion of envy is nothing akin, to the silly envy of the ass. L'Estrange's Fables.

Some limbs again, in bulk or stature
Unlike, and not akin by nature,
In concert act, like modern friends;
Because one serves the other's ends. Prior.

He separates it from questions, with which it may have been complicated; and distinguishes it from questions which may be akin to it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind

AL, ATTLE, ADLE, do all seem to be corruptions of the Saxon Æpel, noble, famous; as also Alling and Adling are corruptions of Æpelinz, noble, splendid, famous.

Al, Ald, being initials, are derived from the Saxon Ealo, ancient; and so, (often times) the initial all, being melted by the Normans from the Saxon ealo. Gibson's Camden.

A'LABASTER. n. s. [ἀλάβαστρον.] A kind of soft marble, easier to cut, and less durable, than the other kinds; some is white, which is most common; some of the colour of horn, and transparent; some yellow, like honey, marked with veins. The ancients used it, to make boxes for perfumes. Savary.

Yet I'll not shed her blood;
Nor scar that whiter skin of hers, than snow;
And smooth, as monumental alabaster. Shakesp.

A'LABASTER. adj. Made of alabaster.

I cannot forbear mentioning part of an alabaster column, found in the ruins of Livia's portico. It is of the colour of fire; and may be seen, over the high altar of St. Maria in Campitello; for they have cut it, into two pieces; and fixed it, in the shape of a cross, in a hole of the wall; so that the light passing through it, makes it look (to those in the church) like a huge transparent cross of amber. Addison on Italy.

ALA'CK. interject. [This word seems only the corruption of alas.] Alas; an expression of sorrow.

Alack! when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

At thunder now no more I start,
Than at the rumbling of a cart:
Nay (what's incredible) alack!
I hardly hear a woman's clack. Swift.

ALA'CKADAY. interject. [This, like the former, is for alas the day.] A word, noting sorrow and melancholy.

ALA'CRIOUSLY. adv. [from alacrious, supposed to be formed from alacris: but, of alacrious, I have found no example.] Cheerfully; without dejection.

Epaminondas alacriously expired, in confidence that he left behind him a perpetual memory of the victories he had achieved for his country. Government of the Tongue.

ALA'CRITY. n. s. [alacritas, Lat.] Cheerfulness, expressed by some outward token; sprightliness; gayety; liveliness; cheerful willingness.

These orders were, on all sides, yielded unto with no less alacrity of mind; than cities, unable to hold out any longer, are wont to shew: when they take conditions, such as it liketh him to offer them, which hath them in the narrow straits of advantage. Hooker.

Give me a bowl of wine:
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Shakesp.

He, glad that now his sea should find a shore,
With fresh alacrity and force renew'd,
Springs upward. Milton's Par. Lost.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to fly:
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if, to praise them, all the states stood by. Dryden.

ALAMIRE n s. The lowest note but one, in Guido Aretine's scale of musick.

ALAMO'DE adv. [à la mode, Fr.] According to the fashion: a low word. It is used likewise by shopkeepers, for a kind of thin silken manufacture.

ALA'ND. adv. [from a for at, and land.] At land; landed; on the dry ground.

He only, with the prince his cousin, were cast aland; far off from the place, whither their desires would have guided them. Sidney.

Three more fierce Eurus, in his angry mood,
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving sand;
And, in mid ocean, left them moor'd aland. Dryden.

ALA'RM. n. s. [from the French à l'arme, to arms; as, crier à l'arme to call to arms.]

1. A cry, by which men are summoned to their arms, as, at the approach of an enemy.

When the congregation is to be gathered together, you shall blow; but you shall not sound an alarm. Numbers.

God himself is with us, for our captain; and his priests with sounding trumpets, to cry alarms against you. Chron. xiii. 12.

The trumpet's loud clangour
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden.

Taught by this stroke, renounce the war's alarms;
And learn to tremble, at the name of arms.
Pope's Iliad.

2. A cry, or notice of any danger approaching; as, an alarm of fire.

3. Any tumult or disturbance.

Crowds of rivals, for thy mother's charms,
Thy palace fill with insults and alarms.
Pope's Odyssey.

To ALA'RM. v. a. [from alarm, the noun.]

1. To call to arms.

2. To disturb; as, with the approach of an enemy.

The wasp the hive alarms
With louder hums, and with unequal arms.
Addison.

3. To surprise with the apprehension of any danger.

When rage misguides me, or when fear alarms,
When pain distresses, or when pleasure charms.
Tickell.

4. To disturb in general.

His son, Cupavo, brush'd the briny flood:
Upon his stern, a brawny Centaur stood;
Who heav'd a rock; and, threat'ning still to throw,
With lifted hands, alarm'd the seas below. Dryden.

ALA'RM-BELL. n. s. [from alarm and bell.] The bell, that is rung at the approach of an enemy.

Th' alarm-bell rings, from our Alhambra walls,
And, from the streets, sound drums and ataballes
Dryden

ALA'RMING. particip. adj. [from alarm.] Terrifying; awakening; surprising; as, an alarming message; an alarming pain.

ALA'RM-POST. n. s. [from alarm and post.] The post or place, appointed to each body of men to appear at, when an alarm shall happen.

ALA'RUM. n. s. [corrupted, as it seems, from alarm. See ALARM.]

Now are our brows bound, with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up, for monuments;
Our stern alarums chang'd, to merry meetings.
Shakespeare.

That Almatro might better hear,
She sets a drum at either ear;
And loud or gentle, harsh or sweet,
Are but th' alarums, which they beat. Prior.

To ALA'RUM. v. a. [corrupted from To alarm.] See ALARM.

Withered murder
(Alarum'd by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch) thus, with his stealthy pace,
Moves like a ghost. Shakespeare.

ALA'S. interject. [helas, Fr. eylaes, Dutch.]

1. A word expressing lamentation, when we use it of ourselves.

But yet, alas! O but yet, alas! our haps be but hard haps. Sidney.

Alas, how little from the grave we claim!
Thou but preserv'st a form, and I a name. Pope.

2. A word of pity, when used of other persons.

Alas, poor Protheus! thou hast entertain'd
A fox, to be the shepherd of thy lambs. Shakesp.

3. A word of sorrow and concern, when used of things.

Thus saith the Lord God; 'Smite with thine 'hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say Alas! 'for all the evil abominations of the house of 'Israel.' Ezekiel.

Alas! both for the deed, and for the cause! Milton.

Alas! for pity of this bloody field:
Piteous indeed must be; when I, a spirit,
Can have so soft a sense of human woes. Dryden.

ALAS-A-DAY. } interject. Ah! unhap-
ALAS-THE-DAY. } py day!

Alas-the-day! I never gave him cause. Shakesp.

Alas-a-day! you have ruined my poor mistress: you have made a gap, in her reputation; and can you blame her, if she make it up with her husband? Congreve.

ALAS-THE-WHILE. interject. Ah! unhapy time!

All as the sheep, such was the shepherd's look;
For pale and wan he was, alas-the-while!
May seem, he lov'd or else some care he took.
Spenser.

ALA'TE. adv. [from a and late.] Lately; no long time ago.

ALB n. s. [album, Lat.] A surplice; a white linen vestment, worn by priests.

ALBE. } adv. [a coalition of the words
ALBE'IT. } all be it so. Skinner.] Although; notwithstanding; though it should be.

Ne wou'd he suffer sleep once thitherward
Approach, albe his drowsy den was next. Spenser.

Thir very thing is cause sufficient; why duties, belonging to each kind of virtue (albeit the law of reason teach them) should notwithstanding be prescribed, even by human law. Hooker.

One, whose eyes
(Albeit, unused to the melting mood)
Drop tears as fast, as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakesp.

He, who has a probable belief, that he shall meet with thieves in such a road, thinks himself to have reason enough to decline it; albeit he is sure, to sustain some less (though yet considerable) inconvenience, by his so doing. South's Sermons.

ALBU'GINEOUS. adj. [albugo, Lat.] Resembling the white of an egg.

Eggs will freeze in the albuginous part thereof.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I opened it by incision, giving vent, first to an albuginous, then to white concocted matter, upon which the tumour sunk. Wiseman's Surgery.

ALBU'GO. n. s. [Lat.] A disease in the eye, by which the cornea contracts a whiteness. The same, with leucoma.

A'LBURN-COLOUR. n. s. See AUBURN.

A'LCAHEST. n s. An Arabick word, to express an universal dissolvent; pretended to, by Paracelsus and Helmont. Quincy.

ALCA'ID. n. s. [from al, Arab, and קרקד, the head.]

1. In Barbary, the governour of a castle.

Th' alcaid
Shuns me; and with a grim civility,
Bows, and declines my walks Dryden.

2. In Spain, the judge of a city; first instituted by the Saracens. Du Cange.

ALCA'NNA. n. s. An Egyptian plant, used in dying; the leaves making a yellow, infused in water; and a red, in acid liquors.

The root of alcanna, though green, will give a red stain. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALCHY'MICAL. adj. [from alchymy.] Relating to alchymy; produced by alchymy.

The rose-noble, then current for six shillings and eight pence, the alchymists do affirm as an unwritten verity, was made by projection or multiplication alchymical of Raymond Lully in the tower of London. Camden's Remains.

ALCHY'MICALLY. adv. [from alchymical.] In the manner of an alchymist; by means of alchymy.

Raymond Lully would prove it alchymically.
Camden.

A'LCHYMIST. n. s. [from alchymy.] One, who pursues or professes the science of alchymy.

To solemnize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchymist;
Turning, with splendour of his precious eye,
The meagre cloddy earth to glittering gold.
Shakesp. King John.

Every alchymist knows, that gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time without any change; and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear in its own form. Grew.

A'LCHYMY. n. s [of al, Arab, and χυμία.]

1. The more sublime and occult part of chymistry; which proposes, for its object, the transmutation of metals, and other important operations.

There is nothing more dangerous, than this deluding art; which changeth the meaning of words, as alchymy doth (or would do) the substance of metals, maketh of any thing, what it listeth: and bringeth, in the end, all truth to nothing. Hooker.

O he sits high, in all the people's hearts;
And that, which would appear offence in us
His countenance, like richest alchymy,
Will change to virtue and to worthiness.
Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Compared to this,
All honour's mimick; all wealth, alchymy. Donne.

2. A kind of mixed metal, used for spoons and kitchen utensils.

White alchymy is made, of pan-brass one pound, and arsenicum three ounces; or alchymy is made of copper and auripigmentum.
Bacon's Physical Remains.

They bid cry,
With trumpets regal sound, the great result:
Tow'rds the four winds, four speedy cherubims
Put to their mouths the sounding alchymy,
By herald's voice explained. Milt. Par. Lost.

A'LCOHOL. n. s. An Arabick term used by chymists, for a high rectified dephlegmated spirit of wine, or for any thing reduced into an impalpable powder. Quincy.

If the same salt shall be reduced into alcohol, as the chymists speak, or an impalpable powder, the particles and intercepted spaces will be extremely lessened. Boyle.

Sal volatile oleosum will coagulate the serum, on account of the alcohol (or rectified spirit) which it contains. Arbuthnot.

ALCOHOLIZA'TION. n. s. [from alcoholize.] The act of alcoholizing or rectifying spirits; or of reducing bodies, to an impalpable powder.

To A'LCOHOLIZE. v. a [from alcohol.]

1. To make an alchol; that is, to rectify spirits, till they are wholly dephlegmated.

2. To comminute powder, till it is wholly without roughness.

A'LCORAN. n. s. [al and koran, Arab.] The book of the Mahometan precepts and credenda.

If this would satisfy the conscience, we might not only take the present covenant, but subscribe to the council of Trent; yea, and to the Turkish alcoran; and swear, to maintain and defend either of them. Saunderson against the Covenant.

ALCO'VE. n. s. [alcoba, Span.] A recess, or part of a chamber; separated by an estrade or partition, and other correspondent ornaments; in which is placed a bed of state, and sometimes seats to entertain company. Trevoux.

The weary'd champion lull'd in soft alcoves,
The noblest boast of thy romantick groves:
Oft, if the muse presage, shall he be seen
By Rosamonda fleeting o'er the green,
In dreams he hail'd by heroes' mighty shades,
And hear old Chaucer warble through the glades.
Tickell

Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
And slept beneath the pompous colonnade
Pope's Odyssey

A'LDER. n. s. [alnus, Lat.] A tree, having leaves resembling those of the hazel: the male flowers, or katkins, are produced at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the fruit is squamose, and of a conical figure: the species are, 1. The common or round-leaved alder; 2. The long leaved alder; 3. The scarlet alder. These trees delight in a very moist soil: the wood is used by turners; and will endure long, under ground, or in water. Miller.

Without the grot, a various sylvan scene
Appear'd around, and groves of living green,
Poplars and alders ever-quivering play'd,
And nodding cypress form'd a fragrant shade.
Pope's Odyssey

ALDERLI'EVEST. adj. superl. [from ald, alder, old, elder, and lieve, dear beloved.] Most beloved; which has held the longest possession of the heart.

The mutual confer ence, that my mind hath had
(In courtly company, or at my beads)
With you, mine alderliefest sovereign,
Makes me the bolder Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.

A'LDERMAN. n. s. [from ald, old, and man.]

1. The same, as senator; Cowell. A governour or magistrate, originally (as the name imports) chosen on account of the experience, which his age had given him.

Tell him, 'Myself, the mayor, and aldermen,
'Are come to have some conference with his grace.'
Shakespeare

Though my own aldermen conferr'd my bays,
To me committing their eternal praise,
Their full fed heroes, their pacifick mayors,
Their annual trophies and their monthly wars
Pope's Dunciad

2. In the following passage it is, I think, improperly used.

But, if the trumpet's clangour you abhor,
And dare not be an alderman of war,
Take to a shop, behind a counter lie Dry. Juv. Sat.

A'LDERMANLY. adv. [from alderman.] Like an alderman; belonging to an alderman.

These, and many more, suffered death, in envy to their virtues and superior genius, which emboldened them, in exigencies wanting an aldermanly discretion, to attempt service out of the common forms Swift's Miscellanies

A'LDERN. adj. [from alder.] Made of alder.

Then aldern boats first plow'd the ocean.
May's Virgil.

ALE. n. s. [eale, Sax.]

1. A liquor, made by infusing malt in hot water, and then fermenting the liquor.

You must be seeing christenings. Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals?
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

The fertility of the soil in grain, and its being not proper for vines, put the Egyptians upon drinking ale, of which they were the inventors. Arbuth.

2. A merry meeting, used in country places.

And all the neighbourhood, from old records
Of antick proverbs drawn from Whitson lords,
And their authorities at wakes and ales,
With country precedents and old wives tales,
We bring you now. Ben Jonson

A'LE-BERRY. n. s. [from ale and berry.] A beverage, made by boiling ale, with spice and sugar, and sops of bread: a word, now only used in conversation.

Their ale-berries, cawdles, possets, each one,
Syllibubs made at the milking pale,
But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale Bean.

A'LE BREWER. n. s. [from ale and brewer.] One that professes to brew ale.

The summer-made malt brews ill, and is disliked by most of our ale-brewers Mortimer's Husb.

A'LE CONNER. n. s. [from ale, and to con.] An officer, in the city of London; whose business is, to inspect the measures of publick houses. Four of them are chosen (or rechosen) annually, by the common-hall of the city; and, what ever might be their use formerly, their places are now regarded only as sinecures for decayed citizens.

A'LE-COST. n. s. [perhaps from ale and costus, Lat.] The name of an herb. Dict.

ALECTRYOMANCY, or ALECTOROMANCY. n. s. [ἀλεκτρυὼν, and μάντις.] Divination by a cock. Dict.

A'LEGAR n. s. [from ale, and eager sour] Sour ale; a kind of acid, made by ale; as vinegar by wine, which has lost its spirit

A'LEGER. adj. [allegre, Fr. alacris, Lat.] Gay; cheerful; sprightly: a word, not now used.

Coffee, the root and leaf betle, and leaf tobacco, of which the Turks are great takers, do all condense the spirits, and make them strong and aleger Bacon's Natural History

A'LE-HOOF. n. s. [from ale and hoof, head.] Groundivy; so called by our Saxon ancestors, as being their chief ingredient in ale. An herb.

Alehoof or groundivy, is, in my opinion, of the most excellent and most general use and virtue, of any plants we have among us. Temple

A'LE-HOUSE. n. s. [from ale and house.] A house where ale is publickly sold; a tipling-house. It is distinguished from a tavern, where they sell wine.

Thou, most beauteous inn!
Why should hard favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an ale-house guest?
Shakespeare

One would think it should be no easy matter, to bring any man of sense in love with an ale-house, indeed of so much sense, as seeing and smelling amounts to, there being such strong encounters of both, as would quickly send him packing, did not the love of good fellowship reconcile to these nuisances South

Thee shall each ale-house, thee each gill-house mourn,
And answ'ring ginshops sourer sighs return Pope

A'LE-HOUSE-KEEPER. n. s. [from ale-house and keeper.] He that keeps ale publickly to sell.

You resemble perfectly the two alehouse-keepers in Holland, who were at the same time burgomasters of the town, and taxed one another's bills alternately. Letter to Swift

A'LE-KNIGHT. n. s. [from ale, and knight.] A pot companion; a tippler: a word now out of use.

The old ale-knights of England were well depainted by Hanville, in the ale-house colours of that time. Camden.

ALE'MBICK. n. s. A vessel, used in distilling; consisting of a vessel placed over a fire, in which is contained the substance to be distilled; and a concave, closely fitted on, into which the fumes arise by the heat: this cover has a beak or spout, into which the vapours rise; and by which they pass into a serpentine pipe, which is kept cool by making many convolutions in a tub of water; here the vapours are condensed; and what entered the pipe in fumes comes out in drops.

Though water may be rarefied, into invisible vapours, yet it is not changed into air, but only scattered into minute parts, which meeting together in the alembick, or in the receiver, do presently return into such water, as they constituted before Boyle.

ALENGTH. adv. [from a for at, and length.] At full length; along; stretched along the ground.

ALERT. adj. [alerte, Fr. perhaps from alacris; but probably from à l'art, according to art or rule.]

1. In the military sense, on guard; watchful; vigilant; ready at a call.

2. In the common sense, brisk; pert; petulant; smart; inplying some degree of censure and contempt.

I saw an alert young fellow, that cocked his hat upon a friend of his, and accosted him, 'Well 'Jack, the old prig is dead at last.' Addis. Spec.

ALE'RTNESS. n. s. [from alert.] The quality of being alert; sprightliness; pertness

That alertness and unconcern for matters of common life, a campaign or two would infallibly have given him Addison, Spectator.

A'LE TASTER. n. s. [from ale, and taster.] An officer appointed in every court leet; and sworn to look to the assize and the goodness of bread, and ale or beer, within the precincts of that lordship. Cowell.

A'LE VAT. n. s. [from ale and vat] The tub, in which the ale is fermented.

A'LEW. n. s. Clamour; outcry. Not in use. Spenser.

A'LE-WASHED. adj. [from ale and wash.] Steeped or soaked in ale; not now in use.

What, a band of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming battles and ale-washed wits, is wonderful to be thought on Shakespeare

A'LE-WIFE. n. s. [from ale and wife.] A woman that keeps an ale-house.

Perhaps he will swagger and hector, and threaten to beat and butcher an ale-wife; or take the goods by force, and throw them down the bad halfpence Swift's Draper's Letters.

A'LEXANDERS. n. s. [smyrnium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

A'LEXANDER'S FOOT. n. s. The name of an herb.

ALEXA'NDRINE. n. s. A kind of verse, borrowed from the French; first used in a poem, called Alexander. They consist, among the French, of twelve and thirteen syllables, in alternate couplets; and, among us, of twelve.

Our numbers should, for the most part be lyrical. For variety, or rather where the majesty of thought requires it, they may be stretched to the English heroic of five feet, and to the French Alexandrine of six. Dryden.

Then, at the last and only couplet, fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought;
A needless Alexandrine ends the song;
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

ALEXIPHA'RMICK. adj. [from ἀλέξω and φάρμακον.] That, which drives away poison; antidotal; that, which opposes infection.

Some antidotal quality, it may have; since, not only the bone in the heart, but the horn of a deer, is alexipharmick. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALEXITE'RICAL, or ALEXITE'RICK. adj. [from ἀλέξω] That which drives away poison; that which resists fevers.

A'LGATES. adv. [from all and gate. Skinner. Gate is the same as via; and still used for way in the Scottish dialect.] On any term; every way; now obsolete.

Nor had the boaster ever risen more,
But that Renaldo's horse ev'n then down fell;
And, with the fall, his leg oppress'd so sore;
That, for a space, there must he algates dwell. Fairfax.

A'LGEBRA. n. s. [an Arabic word, of uncertain etymology: derived, by some, from Geber the philosopher; by some, from gefr, parchment; by others, from algehista, a bonesetter: by Menage from algiabarat, the restitution of things broken.] A peculiar kind of arithmetick; which takes the quantity sought, whether it be a number or a line, or any other quantity, as if it were granted; and, by means of one or more quantities given, proceeds by consequence, till the quantity (at first only supposed to be known, or at least some power thereof) is found to be equal to some quantity or quantities, which are known; and consequently itself is known. This art was in use among the Arabs, long before it came into this part of the world: and they are supposed to have borrowed it, from the Persians, and the Persians from the Indians. The first Greek author of algebra was Diophantus; who, about the year 800, wrote thirteen books: in 1494, Lucas Pacciolus (or Lucas de Burgos) a cordelier, printed a treatise of algebra in Italian, at Venice: he says, that algebra came originally from the Arabs. After several improvements, by Vieta, Oughtred, Harriot, Descartes; Sir Isaac Newton brought this art to the height, at which it still continues. Trev. Cham.

It would surely require no very profound skill in algebra, to reduce the difference of nunepence in thirty shillings. Swift.

ALGEBRA'ICK. } adj. [from algebra.]
ALGEBRA'ICAL. }

1. Relating to algebra; as, an algebraical treatise.
2. Containing operations of algebra; as, an algebraical computation

ALGEBRA'IST. n. s. [from algebra.] A person, that understands or practises the science of algebra

When any dead body is found in England, no algebraist or uncipherer can use more subtle suppositions, to find the demonstration or cipher; than every unconcerned person doth, to find the murderers.. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

Confining themselves, to the synthetick and analytick methods of geometricians and algebraists; they have too much narrowed the rules of method, as though every thing were to be treated in mathematical forms. Watts's Logick.

A'LGID. adj. [algidus, Lat.] Cold; chill. Dict.

ALGI'DITY. } n. s. [from algid.] Chilli-
A'LGIDNESS. } ness; cold. Dict.

ALGI'FIC. adj. [from algor, Lat.] That, which produces cold. Dict.

A'LGOR. n. s. [Lat.] Extreme cold; chilliness. Dict.

A'LGORISM. } n. s. Arabic words; which A'LGORITHM. } are used, to imply the six operations of arithmetick, or the science of numbers. Dict.

ALGO'SE. adj. [from algor, Lat.] Extremely cold; chill. Dict.

A'LIAS. adv. A Latin word, signifying otherwise; often used in the trials of criminals, whose danger has obliged them to change their names: as, Simson, alias Smith, alias Baker; that is, otherwise Smith, otherwise Baker.

A'LIBLE. adj. [alibilis, Lat.] Nutritive; nourishing; or that which may be nourished. Dict.

A'LIEN. adj. [alienus, Lat.]

1. Foreign, or not of the same family or land.

The mother plant admires the leaves unknown
Of alien trees, and apples not her own. Dryden.

From native soil
Exil'd by fate, torn from the tender embrace
Of his young guiltless progeny, he seeks
Inglorious shelter in an alien land. Philips.

2. Estranged from; not allied to; adverse to: with the particle from, and sometimes to, but improperly.

To declare my mind to the disciples of the fire by a similitude not alien from their profession. Boyle.

The sentiment, that arises, is a conviction of the deplorable state of nature, to which sin reduced us; a weak, ignorant creature, alien from God and goodness, and a prey to the great destroyer. Rogers's Sermons.

They encouraged persons and principles, alien from our religion and government, in order to strengthen their faction. Swift's Miscellanies.

A'LIEN. n. s. [alienus, Lat.]

1. A foreigner; not a denison; a man of another country or family; one, not allied; a stranger.

In whomsoever these things are, the church doth acknowledge them for her children: them only she holdeth for aliens and strangers, in whom these things are not found. Hooker.

If it be prov'd against an alien,
He seeks the life of any citizen;
The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize on half his goods. Shak. Merch. of Ven.

The mere Irish were not only accounted aliens, but enemies; so as it was no capital offence, to kill them. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supply'd;
And art almost an alien, to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood. Shakes.

The lawgiver condemned the persons, who sat idle in divisions dangerous to the government, as aliens to the community, and therefore to be cut off from it. Addison, Freeholder.

2. In law.

An alien is one, born in a strange country, and never enfranchised. A man, born out of the land, so it be within the limits beyond the seas, or of English parents out of the king's obedience, so the parents (at the time of the birth) be of the king's obedience, is not alien: if one, born out of the king's allegiance, come and dwell in England; his children (if he beget any here) are not aliens, but denisons. Cowell.

To A'LIEN. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To make any thing the property of another.

If the son alien lands, and then repurchase them again in fee; the rules of descents are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser. Hale's History of Common Law.

2. To estrange; to turn the mind or affection; to make averse: with from.

The king was disquieted, when he found that, the prince was totally alienedfrom all thoughts of, or inclination to the marriage. Clarendon.

A'LIENABLE. adj. [from To alienate.] That, of which the property may be transferred.

Land is alienable, and treasure is transitory; and both must pass from him, by his own voluntary act, or by the violence of others, or at least by fate. Dennis's Letters.

To A'LIENATE. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To transfer the property of any thing to another.

The countries of the Turks were once Christian, and members of the church, and where the golden candlesticks did stand; though now they be utterly alienated, and no Christians left. Bacon.

2. To withdraw the heart or affections: with the particle from, where the first possessor is mentioned.

The manner of men's writing must not alienate our hearts from the truth. Hooker.

Be it never so true, which we teach the world to believe; yet, if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

His eyes survey'd the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah. Milton's Par. Lost.

Any thing, that is apt to disturb the world, and to alienate the affections of men from one another, such as cross and distasteful humours; is, either expressly, or by clear consequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Testament. Tillotson

Her mind was quite alienated, from the honest Castilian; whom she was taught to look upon, as a formal old fellow, Addison.

A'LIENATE. adj. [alienatus, Lat.] Withdrawn from; stranger to: with the particle from.

The Whigs are damnably wicked; impatient, for the death of the queen; ready to gratify their ambition and revenge by all desperate methods; wholly alienate, from truth, law, religion, mercy, conscience, or honour. Swift's Miscellanies.

ALIENA'TION. n s. [alienatio, Lat.]

1. The act, of transferring property.

This ordinance was, for the maintenance of their lands in their posterity, and for excluding all innovation or alienation thereof unto strangers. Spenser's State of Ireland.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, to give a check to sacrilege. Her successour passed a law, which prevented all future alienations of the church revenues. Atterbury.

Great changes and alienations of property have created new and great dependencies. Swift on Athens and Rome.

2. The state, of being alienated; as, the state was wasted during its alienation.
3. Change of affection.

It is left, but in dark memory; what was the ground of his defection, and the alienation of his heart from the king. Bacon.

4. Applied to the mind, it means disorder of the faculties.

Some things are done by man, though not through outward force and impulsion; though not against, yet without, their wills; as, in alienation of mind, or any like inevitable utter absence of wit and judgment. Hooker.

ALI'FEROUS. adj. [from ala and fero, Lat.] Having wings. Dict.

ALI'GEROUS. adj. [aliger, Lat.] Having wings; winged. Dict.

To ALI'GGE. v. a. [from a, and lig to lie down.] To lay; to allay; to throw down; to subdue: an old word, even in the time of Spenser; now, wholly forgotten.

Thomalin, why sitten we so,
As weren overwent with woe,
Upon so fair a morrow?
The joyous time now nigheth fast,
That shall aligge this bitter blast,
And slake the winter sorrow.
Spenser's Pastorals.

To ALI'GHT. v. n. [ahlıtan, Sax. aflichten, Dutch.]

1. To come down, and stop. The word implies the idea of descending; as, of a bird, from the wing; a traveller, from his horse or carriage; and generally, of resting or stopping.

There ancient night arriving, did alight
From her high weary waine. Fairy Queen
There is alighted, at your gate,
A young Venetian. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice
Slackness breeds worms; but the sure traveller,
Though he alights sometimes, still goeth on.
Herbert
When marching with his foot, he walks till night,
When with his horse, he never will alight.
Denham.
When Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore;
To the Cumean coast, at length he came;
And, here alighting, built this costly frame.
Dryden's Æneid.
When he was admonished by his subject to descend, he came down (gently, and circling in the air, and singing) to the ground: like a lark, melodious in her mounting, and continuing her song till she alights; still preparing for a higher flight, at her next sally. Dryden.
When finish'd was the fight,
The victors from their lusty steeds alight:
Like them, dismounted all the warlike train.
Dryden.
Should a spirit of superior rank, a stranger to human nature, alight upon the earth, what would his notions of us be? Addison, Spectator.

2. It is used also, of any thing thrown or falling; to fall upon.

But storms of stones, from the proud temple's height,
Pour down; and, on our batter'd helms, alight.
Dryden.

ALI'KE. adv. [from a and like.] With resemblance; without difference; in the same manner; in the same form. In some expressions, it has the appearance of an adjective, but is always an adverb.

The darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth, as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee. Psalm cxxxix. 12.
With thee conversing, I forget all time;
All seasons, and their change, all please alike.
Paradise Lost.
Riches cannot rescue from the grave,
Which claims alike the monarch and the slave.
Dryden.
Let us unite, at least in an equal zeal, for those capital doctrines; which we all equally embrace, and are alike concerned to maintain. Atterbury.
Two handmaids wait the throne; alike, in place;
But diff'ring far, in figure and in face. Pope.

A'LIMENT. n. s. [alimentum, Lat.] Nourishment; that, which nourishes; nutriment; food.

New parts are added, to our substance; and, as we die, we are born, daily; nor can we give an account, how the aliment is prepared for nutrition; or, by what mechanism, it is distributed. Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.
All bodies, which (by the animal faculties) can be changed into the fluids and solids of our bodies, are called aliments. In the largest sense; by aliment, I understand every thing, which a human creature takes in common diet; as, meat, drink; and seasoning, as salt, spice, vinegar. Arbuthnot.

ALIME'NTAL. adj. [from aliment] That, which has the quality of aliment; that, which nourishes; that, which feeds.

The sun, that light imparts to all, receives
(From all) his alimental recompense,
In humid exhalations. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Except they be watered, from higher regions; these weeds must lose their alimental sap, and wither. Brown.
Th' industrious, when the sun in Leo rides,
Forget not, at the foot of every plant,
To sink a circling trench, and daily pour
A just supply of alimental streams,
Exhausted sap recruiting. Philips.

ALIME'NTALLY. adv. [from alimental.] So, as to serve for nourishment.

The substance of gold is invincible, by the powerfullest heat; and that, not only alimentally in a substantial mutation, but also medicamentally in any corporeal conversion.
Brown's Vulgar Errours

ALIME'NTARINESS. n s. [from alimentary.] The quality, of being alimentary, or of affording nourishment. Dict.

ALIME'NTARY. adj. [from aliment.]

1. That, which belongs or relates to aliment.

The solution of the aliment by mastication is necessary: without it, the aliment could not be disposed for the changes, which it receives, as it passeth through the alimentary duct.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. That, which has the quality of aliment, or the power of nourishing.

I do not think that, water supplies animals, or even plants, with nourishment; but serves, for a vehicle to the alimentary particles, to convey and distribute them to the several parts of the body.
Ray on the Creation.
Of alimentary roots, some are pulpy and very nutritious; as, turnips and carrots. These have a fattening quality. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ALIMENTA'TION. n. s. [from aliment.]

1. The power of affording aliment; the quality of nourishing.

2. The state, of being nourished by assimilation of matter received.

Plants do nourish; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation.
Bacon's Natural History.

ALIMO'NIOUS. adj. [from alimony.] That, which nourishes: a word very little in use.

The plethora renders us lean, by suppressing our spirits, whereby they are incapacitated, of digesting the Alimonious humours into flesh.
Harvey on Consumptions.

A'LIMONY. n. s. [alimonia, Lat.] Alimony signifies that legal proportion of the husband's estate; which, by the sentence of the ecclesiastical court, is allowed to the wife for her maintenance, upon the account of any separation from him; provided, it be not caused by her elopement or adultery. Ayliffe's Parerg

Before they settled hands and hearts,
Till alimony or death them parts. Hudibras.

A'LIQUANT. adj [aliquantus, Lat.] Parts of a number; which, however repeated, will never make up the number exactly; as, 3 is an aliquant of 10; thrice 3 being 9; and four times 3 making 12.

A'LIQUOT. adj. [aliquot, Lat.] Aliquot parts of any number or quantity; such, as will exactly measure it, without any remainder: as, 3 is an aliquot part of 12; because, being taken four times, it will just measure it.

A'LISH. adj [from ale.] Resembling ale; having qualties of ale.

Stirring it, and beating down the yeast, gives it the sweet alish taste. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'LITURE. n. s. [alitura, Lat.] Nourishment. Dict.

ALI'VE. adj. [from a and live.]

1. In a state of life; not dead.

Nor well alive, nor wholly dead, they were;
But some faint signs of feeble life appear.
Dryden.
Not youthful kings, in battle seiz'd alive;
Not scornful virgins, who their charms survive.
Pope.

2. In a figurative sense, unextinguished; undestroyed; active; in full force.

Those good and learned men had reason to wish, that their proceedings might be favoured; and the good affection of such, as inclined toward them, kept alive. Hooker.

3. Cheerful; sprightly; full of alacrity.

She was not so much alive, the whole day; if she slept more, than six hours. Clarissa

4. In a popular sense, it is used only to add an emphasis, like the French du monde; as, the best man alive; that is, the best, with an emphasis. This sense has been long in use, and was once admitted into serious writings; but is now merely ludicrous.

And to those brethren said, rise, rise by-live;
And unto battle do yourselves address:
For yonder comes the prowest knight alive,
Prince Arthur, flower of grace and nobiless.
Fairy Queen.
The Earl of Northumberland, who was the proudest man alive, could not look upon the destruction of monarchy with any pleasure.
Clarendon.
John was quick, and understood business; but no man alive was more careless, in looking into his accounts. Arbuthnot

A'LKAHEST. n. s. A word used first by Paracelsus, and adopted by his followers, to signify an universal dissolvent; or liquor, which has the power of resolving all things into their first principles.

ALKALE'SCENT. adj. [from alkali.] That, which has a tendency to the properties of an alkali.

All animal diet is alkalescent or anti-acid.
Arbuthnot.

A'LKALI. n. s. [The word alkali comes from an herb; called by the Egyptians, kali; by us, glasswort. This herb they burnt to ashes; boiled them in water; and, after having evaporated the water, there remained at the bottom a white salt: this they called sal kali, or alkali. It is corrosive; producing putrefaction in animal substances, to which it is applied. Arbuthnot on Aliments] Any substance, which, when mingled with acid, produces effervescence and fermentation.

A'LKALINE. adj. [from alkali.] That, which has the qualities of alkali.

Any watery liquor will keep an animal from starving very long, by diluting the fluids, and consequently keeping them from an alkaline state. People have lived twenty-four days, upon nothing but water. Arbuthnot.

To ALKA'LIZATE. v. a. [from alkali.] To make bodies alkaline, by changing their nature, or by mixing alkalies with them.

ALKA'LIZATE. adj. [from alkali.] That, which has the qualities of alkali; that, which is impregnated with alkali.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that, which it discovers, being dissolved in hot water, is different, being of kin to that of other alkalisate salts. Boyle.

The colour of violets in their syrup, by acid liquors, turns red; and, by urinous and alkalizate, turns green. Newton.

ALKALIZA'TION. n. s. [from alkali.] The act, of alkalizating, or impregnating bodies with alkali.

A'LKANET. n. s. [anchusa, Lat.] The name of a plant. This plant is a species of bugloss, with a red root; brought from the southern parts of France, and used in medicine. Miller.

ALKEKE'NGI. n. s. A medicinal fruit or berry, produced by a plant of the same denomination; popularly also called winter-cherry; the plant bears a near resemblance, to Solanum or Nightshade; whence it is frequently called in Latin by that name, with the addition or epithet of vesicarium. Chambers.

ALKE'RMES. n. s. In medicine, a term borrowed from the Arabs; denoting a celebrated remedy, of the consistence of a confection; whereof the kermes berries are the basis. The other ingredients are, pippin-cyder, rose-water, sugar, ambergrease, musk, cinnamon, aloes wood, pearls, and leaf-gold; but the sweets are usually omitted. The confectio Alkermes is chiefly made at Montpellier: the grain, which gives it the denomination, is no where found so plentifully, as there. Chambers.

ALL. adj. [Æll, Æal, ealle, alle, Sax. oll, Welsh; al, Dutch; alle, Germ. ὅλος, Gr.]

1. Being the whole number; every one.

Brutus is an honourable man:
So are they all; all, honourable men.
Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

To graze the herb all leaving,
Devour'd each other. Milton's Parad. Lost.

The great encouragement of all, is the assurance of a future reward. Tillotson.

2. Being the whole quantity; every part.

Six days thou shalt labour, and do all thy work. Deut. v. 13.

Political power I take to be a right, of making laws with penalties; and of employing the force of the community, in the execution of such laws, and in the defence of the commonwealth; and all this, only for the public good. Locke.

3. The whole quantity, applied to duration of time.

On those pastures cheerful spring,
All the year, doth sit and sing;
And rejoicing, smiles to see,
Their green backs wear his livery. Crashaw.

4. The whole extent of place.

Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, — more, than any man in all Venice.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

ALL. adv. [See ALL, adj.]

1. Quite; completely.

How is my love all ready forth to come. Spenser.

Know, Rome, that all alone Marcus did fight
Within Corioli gates. Shakesp. Coriolanus

He swore so loud;
That, all amaz'd, the priest let fall the book. Shaks.

The Saxons could call a comet, a fixed star; which is all one, with stella crinita or cometa.
Camden's Remains.

For a large conscience is all one,
And signifies the same with none. Hudibras.

Balm, from a silver box distill'd around,
Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground. Dryden.

I do not remember, he (any where) mentions expressly the title of the first-born; but (all along) keeps himself, under the shelter of the indefinite term, heir. Locke.

Justice may be furnished out of fire, as far as her sword goes; and courage may be (all-over) a continued blaze. Addison.

If e'er the miser durst his farthings spare,
He thinly spreads them through the public square:
Where, all beside the rail, rang'd beggars lie;
And, from each other, catch the doleful cry. Gay.

2. Altogether; wholly; without any other consideration.

I am of the temper of most kings; who love, to be in debt; are all for present money, no matter how they pay it afterward. Dryden.

3. Only; without admission of any thing else.

When I shall wed;
That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care and duty:
Sure, I shall never marry, like my sister,
To love my father all. Shakesp. King Lear.

4. Although. This sense is truly Teutonick, but now obsolete.

Do you not think, th' accomplishment of it
Sufficient work for one man's simple head;
All were it, as the rest, but simply writ. Spenser.

5. It is sometimes a word of emphasis; nearly the same with just.

A shepherd's swain, say, did thee bring;
All as his straying flock he fed:
And, when his honour hath thee read,
Crave pardon for thy hardyhead. Spenser's Pastor.

6. It was anciently in English, what it is now in the other Teutonick dialects; a particle of mere enforcement.

He thought them, sixpence (all) too dear.
Song in Shakespeare.

Tell us, what occasion of import
Hath all so long detain'd you, from your wife.
Shakespeare.

ALL. n. s.

1. The whole; opposed to part, or nothing.

And will she yet debase her eyes on me;
On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?
Shakespeare.

Nought's had, all's spent;
Where our desire is got, without content.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The youth shall study; and no more engage
Their flattering wishes, for uncertain age:
No more with fruitless care, and cheated strife,
Chase fleeting pleasure through the maze of life;
Finding, the wretched all they here can have,
But present food, and but a future grave. Prior.

Our all is at stake, and irretrievably lost, if we fail of success. Addison.

2. Every thing.

Then shall we be news-cramm'd.—All the better; we shall be the more remarkable.
Shakespeare.

Up, with my tent; here will I lie to-night:
But where, to-morrow?—Well, all's one for that.
Shakespeare

All the fitter, Lentulus; our coming
Is not for salutation; we have bus'ness.
Ben Jonson.

3. That is, every thing is the better, the same, the fitter.

Sceptre and pow'r, thy giving, I assume:
And glad, her shall resign; when, in the end,
Thou shalt be all in all, and I in thee,
For ever; and in me, all whom thou lov'st.
Milton.

They, that do not keep up this indifferency for all but truth, put coloured spectacles before their eyes, and look through false glasses. Locke.

4. The phrase and all is of the same kind.

They all fell to work, at the roots of the tree; and left it so little foot-hold, that the first blast of wind laid it flat upon the ground; nest, eagles, and all. L'Estrange.

A torch, snuff and all, goes out in a moment; when dipped in the vapour.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.

5. All is much used in composition; but, in most instances, it is merely arbitrary; as, all-commanding. Sometimes the words compounded with it, are fixed and classical; as, Almighty. When it is connected with a participle, it seems to be a noun; as, all-surrounding; in other cases an adverb; as, all-accomplished, or completely accomplished. Of these compounds, a small part of those, which may be found, is inserted.

ALL'BEA'RING. adj. [from all and bear.] That, which bears every thing; omniparous.

Thus while he spoke, the sovereign plant he drew;
Where, on th' all-bearing earth, unmark'd it grew.
Pope.

ALL-CHEE'RING. adj. [from all and cheer.] That, which gives gayety and cheerfulness to all.

Soon, as the all-cheering sun
Should, in the farthest east, begin to draw
The shady curtains from Aurora's bed
Shakespeare.

ALL-COMMA'NDING. adj [from all and command.] Having the sovereignty over all.

He now sets before them the high and shining idol of glory, the all-commanding image of bright gold. Raleigh.

ALL-COMPO'SING. adj. [from all and compose.] That, which quiets all men, or every thing.

Wrapt in embow'ring shades, Ulysses lies,
His woes forgot: but Pallas now address't,
To break the bands of all-composing rest. Pope.

ALL-CO'NQUERING. adj. [from all and conquer.] That, which subdues every thing.

Second of Satan sprung, all-conquering death!
What think'st thou of our empire now? Milton.

ALL-CONSU'MING. adj. [from all and consume.] That, which consumes every thing.

By age unbroke:—but all-consuming care
Destroys perhaps the strength, that time would spare. Pope.

ALL-DEVOURING. adj. [from all and devour.] That which eats up every thing.
Secure from flames, from envy's fiercer rage,
Destructive war, and all-devouring age. Pope.

ALL-FOU'RS. n. s. [from all and four.] A low game at cards, played by two; so named, from the four particulars by which it is reckoned; and which, joined in the hand of either of the parties, are said to make all-fours.

ALL-HA'IL! n. s. [from all and hail, for health.] All health! This is therefore not a compound, though perhaps usually reckoned among them; a term of salutation. Salve, or salvete.
All hail, ye fields, where constant peace attends!
All hail, ye sacred solitary groves!
All hail, ye books, my true, my real friends,
Whose conversation pleases and improves! Walsh.

ALL-HA'LLOW. } n. s. [from all and
ALL-HA'LLOWS. } hallow.]
All saints day; the first of November.

That I detest my wretched self, and curse
My past polluted life. All-judging Heaven,
Who knows my crimes, has seen my sorrow for them. Rowe's Jane Shore.

ALL-KNO'WING. adj. [from all and know.] Omniscient; all-wise.
Shall we repine, at a little misplaced charity; we, who could no way foresee the effect? When an all-knowing, all-wise Being, showers down every day his benefits on the unthankful and undeserving. Atterbury's Sermons.

ALL-MA'KING. adj. [from all and make.] That, created all; omnifick. See ALL-SEEING.

ALL-POW'ERFUL. adj. [from all and powerful.] Almighty; omnipotent; possessed of infinite power.
O all-powerful Being! the least motion of whose will can create or destroy a world; pity us, the mournful friends of thy distressed servant. Swift.

ALL-SAINTS-DA'Y. n. s. The day, on which there is a general celebration of the saints. The first of November.

ALL-SE'ER. n. s. [from all and see.] He, that sees or beholds every thing; he, whose view comprehends all things.
That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head;
And giv'n in earnest, what I begg'd in jest. Shakesp.

ALL SE'EING. adj. [from all and see.] That beholds every thing.
The same First Mover certain bounds has plac'd,
How long those perishable forms shall last:
Nor can they last, beyond the time, assign'd
By that all-seeing and all-making mind. Dryden.

ALL-SO'ULS. n. s. The day, on which supplications are made for all souls by the church of Rome; the second of November.
That is all-souls day, fellows! Is it not?—
It is, my lord.—
Why then, all-souls day is my body's doomsday. Shakesp.

ALL-SUFFI'CIENT. adj. [from all and sufficient.] Sufficient to every thing.
The testimonies of God are perfect: the testimonies of God are all-sufficient unto that end, for which they were given. Hooker.
He can more than employ all our powers in their utmost elevation; for he is every way perfect and all-sufficient. Norris.

ALL-WI'SE. adj. [from all and wise.] Possest of infinite wisdom.
There is an infinite, eternal, all-wise mind, governing the affairs of the world. South.
Supreme, all-wise, eternal, potentate!
Sole author, sole disposer, of our fate! Prior.

ALLANTO'IS*, or *ALLANTOIDES. n. s. [from ἀλλὰς a gut, and εἶδος shape.] The urinary tunick, placed between the amnion and chorion; which, by the navel and urachus (or passage, by which the urine is conveyed from the infant in the womb) receives the urine, that comes out of the bladder. Quincy.

To* ALLAY. v. a. [from alloyer, Fr. to mix one metal with another, in order to coinage: it is therefore derived by some, from à la loi, according to law; the quantity of metals being mixed, according to law: by others, from allier, to unite; perhaps from allocare, to put together.]
1. To mix one metal with another, to make it fitter for coinage. In this sense, most authors preserve the original French orthography, and write alloy. See ALLOY.
2. To join any thing to another, so as to abate its predominant qualities. It is used commonly, in a sense contrary to its original meaning; and is, to make something bad, less bad. To obtund; to repress; to abate.
Being brought into the open air,
I would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poison. Shakesp
No friendly offices shall alter or allay that rancour, that frets in some hellish breasts; which, upon all occasions, will foam out at its foul mouth in slander and invective. South.
3. To quiet; to pacify; to repress. The word, in this sense, I think not to be derived from the French alloyer; but to be the English word lay, with a before it, according to the old form.
If by your art you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them. Shakes.

ALLA'Y. n. s. [alloy, Fr.]
1. The metal of a baser kind, mixed in coins, to harden them, that they may wear less. Gold is allayed, with silver and copper; too carats, to a pound Troy: silver, with copper only; of which, eighteen penny-weight is mixed with a pound. Cowell thinks the allay is added, to countervail the charge of coining; which might have been done, only by making the coin less.
For fools are stubborn in their way,
As coins are harden'd by th' allay. Hudibras.
2. Any thing, which (being added) abates the predominant qualities of that, with which it is mingled; in the same manner, as the admixture of baser metals allays the qualities of the first mass.
Dark colours easily suffer a sensible allay, by little scattering light. Newton's Opticks.
3. Allay, being taken from baser metals, commonly implies something worse than that, with which it is mixed.
The joy has no allay, of jealousy, hope, and fear. Roscommon.

ALLA'YER. n. s [from allay.] The person or thing, which has the power or quality of allaying.
Phlegm and pure blood are reputed allayers of acrimony: and Avicen countermands letting blood in cholerick bodies; because he esteems the blood a frænum bilis, or a bridle of gall, obtunding its acrimony and fierceness. Harvey.

ALLA'YMENT. n. s. [from allay.] That, which has the power of allaying or abating the force of another.
If I could temporize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate;
The like allayment would I give my grief. Shakesp.

ALLEGA'TION. n. s. [from allege.]
1. Affirmation; declaration.
2. The thing alleged or affirmed.
Hath he not twit our sovereign lady here
With ignominious words, though darkly coucht?
As if she had suborned some to swear
False allegations, to o'erthrow his state.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.
3. An excuse; a plea.
I omitted no means, to be informed of my errours; and I expect not to be excused in any negligence, on account of youth, want of leisure, or any other idle allegations.

To* ALLE'GE. v. a. [allego, Lat.]
1. To affirm; to declare; to maintain.
2. To plead, as an excuse; or produce, as an argument.
Surely the present form of church-government is such, as no law of God, or reason of man, hath hitherto been alleged of force sufficient, to prove they do ill; who, to the utmost of their power, withstand the alteration thereof. Hooker.
If we forsake the ways of grace or goodness, we cannot allege any colour of ignorance, or want of instruction; we cannot say, we have not learned them, or we could not. Sprat.
He hath a clear and full view; and there is no more to be alleged, for his better information. Locke.

ALLE'GEABLE. adj. [from allege.] That, which may be alleged.
Upon this interpretation, all may be solved, that is allegeable against it. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

ALLE'GEMENT. n. s. [from allege.] The same with allegation. Dict.

ALLE'GER. n. s. [from allege.] He, that alleges.
The narrative, if we believe it as confidently, as the famous alleger of it (Pamphilio) appears to do, would argue; that there is no other principle requisite, than what may result from the lucky mixture of several bodies. Boyle.

ALLE'GIANCE. n. s. [allegeance, Fr.] The duty of subjects to the government.
I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king. Shakesp.

We charge you, on allegiance to ourselves,
To hold your slaughtering hands, and keep the peace. Shakesp.

The house of commons, to whom every day petitions are directed by the several counties of England, professing all allegiance to them, govern absolutely; the lords concurring, or rather submitting, to whatsoever is proposed. Clarendon.

ALLE'GIANT. adj. [from allege.] Loyal; conformable to the duty of allegiance; a word, not now used.

For your great graces
Heap'd upon me, poor undeserver; I
Can nothing render, but allegiant thanks,
My pray'rs to heaven for you. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

ALLEGO'RICK. adj. [from allegory.] After the manner of an allegory; not real; not literal.

A kingdom they portend thee; but, what kingdom,
Real or allegorick, I discern not. Milton.

ALLEGO'RICAL. adj. [from allegory.] In the form of an allegory; not real; not literal; mystical.

When our Saviour said, in an allegorical and mystical sense, 'Except ye eat the flesh of the Son 'of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in 'you;' the hearers understood him literally and grossly. Bentley.

The epithet of Apollo for shooting, is capable of two applications; one literal, in respect of the darts and bow, the ensigns of that god; the other allegorical, in regard to the rays of the sun. Pope.

ALLEGO'RICALLY. adv. [from allegory.] After an allegorical manner.

Virgil often makes Iris the messenger of Juno, allegorically taken for the air. Peacham.

The place is to be understood allegorically; and, what is thus spoken by a Phœacian with wisdom, is (by the Poet) applied to the goddess of it. Pope.

ALLEGO'RICALNESS. n. s. [from allegorical.] The quality of being allegorical. Dict.

To A'LLEGORIZE. v. a. [from allegory] To turn into allegory; to form an allegory; to take in a sense not literal.

He hath very wittily allegorized this tree; allowing his supposition of the tree itself to be true. Raleigh.

As some would allegorize these signs, so others would confine them to the destruction of Jerusalem. Burnet's Theory.

An alchymist shall reduce divinity, to the maxims of his laboratory; explain morality by sal, sulphur, and mercury; and allegorize the scripture itself, and the sacred mysteries thereof, into the philosopher's stone. Locke.

A'LLEGORY. n. s. [ἀλληγορία.] A figurative discourse; in which something other is intended, than is contained in the words literally taken; as, wealth is the daughter of diligence, and the parent of authority.

Neither must we draw out our allegory too long; lest either we make ourselves obscure; or fall into affectation, which is childish. Ben Jonson.

This word nympha meant nothing else, but (by allegory) the vegetative humour or moisture, that quickeneth and giveth life to trees and flowers, whereby they grow. Peacham.

ALLE'GRO. n. s. A word, denoting one of the six distinctions of time. It expresses a sprightly motion, the quickest of all, except Presto. It originally meant gay, as in Milton.

ALLELU'JAH. n. s. [This word is falsely written for Hallelujah, הללו and יה.] A word of spiritual exultation, used in hymns; it signifies, Praise God.

He will set his tongue, to those pious divine strains; which may be a proper præludium to those alleluiahs, he hopes eternally to sing. Government of the Tongue.

ALLEMA'NDE n. s. [Ital.] A grave kind of musick. Dict.

To ALLE'VIATE. v. a. [allevo, Lat.]

1. To make light; to ease; to soften.

The pains, taken in the speculative, will much alleviate me in describing the practic part. Harvey.

Most of the distempers are the effects of abused plenty and luxury, and must not be charged upon our Maker; who (notwithstanding) hath provided excellent medicines, to alleviate those evils, which we bring upon ourselves. Bentley.

2. To extenuate or soften; as, he alleviates his fault by an excuse.

ALLEVIA'TION. n. s. [from alleviate.]

1. The act, of making light, of allaying, or extenuating.

All apologies for, and alleviations of, faults, though they are the heights of humanity; yet they are not the favours, but the duties, of friendship. South.

2. That, by which any pain is eased, or fault extenuated.

This loss of one-fifth of their income will sit heavy on them, who shall feel it, without the alleviation of any profit. Locke.

A'LLEY. n. s. [allée, Fr.]

1. A walk in a garden.

And all within were walks and alleys wide,
With footing worn, and leading inward far. Spenser.

Where alleys are close gravelled, the earth putteth forth the first year knotgrass, and after spiregrass. Bacon's Natural History.

Yonder alleys green,
Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown. Milton.

Come, my fair love! Our morning's task we lose:
Some labour, ev'n the easiest life would choose:
Ours is not great; the dangling bows to crop,
Whose too luxuriant growth our alleys stop. Dryden.

The thriving plants, ignoble broomsticks made.
Now sweep those alleys they were born to shade. Pope.

2. A passage in towns, narrower than a street.

A back friend, a shoulder clapper; one, that commands the passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands. Shakesp.

ALLI'ANCE. n s. [alliance, Fr.]

1. The state of connection with another, by confederacy; a league. In this sense, our histories of Queen Anne mention the grand alliance.

2. Relation by marriage.

A bloody Hymen shall th' alliance join,
Between the Trojan and th' Ausonian line. Dryden.

3. Relation, by any form of kindred.

For my father's sake,
And for alliance' sake, declare the cause
My father lost his head. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Adrastus soon, with gods averse, shall join
In dire alliance with the Theban line;
Thence strife shall rise, and mortal war succeed. Pope.

4. The act, of forming or contracting relation to another; the act of making a confederacy.

Dorset, your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home
To high promotions. Shakesp. Richard III.

5. The persons allied to each other.

I would not boast the greatness of my father,
But point out new alliances to Cato. Addison.

ALLI'CIENCY. [allicio, Lat. to entice or draw.] The power of attracting any thing; magnetism; attraction.

The feigned central alliciency is but a word; and the manner of it, still occult. Glanville.

To A'LLIGATE. v. a. [alligo, Lat.] To tie one thing to another; to unite.

ALLI'GATION. n. s. [from alligate.]

1. The act, of tying together; the state, of being so tied

2. The arithmetical rule, that teaches to adjust the price of compounds, formed of several ingredients of different value.

ALLIGA'TOR. n. s. The crocodile. This name is chiefly used for the crocodile of America; between which, and that of Africa, naturalists have laid down this difference: that one moves the upper, and the other the lower jaw; but this is now known to be chimerical, the lower jaw being equally moved by both. See CROCODILE.

In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An allegator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes. Shakesp.

Aloft in rows large poppy-heads were strung,
And here a scaly alligator hung. Garth's Dispensary.

A'LLIGATURE. n. s. [from alligate.] The link or ligature, by which two things are joined together. Dict.

ALLI'SON. n. s. [allido, allisum, Lat.] The act, of striking one thing against another.

There have not been any islands of note, or considerable extent, torn and cast off from the continent by earthquakes, or severed from it by the boisterous allision of the sea. Woodward.

ALLITERA'TION. n. s. [ad and litera, Lat.] Of what the critics call the alliteration, or beginning of several words in the same verse with the same letter; there are instances, in the oldest and best writers, as,

Behemoth biggest born. Milton's Paradise Lost.

ALLOCA'TION. n. s. [alloco, Lat.]

1. The act, of putting one thing to another.

2. The admission of an article in reckoning, and addition of it to the account

3. An allowance, made upon an account: a term, used in the Exchequer. Chambers.

ALLOCU'TION. n. s. [allocutio, Lat.] The act of speaking to another.

ALLO'DIAL. adj. [from allodium.] Held without any acknowledgment of superiority; not feudal; independent.

ALLODIUM. n. s. [A word of very uncertain derivation, but most probably of German original.] A possession, held in absolute independence, without any acknowledgment of a lord paramount: it is opposed to fee, or feudum, which intimates some kind of dependence. There are no allodial lands in England; all being held, either mediately or immediately, of the king.

ALLO'NGE. n. s. [allonge, Fr.]

1. A pass or thrust with a rapier; so called from the lengthening of the space, taken up by the fencer.
2. It is likewise taken for a long rein, when the horse is trotted in the hand.

To ALLO'O. v. a. [This word is generally spoke halloo; and is used to dogs, when they are incited to the chace or battle: it is commonly imagined to come, from the French allons; perhaps from all lo, look all; shewing the object.] To set on; to incite a dog, by crying alloo.

Alloo thy furious mastiff; bid him vex
The noxious herd, and print upon their ears
A sad memorial of their past offence. Philips.

A'LLOQUY. n. s. [alloquium, Lat.] The act, of speaking to another; address; conversation. Dict.

To ALLO'T. v. a. [from lot.]

1. To distribute by lot.
2. To grant.

Five days we do allot thee for provision,
To shield thee from disasters of the world;
And, on the sixth, to turn thy hated back
Upon our kingdom. Shakesp. King Lear.

I shall deserve my fate; if I refuse
That happy hour, which heaven allots to peace.
Dryden.

3. To distribute; to parcel out; to give each his share.

Since fame was the only end of all their studies, a man cannot be too scrupulous in allotting them their due portion of it. Tatler.

ALLO'TMENT. n. s. [from allot.]

1. That, which is allotted to any one; the part, the share, the portion, granted.

There can be no thought of security or quiet in this world, but in a resignation to the allotments of God and nature. L'Estrange.

Though it is our duty, to submit with patience to more scanty allotments; yet thus much, we may reasonably and lawfully ask of God. Rogers's Serm

2. Part appropriated.

It is laid-out into a grove, for fruits and shade; a vineyard; and an allotment, for olives and herbs. Broome.

ALLO'TTERY. n. s. [from allot.] That, which is granted to any particular person in a distribution. See ALLOTMENT.

Allow me such exercises, as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery, my father left me by testament. Shakesp.

To ALLO'W. v. a. [allouer, Fr. from allaudare, Lat.]

1. To admit; as, to allow a position: not to contradict; not to oppose.

The principles, which all mankind allow for true, are innate; those, that men of right reason admit, are the principles allowed by all mankind. Locke.

The pow'r of musick all our hearts allow;
And, what Timotheus was, is Dryden now. Pope.

That some of the Presbyterians declared openly against the king's murder, I allow to be true. Swift.

2. To justify; to maintain, as right.

The pow'rs above
Allow obedience. Shakesp.
The Lord alloweth the righteous. Bible.

3. To grant; to yield; to own any one's title to.

We will not, in civility, allow too much sincerity to the professions of most men; but think their actions to be interpreters of their thoughts. Locke.

I shall be ready, to allow the pope as little power here, as you please. Swift.

4. To grant license to; to permit.

Let's follow the old earl; and get the Bedlam
To lead him where he would; his roguish madness
Allows itself to any thing. Shakesp.

But, as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak; not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts. 1 Thess. ii. 4.

They referred all laws, that were to be passed in Ireland, to be considered, corrected, and allowed first by the state of England. Davies on Ireland.

5. To give a sanction to; to authorize.

There is no slander, in an allow'd fool. Shakesp.

6. To give to; to pay to.

Ungrateful then! if we no tears allow
To him, that gave us peace and empire too.
Waller.

7. To appoint for; to set out, to a certain use; as, He allowed his son the third part of his income.
8. To make abatement, or provision; or to settle any thing, with some concessions or cautions, regarding something else.

If we consider the different occasions, of ancient and modern medals; we shall find, they both agree in recording the great actions and successes in war; allowing still for the different ways of making it, and the circumstances that attended it. Addison.

ALLO'WABLE. adj. [from allow.]

1. That, which may be admitted without contradiction.

It is not allowable, what is observable in many pieces of Raphael; where Magdalen is represented before our Saviour, washing his feet on her knees; which will not consist with the text. Brown's Vulg. Errours

2. That, which is permitted or licensed; lawful; not forbidden.

In actions of this sort, the light of nature alone may discover that, which is in the sight of God allowable. Hooker.

I was, by the freedom allowable among friends, tempted to vent my thoughts with negligence. Boyle.

Reputation becomes a signal and a very peculiar blessing, to magistrates, and their pursuit of it is, not only allowable, but laudable. Atterbury's Sermons

ALLO'WABLENESS. n. s. [from allowable.] The quality, of being allowable; lawfulness; exemption from prohibition.

Lots, as to their nature, use, and allowableness, in matters of recreation, are indeed impugned by some, though better defended by others South's Sermons.

ALLO'WANCE. n. s. [from allow.]

1. Admission, without contradiction.

That, which wisdom did first begin, and hath been with good men long continued, challengeth allowance of them that succeed, although it plead for itself nothing. Hooker.

Without the notion and allowance of spirits, our philosophy will be lame and defective in one main part of it. Locke.

2. Sanction; license; authority.

You sent a large commission to conclude
(Without the king's will, or the state's allowance)
A league, between his Highness and Ferrara. Shakespeare.

3. Permission; freedom from restraint.

They should therefore be accustomed betimes, to consult and make use of their reason, before they give allowance to their inclinations. Locke.

4. A settled rate, or appointment for any use.

The victual in plantations ought to be expended, almost as in a besieged town; that is, with certain allowance. Bacon.

And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king; a daily rate, for every day all his life. 2 Kings

5. Abatement, from the strict rigour of a law or demand.

The whole poem, though written in heroick verse, is of the Pindarick nature; as well in the thought, as the expression: and, as such, requires the same grains of allowance for it. Dryden

Parents never give allowances, for an innocent passion. Swift.

6. Established character; reputation.

His bark is stoutly timber'd; and his pilot,
Of very expert and approv'd allowance. Shakesp.

ALLO'Y. n. s. [See ALLAY.]

1. Baser metal, mixed in coinage.

That precise weight and fineness, by law appropriated to the pieces of each denomination, is called the standard. Fine silver is silver, without the mixture of any baser metal: Alloy is baser metal, mixed with it. Locke.

Let another piece be coined of the same weight; wherein half the silver is taken out, and copper or other alloy put into the place; it will be worth, but half as much: for the value of the alloy is so inconsiderable, as not to be reckoned. Locke.

2. Abatement; diminution.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished, by beasts in a more exquisite degree, than they are by men; for they taste them sincere and pure, without mixture or alloy. Atterbury.

ALLUBE'SCENCY. n. s. [allubescentia, Lat.] Willingness; content. Dict.

To ALLU'DE. v. n. [alludo, Lat.] To have some reference to a thing, without the direct mention of it; to hint at; to insinuate. It is used of persons; as, he alludes to an old story; or of things, as, the lampoon alludes to his mother's faults.

These speeches of Jerom and Chrysostom do seem to allude unto such ministerial garments, as were then in use. Hooker.

True it is, that many things of this nature be alluded unto, yea, many things declared. Hooker.

Then just proportions were taken, and every thing placed by weight and measure: and this, I doubt not, was that artificial structure here alluded to. Burnet's Theory.

ALLU'MINOR. n. s [allumer, Fr. to light.] One, who colours or paints upon paper or parchment; because he gives graces, light, and ornament, to the letters or figures coloured. Cowell.

To ALLURE. v. a. [leurer, Fr. looren, Dutch; belæjen, Sax.] To entice to any thing, whether good or bad; to draw towards any thing by enticement.

Unto laws, that men make for the benefit of men, it hath seemed also needful to add rewards; which may more allure unto good, than any hardness deterreth from it: and punishments; which may more deter from evil, than any sweetness thereto allureth. Hooker.

The golden sun, in splendour likest heav'n,
Allur'd his eye. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Each flatt'ring hope, and each alluring joy. Lyttleton.

ALLU'RE. n. s. [from the verb allure.] Something set up, to entice birds (or other things) to it. We now write lure.

The rather to train them to his allure, he told them both often, and with a vehement voice, how they were over-topped and trodden down by gentlemen. Hayward.

ALLU'REMENT. n. s. [from allure.] That, which allures, or has the force of alluring; enticement; temptation of pleasure.

Against allurement, custom, and a world
Offended; fearless of reproach and scorn,
Or violence. Milton's Paradise Lost.
—Adam, by his wife's allurement, fell.
Paradise Regained.
To shun th' allurement, is not hard
To minds resolv'd, forewarn'd, and well prepar'd:
But, wond'rous difficult, when once beset;
To struggle through the straits, and break th' involving net. Dryden.

ALLU'RER. n. s. [from allure.] The person, that allures; enticer; inveigler.

ALLU'RINGLY. adv. [from allure.] In an alluring manner; enticingly.

ALLU'RINGNESS. n. s. [from alluring.] The quality, of alluring or enticing; invitation; temptation, by proposing pleasure.

ALLU'SION. n. s. [allusio, Lat.] That, which is spoken with reference to something, supposed to be already known, and therefore not expressed; a hint; an implication. It has the particle to.

Here are manifest allusions and footsteps of the dissolution of the earth, as it was in the deluge, and will be in its last ruin. Burnet's Theory.
This last allusion gall'd the Panther more;
Because indeed it rubb'd upon the sore. Dryden.
Expressions now out of use, allusions to customs lost to us, and various particularities, must needs continue several passages in the dark. Locke.

ALLU'SIVE. adj. [alludo, allusum, Lat.] Hinting at something, not fully expressed.

Where the expression in one place is plain, and the sense affixed to it agreeable to the proper force of the words, and no negative objection requires us to depart from it; and the expression, in the other, is figurative or allusive, and the doctrine, deduced from it, liable to great objections; it is reasonable, in this latter place, to restrain the extent of the figure and allusion to a consistency with the former. Rogers's Sermons

ALLU'SIVELY. adv. [from allusive.] In an allusive manner; by implication; by insinuation.

The Jewish nation, that rejected and crucified him, within the compass of one generation, were, according to his prediction, destroyed by the Romans, and preyed upon by those eagles, (Matt. xxiv. 28.), by which, allusively, are noted the Roman armies, whose ensign was the eagle.
Hammond

ALLU'SIVENESS. n. s [from allusive] The quality of being allusive.

ALLU'VION. n. s. [alluvio, Lat.]

1. The carrying of any thing to some thing else by the motion of the water.
2. The thing carried by water to something else.

The civil law gives the owner of land a right to that increase which arises from alluvion, which is defined, an insensible increment, brought by the water. Cowell.

ALLU'VIOUS. adj. [from alluvion.] That, which is carried by water to another place, and lodged upon something else.

To* ALLY'. v. a. [allier, Fr.]

1. To unite by kindred, friendship, or confederacy.

All these septs are allied, to the inhabitants of the North; so, as there is no hope, that they will ever serve faithfully against them.
Spenser on Ireland
Wants, frailties, passions, closer still ally
The common int'rest, or endear the tye. Pope.
To the sun ally'd,
From him they draw the animating fire. Thomson.

2. To make a relation, between two things, by similitude, or resemblance, or any other means.

Two lines are indeed remotely allied to Virgil's sense; but they are too like the tenderness of Ovid. Dryden.

ALLY'. n. s. [allie, Fr.] One, united by some means of connexion; as marriage, friendship, confederacy.

He in court stood, on his own feet; for the most of his allies, rather leaned upon him, than shored him. Wotton.
We could hinder the accession of Holland to France; either as subjects, with great immunities for the encouragement of trade; or as an inferiour and dependent ally, under their protection. Temple.

ALMACA'NTAR. n. s. [An Arabick word, written variously by various authors; by D'Herbelot, almocantar; by others, almucantar.] A circle, drawn parallel to the horizon. It is generally used in the plural; and means a series of parallel circles, drawn through the several degrees of the meridian.

A'LMACA'NTAR'S STAFF. n. s. An instrument, commonly made of pear-tree or box, with an arch of fifteen degrees; used to take observations of the sun, about the time of its rising and setting, in order to find the amplitude, and consequently the variation of the compass. Chambers.

A'LMANACK. n. s. [Derived, by some, from the Arabick al, and manah, Heb. to count or compute; by others, from al, Arabick, and μὴν a month, μανακὸς the course of the months; by others, from a Teutonick original, al, and maan the moon, an account of every moon, or month. All of them are probable.] A calendar; a book, in which the revolutions of the seasons, with the return of feasts and fasts, is noted for the ensuing year.

It will be said, this is an almanack for the old year: all hath been well: Spain hath not assailed this kingdom. Bacon.
This astrologer made his almanack give a tolerable account of the weather, by a direct inversion of the common prognosticators.
Government of the Tongue.
Beware the woman too, and shun her sight,
Who in these studies does herself delight;
By whom a greasy almanack is borne,
With often handling, like chaft amber worn.
Dryden.
I'll have a fasting almanack printed, on purpose for her use. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

A'LMANDINE. n. s. [Fr. almandina, Ital.] A ruby, coarser and lighter than the oriental, and nearer the colour of the granate. Dict.

ALMI'GHTINESS. n. s. [from almighty.] Unlimited power; omnipotence; one of the attributes of God.

It serveth to the world, for a witness of his almightiness, whom we outwardly honour with the chiefest of outward things. Hooker.
In creating and making existent the world universal, by the absolute act of his own word, God shewed his power and almightiness.
Sir Walter Raleigh.

In the wilderness, the bittern and the stork, the unicorn and the elk, live upon his provisions, and revere his power, and feel the force of his almightiness. Taylor.

ALMI'GHTY. adj. [from all and mighty.] Of unlimited power; omnipotent.

The Lord appeared unto Abraham; and said unto him, I am the almighty God: walk before me, and be thou perfect. Genesis, xvii. 1.
He wills you, in the name of God almighty;
That you divest yourself, and lay apart
The borrowed glories; that, by gift of heav'n,
By law of nature and of nations, long
To him and to his heirs. Shakesp.

A'LMOND. n. s. [amand, Fr. derived by Menage from amandala, a word in low Latin: by others, from Allemand, a German; supposing, that almonds come to France from Germany.] The nut of the almond tree, either sweet or bitter.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one; and the sweet taste, into an oily one. Locke.

A'LMOND TREE. n. s. [amygdalus. Lat.] It has leaves and flowers, very like those of the peach tree; but the fruit is longer, and more compressed; the outer green coat is thinner and drier when ripe, and the shell is not so rugged. Miller.

Like to an almond-tree, mounted high
On top of Green Selenis, all alone,
With blossoms brave bedecked daintily;
Whose tender locks do tremble every one,
At every little breath that under heav'n is blown.
Fairy Queen
Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood:
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain
Dryden.

A'LMONDS OF THE THROAT, or TONSILS. (called improperly, almonds of the ears) are two round glands, placed on the sides of the basis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces: each of them has a large oval sinus, which opens into the fauces; and in it are a great number of lesser ones, which discharge themselves through the great sinus of a mucous and slippery matter into the fauces, larynx, and œsophagus, for the moistening and lubricating those parts. When the œsophagus muscle acts, it compresses the almonds, and they frequently are the occasion of a sore throat. Quincy.

The tonsils, or almonds of the ears, are also frequently swelled in the king's evil; which tumour may be very well reckoned a species of it.
Wiseman's Surgery

A'LMOND-FURNACE, or A'LMAN-FURNACE. called also the Sweep; is a peculiar kind of furnace, used in refining, to separate metals from cinders and other foreign substances. Chambers.

A'LMONER, or A'LMNER. n. s. [eleemosynarius, Lat.] The officer of a prince, or other person, employed in the distribution of charity.

I enquired for an almoner; and the general fame has pointed out your reverence, as the worthiest man. Dryden.

AL'MONRY. n. s. [from almoner.] The place, where the almoner resides, or where the alms are distributed.

ALMOST. adv. [from all and most; that is, most part of all. Skinner.] Nearly; well nigh; in the next degree, to the whole, or to universality.

Who is there almost; whose mind, at some time or other, love or anger, fear or grief, has not so fastened to some clog, that it could not turn itself to any other object. Locke.

There can be no such thing or notion, as an almost infinite; there can be nothing next or second, to an omnipotent God. Bentley's Sermons.

Atlas becomes unequal to his freight;
And almost faints, beneath the glowing weight. Addison.

ALMS. n. s. [in Saxon, elmer, from eleemosyna, Lat.] What is given gratuitously, in relief of the poor. It has no singular.

My arm'd knees,
Which bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his,
That hath received an alms. Shakesp.

The poor beggar hath a just demand of an alms, from the rich man; who is guilty of fraud, injustice, and oppression, if he does not afford relief according to his abilities. Swift.

ALMS-BASKET. n. s. [from alms and basket.] The basket, in which provisions are put to be given away.

There sweepings do as well,
As the best order'd meal;
For, who the relish of these guests will fit,
Needs set them but the alms-basket of wit. Ben Jonson.

We'll stand up for our properties, was the beggar's song, that lived upon the alms-basket. L'Estrange's Fables.

A'LMSDEED. n. s. [from alms and deed.] An act of charity; a charitable gift.

This woman was full of good works, and almsdeeds, which she did. Acts, ix. 36.

Hard-favour'd Richard, where art thou?
Thou art not here: murder is thy almsdeed;
Petitioner for blood thou ne'er put'st back. Shakespeare.

ALMS-GIVER. n. s. [from alms and giver.] He, that gives alms; he, that supports others by his charity.

He endowed many religious foundations, and yet was he a great alms-giver in secret; which shewed, that his works in publick were dedicated, rather to God's glory, than his own. Bacon.

ALMS-HOUSE. n. s. [from alms and house.] A house, devoted to the reception and support of the poor; an hospital for the poor.

The way of providing for the clergy by tithes, the devise of alms-houses for the poor, and the sorting out of the people into parishes, are manifest. Hooker.

And, to relief of lazars, and weak age
Of indigent faint souls past corporal toil,
A hundred alms-houses right well supplied. Shakespeare.

Many penitents, after the robbing of temples and other rapine, build an hospital or alms-house, out of the ruins of the church, and the spoils of widows and orphans. L'Estrange.

Behold yon alms-house, neat, but void of state;
Where age and want sit smiling at the gate. Pope.

ALMS-MAN. n. s. [from alms and man.] A man, who lives upon alms; who is supported by charity.

I'll give my jewels, for a set of beads;
My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;
My gay apparel, for an alms-man's gown. Shakespeare.

ALMUG-TREE. n. s. A tree, mentioned in scripture. Of its wood were made musical instruments; and it was used also, in rails, or in a staircase. The Rabbins generally render it coral, others ebony, brazil or pine: in the Septuagint, it is translated wrought wood; and in the Vulgate, Ligna Thyina: but coral could never answer the purposes of the almugim; the pine-tree is too common in Judea, to be imported from Ophir; and the Thyinum or citron-tree, much esteemed by the ancients for its fragrance and beauty, came from Mauritania. By the wood almugim, or algumim, or simply gummim, taking al for a kind of article, may be understood oily and gummy sorts of wood; and particularly the trees, which produce gum ammoniac, or gum arabick; and is (perhaps) the same, with the Shittim wood mentioned by Moses. Calmet.

And the navy also of Hiram, that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of almug-trees and precious trees.

1 Kings, x. 11.

A'LNAGAR, A'LNAGER, or A'LNEGER. n. s. [from alnage.] A measurer by the ell: a sworn officer; whose business formerly was, to inspect the assize of woollen cloth, and to fix the seals appointed upon it for that purpose: but there are now three officers, belonging to the regulation of cloth-manufactures; the searcher, measurer, and alneger. Dict.

A'LNAGE. n. s. [from aulnage, or aunage, Fr.] Ell-measure, or rather the measuring by the ell or yard. Dict.

A'LNIGHT. n. s. [from all and night.]

A service, which they call alnight, is a great cake of wax, with the wick in the midst; whereby it cometh to pass, that the wick fetcheth the nourishment farther off. Bacon.

A'LOES. n. s. [אהלם, as it is supposed.] A term, applied to three different things.

1. A precious wood, used in the East for perfumes; of which the best sort is of higher price, than gold; and was the most valuable present, given by the king of Siam, in 1686, to the king of France: it is called Tambac; and is the heart, or innermost part, of the aloe tree; the next part to which is called Calembac; which is sometimes imported into Europe, and (though of inferiour value to the Tambac) is much esteemed: the part, next the bark, is termed by the Portuguese Pao d'aquila, or eagle-wood; but some account the eagle-wood not the outer part of the Tambac, but another species. Our knowledge of this wood is yet very imperfect. Savary.
2. Aloes is a tree, which grows in hot countries, and even in the mountains of Spain.
3. Aloes is a medicinal juice, extracted, not from the odoriferous, but the common aloes tree; by cutting the leaves, and exposing the juice (that drops from them) to the sun. It is distinguished, into Socotorine, and Caballine or horse aloes: the first is so called, from Socotora; the second, because (being coarser) it ought to be confined to the use of farriers. It is a warm and strong cathartick.

ALOE'TICAL. adj. [from aloes.] Consisting chiefly of aloes.

It may be excited, by aloetical scammoniate, or acrimonious medicines. Wiseman's Surgery.

ALOE'TICK. n. s. [from aloes.] Any medicine is so called, which chiefly consists of aloes. Quincy

ALO'FT. adv. [loffter, to lift up, Dan. Loft air, Icelandish; so that aloft is, into the air.] On high; above; in the air: a word, used chiefly in poetry.

For I have read in stories oft,
That love has wings, and soars aloft. Suckling.

Upright he stood; and bore aloft his shield,
Conspicuous from afar; and overlook'd the field. Dryden.

The great luminary
(Aloft the vulgar constellations thick,
That from his lordly eye keep distance due)
Dispenses light from far. Milton's Paradise Lo t.

A'LOGY. n. s. [ἄλογος.] Unreasonableness; absurdity. Dict.

ALO'NE. adj. [alleen, Dutch; from al and een or one, that is, single.]

1. Without another.

The quarrel toucheth none, but us alone;
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then. Shakesp.

If by a mortal hand my father's throne
Could be defended, 'twas by mine alone. Dryden.

God, by whose alone power and conversation we all live, and move, and have our being. Bentley.

2. Without company; solitary.

Eagles we see fly alone; and they are but sheep, which always herd together. Sidney.

Alone, for other creature in this place,
Living or lifeless, to be found was none. Milton.

I never durst in darknesss be alone, Dryden.

ALO'NE. adv.

1. This word is seldom used, but with the word let; if, even then, it be an adverb. It implies sometimes an ironical prohibition, forbidding to help a man, who is able to manage the affair himself.

Let us alone, to guard Corioli:
If they set down before 's; 'fore they remove,
Bring up your army. Shakesp.

Let you alone, cunning artificer;
See, how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. BenJon.

2. To forbear; to leave undone.

His client stole it; but he had better, have let it alone; for he lost his cause by his jest. Addison.

ALO'NG. adv. [au longue, Fr.]

1. At length.

Some rowl a mighty stone; some, laid along,
And bound with burning wires, on spokes of wheels are hung. Dryden.

2. Through any space measured lengthwise.

A firebrand carried along, leaveth a train of light behind it. Bacon's Natural History.

Where Ufens glides along the lowly lands,
Or the black water of Pomptina stands. Dryden.

3. Throughout; in the whole: with all prefixed.

Solomon, all along in his Proverbs, gives the title of fool to a wicked man. Tillotson.

They were all along, a cross untoward sort of people. South.

4. Joined with the particle with; in company; joined with.

I your commission will forthwith dispatch;
And he to England shall along with you.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

Hence then! and Evil go with thee along!
Thy offspring, to the place of evil, Hell. Milton.

Religious zeal is subject to an excess, and to a defect; when something is mingled with it, which it should not have; or, when it wants something, that ought to go along with it. Sprat.

5. Sometimes with is understood.

Command thy slaves: my free-born soul disdains
A tyrant's curb, and restive breaks the reins.
Take this along; and no dispute shall rise
(Though mine the woman) for my ravish'd prize.
Dryden.

6. Forward; onward. In this sense it is derived from allons, French.

Come then, my friend; my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet and the song! Pope.

ALO'NGST. adv. [a corruption, as it seems, from along.] Along; through the length.

The Turks did keep strait watch and ward, in all their ports alongst the sea coast.
Knolles's History of the Turks.

ALO'OF. adv. [all off, that is, quite off.]

1. At a distance; with the particle from. It generally implies a small distance; such, as is within view or observation.

Then bade the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herself withdraw aside;
From whence she might behold the battle's proof,
And else be safe from danger far descried.
Fairy Queen.

As next in worth,
Came singly where he stood, on the bare strand;
While the promiscuous crowd stood yet aloof.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

The noise approaches; though our palace stood
Aloof from streets, encompass'd with a wood.
Dryden.

2. Applied to persons; it often insinuates caution and circumspection.

Turn on the bloody hounds, with heads of steel;
And make the cowards, stand aloof at bay.
Shakespeare.

Going northwards aloof, as long as they had any doubt of being pursued: at last, when they were out of reach, they turned and cross'd the ocean to Spain. Bacon.

The king would not, by any means, enter the city; until he had aloof seen the cross set up upon the greater tower of Granada, whereby it became Christian ground. Bacon.

Two pots stood by a river, one of brass, the other of clay: the water carried them away: the earthen vessel kept aloof from t'other.
L'Estrange's Fables.

The strong may fight aloof; Ancæus try'd
His force too near, and by presuming dy'd.
Dryden's Fables.

3. In a figurative sense, it is used to import art or cunning in conversation, by which a man holds the principal question at a distance.

Nor do we find him forward to be sounded;
But with a crafty madness keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state. Shakesp. Hamlet.

4. It is used metaphorically of persons, that will not be seen in a design.

It is necessary, the queen join: for, if she stand aloof, there will be still suspicions; it being a received opinion, that she hath a great interest in the king's favour and power. Suckling.

5. It is applied to things, not properly belonging to each other.

Love's not love,
When it is mingled with regards, that stand
Aloof from th' entire point. Shakesp. K. Lear.

ALO'UD. adv. [from a and loud.] Loudly; with a strong voice: with a great noise.

Strangled he lies! yet seems to cry aloud,
To warn the mighty, and instruct the proud;
That of the great, neglecting to be just,
Heav'n in a moment makes an heap of dust.
Waller.

Then heav'n's high monarch thund'red thrice aloud,
And thrice he shook aloft a golden cloud. Dryden.

ALO'W. adv. [from a and low.] In a low place; not aloft.

And now alow, and now aloft they fly,
As borne through air; and seem to touch the sky.
Dryden.

A'LPHA. n. s. The first letter in the Greek alphabet, answering to our A; therefore used to signify the first.

I am alpha and omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord; which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty. Revelations.

A'LPHABET. n. s. [from ἄλφα alpha, and βῆτα beta, the two first letters of the Greeks.] The order of the letters, or elements of speech.

Thou shalt not sigh,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign;
But I of these will rest an alphabet,
And by still practice learn to know thy meaning.
Shakespeare.

The letters of the alphabet, formed by the several motions of the mouth; and the great variety of syllables, composed of letters, and formed with almost equal velocity; and the endless number of words, capable of being framed out of the alphabet, either of more syllables or of one, are wonderful. Holder.

Taught by their nurses, little children get
This saying, sooner than their alphabet.
Dryd. jun. Juv.

To A'LPHABET. v. a. [from alphabet, noun.] To range in the order of the alphabet.

ALPHABE'TICAL. } adj. [from alphabet;
ALPHABE'TICK. } alphabetique, Fr.] In the order of the alphabet; according to the series of letters.

I have digested, in an alphabetical order, all the counties, corporations, and boroughs in Great-Britain, with their respective tempers. Swift.

ALPHABE'TICALLY. adv. [from alphabetical.] In an alphabetical manner; according to the order of the letters.

I had once in my thoughts, to contrive a grammar, more than I can now comprise in short hints; and a dictionary, alphabetically containing the words of the language, which the deaf person is to learn. Holder's Elements of Speech.

ALRE'ADY. adv. [from all and ready.] At this present time, or at some time past; opposed to futurity; as, Will he come soon? He is here already. Will it be done? It has been done already.

Touching our uniformity; that, which hath been already answered, may serve for answer.
Hooker.

You warn'd me still, of loving two;
Can I love him, already loving you?
Dryden's Indian Emperor.

See, the guards from you far eastern hill
Already move, no longer stay afford;
High in the air they wave the flaming sword,
Your signal to depart. Dryden's State of Innocence.

Methods for the advancement of piety are in the power of a prince, limited like ours, by a strict execution of the laws already in force. Swift.

Methinks, already I your tears survey;
Already hear, the horrid things they say;
Already see you, a degraded toast;
And all your honour, in a whisper lost! Pope.

ALS. adv. [als. Dutch.] Also; likewise: a word, now out of use.

Sad remembrance now the prince amoves,
With fresh desire his voyage to pursue;
Als Una earn'd her travel to renew. Fairy Queen.

A'LSO. adv. [from all and so.]

1. In the same manner; likewise.

In these two, no doubt, are contained the causes of the great deluge; as according to Moses, so also according to necessity: for our world affords no other treasures of water.
Burnet's Theory.

2. Also is sometimes nearly the same with and, and only conjoins the members of the sentence.

God do so to me, and more also.
1 Samuel, xiv. 44

A'LTAR. n. s. [altare, Lat. It is observed by Junius, that the word altar is received, with christianity, in all the European languages; and that altare is used by one of the Fathers, as appropriated to the Christian worship, in opposition to the aræ of gentilism.]

1. The place, where offerings to heaven are laid.

The goddess of the nuptial bed,
Tir'd with her vain devotions for the dead,
Resolv'd the tainted hand should be repell'd;
Which incense offer'd, and her altar held. Dryd.

2. The table in Christian churches, where the communion is administered.

Her grace rose; and, with modest paces,
Came to the altar; where she kneel'd, and saint-like
Cast her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly.
Shakespeare.

A'LTARAGE. n. s. [altaragium, Lat.] An emolument, arising to the priest from oblations, through the means of the altar. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'LTAR CLOTH. n. s. [from altar and cloth,] The cloth, thrown over the altar in churches.

I should set down the wealth, books, hangings, and altar-cloths which our kings gave this abbey.
Peacham on Drawing.

To A'LTER. v. a. [alterer, Fr. from alter, Lat.]

1. To change; to make otherwise than it is. To alter seems more properly to imply a change, made only in some part of a thing; as, to alter a writing, may be, to blot or interpolate it: to change it, may be, to substitute another in its place. With from and to; as, her face is altered from pale to red.

Do you note,
How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden?
How long her face is drawn? how pale she looks,
And of an earthly cold? Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Acts, appropriated to the worship of God by his own appointment, must continue so, till himself hath otherwise declared: for, who dares alter, what God hath appointed? Stillingfleet.

2. To take off, from a persuasion, practice, or sect.

For the way of writing plays in verse, I find it troublesome and slow: but I am no way altered, from my opinion of it; at least with any reasons, which have opposed it. Dryden.

To A'LTER. v. n. To become otherwise, than it was; as, the weather alters from bright to cloudy.

A'LTERABLE. adj. [from alter; alterable, Fr.] That, which may be altered or changed by something else; distinct from changeable, or that, which changes, or may change itself.

That alterable respects are realities in nature, will never be admitted by a considerate discerner. Glanville

Our condition in this world is mutable and uncertain, alterable by a thousand accidents, which we can neither foresee nor prevent. Rogers.

I wish they had been more clear in their directions upon that mighty point, Whether the settlement of the succession in the House of Hanover be alterable, or no? Swift.

A'LTERABLENESS. n. s. [from alterable.] The quality of being alterable, or admitting change from external causes.

A'LTERABLY. adv. [from alterable.] In such a manner as may be altered.

A'LTERAGE. n. s. [from alo.] The breeding, nourishing, or fostering of a child.

In Ireland they put their children to fosterers: the rich sell, the meaner sort buying the alterage of their children; and the reason is, because, in the opinion of the people, fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A'LTERANT. adj. [alterant, Fr.] That which has the power of producing changes in any thing.

And whether the body be alterant or altered, evermore a perception precedeth operation; for else all bodies would be alike one to another. Bacon.

ALTERA'TION. n. s. [from alter; alteration, Fr.]

1. The act of altering or changing.

Alteration, though it be from worse to better, hath in it inconveniences, and those weighty. Hooker.

2. The change made.

Why may we not presume, that God doth even call for such change or alteration, as the very condition of things themselves doth make necessary? Hooker.

So he, with difficulty and labour hard,
Mov'd on:
But he once past, soon after, when man fell,
Strange alteration! Sin, and Death, amain
Following his track (such was the will of heav'n!)
Pav'd after him a broad and beaten way. Milton

No other alteration will satisfy; nor this neither, very long, without an utter abolition of all order. South.

Appius Claudius admitted to the senate the sons of those who had been slaves; by which, and succeeding alterations, that council degenerated into a most corrupt body. Swift.

A'LTERATIVE. adj. [from alter.]

Medicines called alterative, are such as have no immediate sensible operation, but gradually gain upon the constitution, by changing the humours from a state of distemperature to health. They are opposed to evacuants. Quincy.

When there is an eruption of humour in any part, it is not cured merely by outward applications, but by such alterative medicines as purify the blood. Governm. of the Tongue.

ALTERCA'TION. n. s. [altercation, Fr. from altercor, Lat.] Debate; controversy; wrangle.

By this hot pursuit of lower controversies amongst men professing religion, and agreeing in the principal foundations thereof, they conceive hope, that, about the higher principles themselves, time will cause altercation to grow. Hooker.

Their whole life was little else than a perpetual wrangling and altercation; and that, many times, rather for victory and ostentation of wit, than a sober and serious search of truth. Hakewill on Providence.

ALTE'RN. adj. [alternus, Lat.] Acting by turns, in succession each to the other.

And God made two great lights, great for their use
To man; the greater to have rule by day,
The less by night, altern. Milton.

ALTE'RNACY. n. s. [from alternate.] Action performed by turns.

ALTE'RNATE. adj. [alternus, Lat.] Being by turns; one after another; reciprocal.

Friendship consists properly in mutual offices, and a generous strife in alternate acts of kindness. South.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprise,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise!
While, at each change, the son of Lybian Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

ALTE'RNATE ANGLES, [in geometry] are the internal angles made by a line cutting two parallels, and lying on the opposite sides of the cutting line; the one below the first parallel, and the other above the second.

ALTE'RNATE. n. s. [from alternate, adj.] That which happens alternately; vicissitude.

And rais'd in pleasure, or repos'd in ease,
Grateful alternates of substantial peace,
They bless the long nocturnal influence shed
On the crown'd goblet, and the genial bed. Prior.

To ALTE'RNATE. v. a. [alterno, Lat.]

1. To perform alternately.

Those who, in their course,
Melodious hymns about the sov'reign throne
Alternate all night long. Milton.

2. To change one thing for another reciprocally.

The most high God, in all things appertaining unto this life, for sundry wise ends, alternates the disposition of good and evil. Grew.

ALTE'RNATELY. adv. [from alternate.] In reciprocal succession, so that each shall be succeeded by that which it succeeds, as light follows darkness, and darkness follows light.

The princess Melesinda, bath'd in tears,
And toss'd alternately with hopes and fears,
Would learn from you the fortunes of her lord. Dryden.

Unhappy man! whom sorrow thus and rage
To different ills alternately engage. Prior.

The rays of light are, by some cause or other, alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes. Newton.

ALTE'RNATENESS. n. s. [from alternate.] The quality of being alternate, or of happening in reciprocal succession. Dict.

ALTERNA'TION. n. s. [from alternate.] The reciprocal succession of things.

The one would be oppressed with constant heat, the other with insufferable cold; and so the defect of alternation would utterly impair the generation of all things. Brown.

ALTE'RNATIVE. n. s [alternatif, Fr.] The given choice of two things; so that if one be rejected, the other must be taken.

A strange alternative——
Must ladies have a doctor, or a dance? Young.

ALTE'RNATIVELY. adv. [from alternative.] In alternate manner; by turns; reciprocally.

An appeal alternatively made may be tolerated by the civil law as valid. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ALTE'RNATIVENESS. n. s. [from alternative.] The quality or state of being alternative; reciprocation. Dict.

ALTE'RNITY. n. s. [from altern.] Reciprocal succession; vicissitude; turn; mutual change of one thing for another; reciprocation.

They imagine, that an animal of the vastest dimensions, and longest duration, should live in a continual motion, without the alternity and vicissitude of rest, whereby all other animals continue. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

ALTHO'UGH. conj. [from all and though. See THOUGH.] Notwithstanding; however it may be granted; however it may be that.

We all know, that many things are believed, although they be intricate, obscure, and dark although they exceed the reach and capacity of our wits, yea, although in this world they be no way possible to be understood. Hooker.

Me the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakesp.

The stress must be laid upon a majority, without which the laws would be of little weight, although they be good additional securities. Swift.

A'LTIGRADE. adj. [from altus and gradior, Lat.] Rising on high. Dict.

ALTI'LOQUENCE. n. s. [altus and loquor, Lat.] High speech; pompous language.

ALTI'METRY. n. s. [altimetria, Lat. from altus and μέτρον.] The art of taking or measuring altitudes or heights, whether accessible or inaccessible, generally performed by a quadrant.

ALTI'SONANT. } adj. [altisonus, Lat.]
ALTI'SONOUS. } High sounding; pompous or lofty in sound. Dict.

A'LTITUDE. n. s. [altitudo, Lat.]

1. Height of place; space measured upward.

Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude,
Which thou hast perpendicularly fall'n. Shakesp.

Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles, others but fifteen furlongs. Brown.

She shines above, we know, but in what place,
How near the throne, and heav'n's imperial face,
By our weak opticks is but vainly guess'd;
Distance and altitude conceal the rest. Dryd.

2. The elevation of any of the heavenly bodies above the horizon.

Even unto the latitude of fifty-two, the efficacy thereof is not much considerable, whether we consider its ascent, meridian, altitude, or abode above the horizon Brown's Vulg. Er.

Has not a poet more virtues and vices within his circle, cannot he observe them and their influences in their oppositions and conjunctions, in their altitudes and depressions? Rymer.

3. Situation with regard to lower things.

Those members which are pairs, stand by one another in equal altitude, and answer on each side one to another. Ray.

4. Height of excellence; superiority.

Your altitude offends the eyes
Of those who want the power to rise. Swift.

5. Height of degree; highest point.

He did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue. Shakesp.

ALTI'VOLANT. adj. [altivolans, Lat. altus and volo.] High flying. Dict.

A'LTOGETHER. adv. [from all and together.]

1. Completely; without restriction; without exception.

It is in vain to speak of planting laws, and plotting policy, till the people be altogether subdued, Spenser's State of Ireland.

We find not in the world any people that hath lived altogether without religion. Hooker.

If death and danger are things that really cannot be endured, no man could ever be obliged to suffer for his conscience, or to die for his religion; it being altogether as absurd to imagine a man obliged to suffer, as to do impossibilities. South.

I do not altogether disapprove of the manner of interweaving texts of scripture through the style of your sermon. Swift.

2. Conjunctly; in company. This is rather all together.

Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
And altogether with the Duke of Suffolk,
We'll quickly hoist duke Humphry from his seat. Shakesp.

A'LUDEL. n. s. [from a and lutum; that is, without lute.]

Aludels are subliming pots used in chemistry, without bottoms, and fitted into one another, as many as there is occasion for, without luting. At the bottom of the furnace is a pot that holds the matter to be sublimed; and at the top is a head, to retain the flowers that rise up. Quincy.

A'LUM. n. s. [alumen, Lat.]

A kind of mineral salt, of an acid taste, leaving in the mouth a sense of sweetness, accompanied with a considerable degree of astringency. The ancient naturalists allow of two sorts of alum, natural and factitious. The natural is found in the island of Milo, being a kind of whitish stone, very light, friable, and porous, and streaked with filaments resembling silver. England, Italy, and Flanders, are the countries where alum is principally produced; and the English roche-alum is made from a bluish mineral stone, in the hills of Yorkshire and Lancashire.

Saccharine alum is a composition of common alum, with rose-water and whites of eggs boiled together, to the consistence of a paste, and thus moulded at pleasure. As it cools, it grows hard as a stone.

Burnt alum is alum calcined over the fire.

Plumose or plume alum is a sort of saline mineral stone, of various colours, most commonly white, bordering on green; it rises in threads or fibres, resembling those of a feather; whence its name from pluma, a feather. Chambers.

By long beating the white of an egg with a lump of alum, you may bring it, for the most part, into white curds. Boyle.

ALUM STONE. A stone or calx used in surgery; perhaps alum calcined, which then becomes corrosive.

She gargled with oxycrate, and was in a few days cured, by touching it with the vitriol and alum stones. Wiseman.

ALU'MINOUS. adj. [from alum.] Relating to alum, or consisting of alum.

Nor do we reasonably conclude, because, by a cold and aluminous moisture, it is able awhile to resist the fire, that, from a peculiarity of nature, it subsisteth and liveth in it. Brown.

The tumour may have other mixture with it, to make it of a vitriolick or aluminous nature. Wiseman's Surgery.

A'LWAYS. adv. [It is sometimes written alway, compounded of all and way; ealle pæg, Sax. tuttavia, Ital.]

1. Perpetually; throughout all time: opposed to sometime, or to never.

That, which sometime is expedient, doth not always so continue. Hooker.

Man never is, but always to be blest. Pope.

2. Constantly; without variation: opposed to sometimes, or to now and then.

He is always great, when some great occasion is presented to him. Dryden.

A. M. stands for artium magister, or master of arts; the second degree of our universities, which, in some foreign countries is called doctor of philosophy.

AM. The first person of the verb to be. [See To BE.]

And God said unto Moses, I am that I am: and he said, thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I am hath sent me unto you. Exodus, iii. 14.

Come then, my soul: I call thee by that name,
Thou busy thing, from whence I know I am:
For knowing that I am, I know thou art;
Since that must needs exist, which can impart. Prior.

AMABI'LITY. n. s. [from amabilis, Lat.] Loveliness; the power of pleasing.

No rules can make amability, our minds and apprehensions make that; and so is our felicity. Taylor.

AMADETTO. n. s. A sort of pear. [See PEAR] so called, says Skinner, from the name of him who cultivated it.

A'MADOT. n. s. A sort of pear. [See PEAR.]

AMA'IN. adv. [from maine, or maigne, old Fr. derived from magnus, Lat.] With vehemence; with vigour; fiercely; violently. It is used of any action performed with precipitation, whether of fear or courage, or of any violent effort.

Great lords, from Ireland am I come amain,
To signify that rebels there are up. Shakesp.

What! when we fled amain, pursued, and struck
With heav'n's afflicting thunder, and besought
The deep to shelter us? Milton.

The hills, to their supply,
Vapour and exhalation, dusk and moist,
Sent up amain. Milton.

From hence the boar was rous'd, and sprung amain,
Like light'ning sudden, on the warriour train,
Beats down the trees before him, shakes the ground;
The forest echoes to the crackling sound,
Shout the fierce youth, and clamours ring around. Dryden.

AMA'LGAM. } n. s. [ἅμα and γαμεῖν.]
AMA'LGAMA. } The mixture of metals procured by amalgamation. See AMALGAMATION.

The induration of the amalgam appears to proceed from the new texture resulting from the coalition of the mingled ingredients, that make up the amalgam. Boyle.

To AMA'LGAMATE. v. a. [from amalgam.] To unite metals with quicksilver, which may be practised upon all metals, except iron and copper. The use of this operation is, to make the metal soft and ductile. Gold is, by this method, drawn over other materials by the gilders.

AMALGAMA'TION. n. s. [from amalgamate.] The act or practice of amalgamating metals.

Amalgamation is the mixing of mercury with any of the metals. The manner is thus in gold, the rest are answerable: Take six parts of mercury, mix them hot in a crucible, and pour them to one part of gold made red hot in another crucible; stir these well, that they may incorporate; then cast the mass into cold water, and wash it. Bacon.

AMANDA'TION. n. s. [from amando, Lat.] The act of sending on a message or employment.

AMANUE'NSIS. n. s. [Lat.] A person who writes what another dictates.

A'MARANTH. n. s. [amaranthus, Lat. from a and μαραίνω.] The name of a plant. Among the many species, the most beautiful are, 1. The tree amaranth. 2. The long pendulous amaranth, with reddish coloured seeds, commonly called Love lies a bleeding.

In poetry, it is sometimes an imaginary flower, supposed, according to its name, never to fade.

Immortal amaranth! a flower which once
In paradise, fast by the tree of life,
Began to bloom; but soon, for man's offence,
To heav'n remov'd, where first it grew, there grows,
And flow'rs aloft, shading the fount of life;
And where the river of bliss, thro' midst of heav'n,
Rowls o'er Elysian flow'rs her amber stream:
With these, that never fade, the spirits elect
Bind their resplendent locks, inwreath'd with beams. Milton's Par. Lost.

AMARA'NTHINE. adj. [amaranthinus, Lat.] Relating to amaranths; consisting of amaranths.

By the streams that ever flow,
By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er the Elysian flow'rs;
By those happy souls that dwell
In yellow meads of asphodel,
Or amaranthine bow'rs. Pope.

AMA'RITUDE. n. s. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness.

What amaritude or acrimony is deprehended in choler, it acquires from a commixture of melancholy, or external malign bodies. Harvey on Consumptions.

AMA'RULENCE. n. s. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness. Dict.

AMA'SMENT. n. s. [from amass.] A heap; an accumulation; a collection.

What is now, is but an amasment of imaginary conceptions, prejudices, ungrounded opinions, and infinite impostures. Glanville's Scepsis Scientif

To AMA'SS. v. a. [amasser, Fr.]

1. To collect together in one heap or mass.

The rich man is not blamed, as having made use of any unlawful means to amass riches, as having thriven by fraud and injustice. Atterbury's Ser.

When we would think of infinite space, or duration, we, at first step, usually make some very large idea, as perhaps of millions of ages, or miles, which possibly we double and multiply several times. All that we thus amass together in our thoughts, is positive, and the assemblage of a great number of positive ideas of space or duration. Locke.

2. In a figurative sense, to add one thing to another, generally with some share of reproach, either of eagerness or indiscrimination.

Such as amass all relations, must err in some, and be believed in many. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, lest your improvements only amass a heap of unintelligible phrases. Watts's Impr. of the Mind.

The life of Homer has been written, by amassing of all the traditions and hints the writers could meet with, in order to tell a story of him to the world. Pope.

AMA'SS. n. s. [amas, Fr.] An assemblage; an accumulation.

This pillar is but a medley or amass of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by stealth. Wotton.

To AMA'TE. v. a. [from a and mate.] See MATE.

1. To accompany; to entertain as a companion. It is now obsolete.

A lovely bevy of fair ladies sate,
Courted of many a jolly paramour,
The which did them in modest wise amate,
And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Queen.

2. To terrify; to strike with horrour. In this sense it is derived from the old French matter, to crush or subdue.

AMATO'RCULIST. n. s. [amatorculus, Lat.] A little insignificant lover; a pretender to affection. Dict.

A'MATORY. adj. [amatorius, Lat.] Relating to love; causing love.

It is the same thing whether one ravish Lucretia by force, as Tarquin, or by amatory potions not only allure her, but necessitate her to satisfy his lust, and incline her effectually, and draw her inevitably, to follow him spontaneously. Bramhall against Hobbes.

AMAUROSIS. n. s. [ἀμαυρόω.] A dimness of sight, not from any visible defect in the eye, but from some distemperature of the inner parts, occasioning the representations of flies and dust floating before the eyes: which appearances are the parts of the retina hid and compressed by the blood-vessels being too much distended; so that, in many of its parts, all sense is lost, and therefore no images can be painted upon them; whereby the eyes continually rolling round, many parts of objects falling successively upon them, are obscure The cure of this depends upon a removal of the stagnations in the extremities of those arteries which run over the bottom of the eye. Quincy.

To AMA'ZE. v. a. [from a and maze, perplexity.]

1. To confuse with terrour.

Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them, and they shall tremble at every moment, every man for his own life in the day of the fall. Ezekiel

2. To put into confusion with wonder.

Go, heav'nly pair, and with your dazzling virtues,
Your courage, truth, your innocence and love,
Amaze and charm mankind. Smith.

3. To put into perplexity.

That cannot choose but amaze him. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked. Shakesp.

AMA'ZE. n. s. [from the verb amaze.] Astonishment; confusion, either of fear or wonder.

Fairfax, whose name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze. Milton.
Meantime the Trojan cuts his wat'ry way,
Fix'd on his voyage, through the curling sea,
Then casting back his eyes with dire amaze,
Sees on the Punick shore the mounting blaze. Dry.

AMA'ZEDLY. adv. [from amazed.] Confusedly; with amazement; with confusion.

I speak amazedly, and it becomes
My marvel, and my message. Shakesp.
But why
Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?
Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprights. Shakesp.

AMA'ZEDNESS. n. s. [from amazed.] The state of being amazed; astonishment; wonder; confusion.

I was by at the opening of the farthel, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it; whereupon, after a little amazedness, we were all commanded out of the chamber. Shakesp.

AMA'ZEMENT. n. s. [from amaze.]

1. Such a confused apprehension as does not leave reason its full force; extreme fear; horrour.

He answer'd nought at all; but adding new
Fear to his first amazement, staring wide,
With stony eyes, and heartless hollow hue,
Astonish'd stood, as one that had espy'd
Infernal furies, with their chains unty'd. Fairy Q.
But look! amazement on thy mother sits;
O step between her and her fighting soul:
Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works. Shak.

2. Extreme dejection.

He ended, and his words impression left
Of much amazement to th' infernal crew,
Distracted and surpris'd with deep dismay
At these sad tidings. Milton.

3. Height of admiration.

Had you, some ages past, this race of glory
Run, with amazement we should read your story;
But living virtue, all atchievements past,
Meets envy still to grapple with at last. Waller.

4. Astonishment; wonder at an unexpected event.

They knew that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful Gate of the temple, and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him. Acts.

AMA'ZING. participial adj. [from amaze.] Wonderful; astonishing.

It is an amazing thing to see the present desolation of Italy, when one considers what incredible multitudes it abounded with during the reigns of the Roman Emperours. Addison.

AMA'ZINGLY. adv. [from amazing.] To a degree that may excite astonishment; wonderfully.

If we arise to the world of spirits, our knowledge of them must be amazingly imperfect, when there is not the least grain of sand but has too many difficulties belonging to it for the wisest philosopher to answer. Watts's Logick.

A'MAZON. n. s. [α and μάζω.] The Amazons were a race of women famous for valour, who inhabited Caucasus; they are so called from their cutting off their breasts, to use their weapons better. A warlike woman; a virago.

Stay, stay thy hands, thou art an amazon,
And fightest with the sword. Shakesp.

AMBAGES. n. s. [Lat.] A circuit of words; a circumlocutory form of speech; a multiplicity of words; an indirect manner of expression.

They gave those complex ideas names, that they might the more easily record and discourse of things they were daily conversant in, without long ambages and circumlocutions; and that the things they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the easier and quicker understood. Locke.

AMBA'GIOUS. adj. [from ambages.] Circumlocutory; perplexed; tedious Dict.

AMBASSA'DE. n. s. [ambassade, Fr.] Embassy; character or business of an ambassador: a word not now in use.

When you disgrace me in my ambassade,
Then I degraded you from being king. Shakesp.

AMBA'SSADOUR. n. s. [ambassadeur, Fr. embaxador, Span. It is written differently, as it is supposed to come from the French or Spanish language; and the original derivation being uncertain, it is not easy to settle its orthography. Some derive it from the Hebrew שלח to tell, and משלח a messenger; others from ambactus, which in the old Gaulish, signified a servant; whence ambascia, in low Latin, is found to signify service, and ambasciator, a servant; others deduce it from ambacht, in old Teutonick, signifying a government; and Junius mentions a possibility of its descent from ἀναβαίνω; and others from am for ad, and bassus, low, as supposing the act of sending an ambassadour, to be in some sort an act of submission. All these derivations lead to write ambassadour, not embassadour.] A person sent in a public manner from one sovereign power to another, and supposed to represent the power from which he is sent. The person of an ambassadour is inviolable.

Ambassadour is, in popular language, the general name of a messenger from a sovereign power, and sometimes, ludicrously, from common persons. In the juridical and formal language, it signifies particularly a minister of the highest rank residing in another country, and is distinguished from an envoy, who is of less dignity.

Give first admittance to th' ambassadours. Shak.
Rais'd by these hopes, I sent no news before,
Nor ask'd your leave, nor did your faith implore;
But come without a pledge, my own ambassadour.
Dryden.
Oft have their black ambassadours appear'd
Loaden with gifts, and fill'd the courts of Zama.

AMBA'SSADRESS. n. s. [ambassadrice, Fr.]

1. The lady of an ambassadour.

2. In ludicrous language, a woman sent on a message.

Well, my ambassadress——
Come you to menace war, and loud defiance?
Or does the peaceful olive grace your brow? Rowe.

A'MBASSAGE. n. s. [from ambassadour.] An embassy; the business of an ambassadour.

Maximilian entertained them with dilatory answers; so as the formal part of their ambassage might well warrant their further stay. Bacon.

A'MBER. n. s. [from ambar, Arab. whence the lower writers formed ambarum.]

A yellow transparent substance of a gummous or bituminous consistence, but a resinous taste, and a smell like oil of turpentine; chiefly found in the Baltick sea, along the coasts of Prussia. Some naturalists refer it to the vegetable, others to the mineral, and some even to the animal kingdom. Pliny describes it as a resinous juice, oozing from aged pines and firs, and discharged thence into the sea. He adds, that it was hence the ancients gave it the denomination of succinum, from succus, juice. Some have imagined it a concretion of the tears of birds; others, the urine of a beast; others, the scum of the lake Cephisis, near the Atlantick; others, a congelation formed in the Baltick, and in some fountains, where it is found swimming like pitch. Others suppose it a bitumen trickling into the sea from subterraneous sources; but this opinion is also discarded, as good amber having been found in digging at a considerable distance from the sea, as that gathered on the coast. Boerhaave ranks it with camphire, which is a concrete oil of aromatic plants, elaborated by heat into a crystalline form. Within some pieces of amber have been found leaves and insects included; which seems to indicate, either that the amber was originally in a fluid state, or that, having been exposed to the sun, it was softened, and rendered susceptible of the leaves and insects. Amber, when rubbed, draws or attracts bodies to it; and, by friction, is brought to yield light pretty copiously in the dark. Some distinguish amber into yellow, white, brown, and black: but the two latter are supposed to be of a different nature and denomination; the one called jet, the other ambergris. Trevoux, Chambers.

Liquid amber is a kind of native balsam or resin, like turpentine; clear, reddish, or yellowish; of a pleasant smell, almost like ambergris. It flows from an incision made in the bark of a fine large tree in New Spain, called by the natives ococol. Chambers.

If light penetrateth any clear body, that is coloured, as painted glass, amber, water, and the like, it gives the light the colour of its medium. Peacham.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar shade;
But poplar wreaths around his temples spread,
And tears of amber trickled down his head. Addis.
The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay,
And studded amber darts a golden ray. Pope.

A'MBER. adj. Consisting of amber.

With scarfs, and fans, and double charge of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knav'ry. Shakesp.

A'MBER-DRINK. n. s. Drink of the colour of amber, or resembling amber in colour and transparency.

All your clear amber-drink is flat. Bacon.

A'MBERGRIS. n. s. [from amber and gris, or grey; that is, grey amber.]

A fragrant drug, that melts almost like wax, commonly of a greyish or ash colour, used both as a perfume and a cordial. Some imagine it to be the excrement of a bird, which, being melted by the heat of the sun, and washed off the shore by the waves, is swallowed by whales, who return it back in the condition we find it. Others conclude it to be the excrement of a cetaceous fish, because sometimes found in the intestines of such animals. But we have no instance of any excrement capable of melting like wax; and if it were the excrement of a whale, it should rather be found where these animals abound, as about Greenland. Others take it for a kind of wax or gum, which distils from trees, and drops into the sea, where it congeals. Many of the orientals imagine it springs out of the sea, as naphtha does out of some fountains. Others assert it to be a vegetable production, issuing out of the root of a tree, whose roots always shoot towards the sea, and discharge themselves into it. Others maintain, that ambergris is made from the honeycombs, which fall into the sea from the rocks, where the bees had formed their nests; several persons having seen pieces that were half ambergris, and half plain honey-comb; and others have found large pieces of ambergris, in which, when broke, honey-comb, and honey too, were found in the middle. Neumann absolutely denies it to be an animal substance, as not yielding, in the analysis, any one animal principle. He concludes it to be a bitumen issuing out of the earth into the sea; at first of a viscous consistence, but hardening, by its mixture with some liquid naphtha, into the form in which we find it. Trevoux. Chambers.

Bermudas wall'd with rocks, who does not know
That happy island where huge lemons grow,
Where shining pearl, coral, and many a pound,
On the rich shore, of ambergris is found? Waller.

A'MBER-SEED, or musk-seed, resembles millet, is of a bitterish taste, and brought dry from Martinico and Egypt. Chamb.

A'MBER-TREE. n. s. [frutex Africanus ambram spirans] A shrub, whose beauty is in its small evergreen leaves, which grow as close as heath, and, being bruised between the fingers, emit a very fragrant odour. Miller.

AMBIDEXTER. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A man who has equally the use of both his hands.

Rodiginus, undertaking to give a reason of ambidexters, and left-handed men, delivereth a third opinion. Brown.

2. A man who is equally ready to act on either side, in party disputes. This sense is ludicrous.

AMBIDEXTE'RITY. n. s. [from ambidexter.]

1. The quality of being able equally to use both hands.
2. Double dealing.

AMBIDE'XTROUS. adj. [from ambidexter, Lat.]

1. Having with equal facility the use of either hand.

Others, not considering ambidextrous and left-handed men, do totally submit unto the efficacy of the liver. Brown.

2. Double dealing; practising on both sides.

Æsop condemns the double practices of trimmers, and all false, shuffling, and ambidextrous dealings. L'Estrange.

AMBIDE'XTROUSNESS. n. s. [from ambidextrous.] The quality of being ambidextrous. Dict.

A'MBIENT. adj. [ambiens, Lat.] Surrounding; encompassing; investing.

This which yields or fills
All space, the ambient air wide interfus'd. Milton.

The thickness of a plate requisite to produce any colour, depends only on the density of the plate, and not on that of the ambient medium. Newton's Opticks.

Around him dance the rosy hours,
And damasking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient sweets perfume the morn, Fenton to Lord Gower.

Illustrious virtues, who by turns have rose
With happy laws her empire to sustain,
And with full pow'r assert her ambient main. Prior.

The ambient æther is too liquid and empty, to impel horizontally with that prodigious celerity. Bentley.

AMBIGU. n. s. [French.] An entertainment, consisting not of regular courses, but of a medley of dishes set on together.

When straiten'd in your time, and servants few,
You'd richly then compose an ambigu;
Where first and second course, and your desert,
All in one single table have their part. King's Art of Cookery.

AMBIGU'ITY. n. s. [from ambiguous.] Doubtfulness of meaning; uncertainty of signification; double meaning.

With ambiguities they often entangle themselves, not marking what doth agree to the word of God in itself, and what in regard of outward accidents. Hooker.

We can clear these ambiguities,
And know their spring, their head, their true descent. Shakesp.

The words are of single signification, without any ambiguity; and therefore I shall not trouble you, by straining for an interpretation, where there is no difficulty; or distinction, where there is no difference. South.

AMBI'GUOUS. adj. [ambiguus, Lat.]

1. Doubtful; having two meanings; of uncertain signification.

But what have been thy answers, what but dark,
Ambiguous, and with doubtful sense deluding? Milton.

Some expressions in the covenant were ambiguous, and were left so; because the persons who framed them were not all of one mind. Clarendon.

2. Applied to persons using doubtful expressions. It is applied to expressions, or those that use them, not to a dubious or suspended state of mind.

Th' ambiguous god, who rul'd her lab'ring breast,
In these mysterious words his mind exprest;
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. Dryden.

Silence at length the gay Antinous broke,
Constrain'd a smile, and thus ambiguous spoke. Pope.

AMBI'GUOUSLY. adv. [from ambiguous.] In an ambiguous manner; doubtfully; uncertainly; with double meaning.

AMBI'GUOUSNESS. n. s. [from ambiguous.] The quality of being ambiguous; uncertainty of meaning; duplicity of signification.

AMBI'LOGY. n. s. [from ambo, Lat. and λογος.] Talk of ambiguous or doubtful signification. Dict.

AMBI'LOQUOUS. adj. [from ambo and loquor, Lat.] Using ambiguous and doubtful expressions. Dict.

AMBI'LOQUY. n. s. [ambiloquium, Lat.] The use of doubtful and indeterminate expressions; discourse of doubtful meaning. Dict.

A'MBIT. n. s. [ambitus, Lat.] The compass or circuit of any thing; the line that encompasses any thing.

The tusk of a wild boar winds about almost into a perfect ring or hoop; only it is a little writhen. In measuring by the ambit, it is long or round about a foot and two inches; its basis an inch over. Grew's Musæum.

AMBI'TION. n. s. [ambitio, Lat.] The desire of something higher than is possessed at present.

1. The desire of preferment or honour.

Who would think, without having such a mind as Antiphilus, that so great goodness could not have bound gratefulness? and so high advancement not have satisfied his ambition? Sidney.

2. The desire of any thing great or excellent.

The quick'ning power would be, and so would rest;
The sense would not be only, but be well:
But wit's ambition longeth to the best,
For it desires in endless bliss to dwell. Davies.

Urge them, while their souls
Are capable of this ambition;
Lest zeal, now melted by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse,
Cool and congeal again to what it was. Shakesp.

3. It is used with to before a verb, and of before a noun.

I had a very early ambition to recommend myself to your Lordship's patronage. Addison.

There was an ambition of wit, and an affectation of gayety. Pope's Preface to his Letters.

AMBI'TIOUS. adj. [ambitiosus, Lat.]

1. Seized or touched with ambition; desirous of advancement; eager of honours; aspiring. It has the particle of before the object of ambition, if a noun; to, if expressed by a verb.

We seem ambitious God's whole work t' undo. Donne.

The neighb'ring monarchs, by thy beauty led,
Contend in crowds, ambitious of thy bed:
The world is at thy choice, except but one,
Except but him thou canst not choose alone. Dryden.

You have been pleased not to suffer an old man to go discontented out of the world, for want of that protection, of which he had been so long ambitious. Dryden.

Trajan, a prince ambitious of glory, descended to the mouths of the Tigris and Euphrates, and went upon the ocean, where, seeing a vessel trading to the Indies, he had thoughts of outdoing Alexander. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Eager to grow bigger; aspiring.

I have seen
Th' ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam,
To be exalted with the threat'ning clouds. Shakesp.

AMBI'TIOUSLY. adv. [from ambitious.] In an ambitious manner; with eagerness of advancement or preference.

With such glad hearts did our despairing men
Salute th' appearance of the prince's fleet;
And each ambitiously would claim the ken,
That with first eyes did distant safety meet. Dryd.
Here Flecknoe, as a place to fame well known,
Ambitiously design'd his Sh—'s throne. Dryden.

AMBI'TIOUSNESS. n. s. [from ambitious.] The quality of being ambitious.

A'MBITUDE. n. s. [ambio, Lat.] Compass; circuit; circumference. Dict.

To A'MBLE. v. n. [ambler, Fr. ambulo, Lat.]

1. To move upon an amble. See AMBLE.

It is good, on some occasions, to enjoy as much of the present, as will not endanger our futurity; and to provide ourselves of the virtuoso's saddle, which will be sure to amble, when the world is upon the hardest trot. Dryden.

2. To move easily, without hard shocks, or shaking.

Who ambles time withal?—A rich man that hath not the gout; for he lives merrily, because he feels not pain; knowing no burthen of heavy tedious penury: him time ambles withal.
Shakesp. As you like it.

3. In a ludicrous sense, to move with submission, and by direction; as a horse that ambles uses a gait not natural.

A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimpering she,
Shall make him amble on a gossip's message,
And take the distaff with a hand as patient,
As e'er did Hercules. Rowe's Jane Shore

4. To walk daintily and affectedly.

I am rudely stampt, and want love's majesty,
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph. Shakesp.

A'MBLE. n. s. [from To amble] A pace or movement in which the horse removes both his legs on one side; as, on the far side, he removes his fore and hinder leg of the same side at one time, whilst his legs on the near side stand still; and, when the far legs are upon the ground, the near side removes the fore leg and hinder leg, and the legs on the far side stand still. An amble is the first pace of young colts, but when they have strength to trot, they quit it. There is no amble in the manage; riding-masters allow only of walk, trot, and gallop. A horse may be put from a trot to a gallop without stopping; but he cannot be put from an amble to a gallop without a stop, which interrupts the justness of the manage. Farrier's Dict.

A'MBLER. n. s. [from To amble.] A horse that has been taught to amble; a pacer.

A'MBLINGLY. adv. [from ambling.] With an ambling movement.

AMBROSIA. n. s. [ἀμβροσία.]

1. The imaginary food of the gods, from which every thing eminently pleasing to the smell or taste is called ambrosia.

2. The name of a plant

It has male flosculous flowers, produced on separate parts of the same plant from the fruit, having no visible petals: the fruit which succeeds the female flowers, is shaped like a club, and is prickly, containing one oblong seed in each.

The species are, 1. The marine or sea ambrosia. 2. Taller unsavoury sea ambrosia. 3. The tallest Canada ambrosia. Miller.

AMBRO'SIAL. adj. [from ambrosia.] Partaking of the nature or qualities of ambrosia; fragrant; delicious; delectable.

Thus while God spake, ambrosial fragrance fill'd
All heav'n, and in the blessed spirits elect
Sense of new joy ineffable diffus'd. Milton.
The gifts of heav'n my following song pursues,
Aerial honey and ambrosial dews. Dryden.
To farthest shores th' ambrosial spirit flies,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the skies. Pope.

A'MBRY. n. s. [a word corrupted from almonry.]

1. The place where the almoner lives, or where alms are distributed.

2. The place where plate and utensils for housekeeping are kept; also a cupboard for keeping cold victuals: a word still used in the northern counties, and in Scotland.

AMBS ACE. n. s. [from ambo, Lat. and ace.] A double ace; so called when two dice turn up the ace.

I had rather be in this choice, than throw ambs ace for my life. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

This will be yet clearer, by considering his own instance of casting ambs ace, though it partake more of contingency than of freedom. Supposing the posiure of the party's hand who did throw the dice, supposing the figure of the table, and of the dice themselves, supposing the measure of force applied, and supposing all other things which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary.
Bramhall against Hobbes.

AMBULA'TION. n. s. [ambulatio, Lat.] The act of walking.

From the occult and invisible motion of the muscles, in station, proceed more offensive lassitudes than from ambulation. Brown's Vulg. Er.

A'MBULATORY. adj. [ambulo, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or faculty of walking.

The gradient, or ambulatory, are such as require some basis, or bottom, to uphold them in their motions: such were those self-moving statues, which, unless violently detained, would of themselves run away. Wilkins's Math. Magick.

2. That which happens during a passage or walk.

He was sent to conduct hither the princess, of whom his majesty had an ambulatory view in his travels. Wotton.

3. Moveable; as, an ambulatory court; a court which removes from place to place for the exercise of its jurisdiction.

A'MBURY. n. s. A bloody wart on any part of a horse's body.

AMBUSCA'DE. n. s. [embuscade, Fr. See AMBUSH.] A private station in which men lie to surprise others; ambush.

Then waving high her torch, the signal made,
Which rous'd the Grecians from their ambuscade.
Dryden.

When I behold a fashionable table set out, I fancy that gouts, fevers, and lethargies with innumerable distempers, lie in ambuscade among the dishes. Addison.

AMBUSCA'DO. n. s. [emboscada, Span.] A private post, in order to surprise an enemy.

Sometimes she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,
And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuscadoes, Spanish blades,
Of healths five fathom deep.
Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

A'MBUSH. n. s. [ambusche, Fr. from bois, a wood; whence embuscher, to hide in woods, ambushes being commonly laid under the concealment of thick forests.]

1. The post where soldiers or assassins are placed, in order to fall unexpectedly upon an enemy.

The residue retired deceitfully towards the place of their ambush, whence issued more. Then the earl maintained the fight. But the enemy, intending to draw the English further into their ambush, turned away at an easy pace. Hayward.

Charge, charge, their ground the faint Taxallans yield,
Bold in close ambush, base in open field.
Dryden's Indian Emperor.

2. The act of surprising another, by lying in wait, or lodging in a secret post.

Nor shall we need,
With dangerous expedition, to invade
Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault or siege,
Or ambush from the deep. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. The state of being posted privately, in order to surprise; the state of lying in wait.

4. Perhaps the persons placed in private stations.

For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,
Once did I lay an ambush for your life. Shak. R II.

A'MBUSHED. adj. [from ambush.] Placed in ambush; lying in wait.

Thick as the shades, there issue swarming bands
Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and dress,
To be Taxallan enemies I guess.
Dryden's Indian Emperor.

A'MBUSHMENT. n. s. [from ambush; which see.] Ambush; surprise: a word now not used.

Like as a wily fox, that having spied
Where on a sunny bank the lambs do play,
Full closely creeping by the hinder side,
Lies in ambushment of his hoped prey. Spenser.

AMBU'ST. adj. [ambustus, Lat.] Burnt; scalded. Dict.

AMBU'STION. n. s. [ambustio, Lat.] A burn; a scald.

A'MEL. n. s. [email, Fr.] The matter with which the variegated works are overlaid, which we call enamelled.

The materials of glass melted with calcined tin, compose an undiaphanous body. This white amel is the basis of all those fine concretes that goldsmiths and artificers employ in the curious art of enamelling. Boyle on Colours.

AMEN. adv. [a word, of which the original has given rise to many conjectures. Scaliger writes, that it is Arabick; and the Rabbies make it the compound of the initials of three words, signifying the Lord is a faithful king; but the word seems merely Hebrew, אמן, which, with a long train of derivatives, signifies firmness, certainty, fidelity.] A term used in devotions, by which, at the end of a prayer, we mean, so be it: at the end of a creed, so it is.

One cried, God bless us! and, Amen! the other,
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands,
Listening their fear, I could not say Amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakesp. Macb.
Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, from everlasting and to everlasting, Amen and amen.
Psalm xli. 13.

AME'NABLE. adj. [amesnable, Fr. amener quelqu'un, in the French courts, signifies, to oblige one to appear to answer a charge exhibited against him.] Responsible; subject so as to be liable to enquiries or accounts.

Again, because the inferiour sort were loose and poor, and not amenable to the law, he provided, by another act, that five of the best and eldest persons of every sept, should bring in all the idle persons of their surname, to be justified by the law.
Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A'MENAGE. } n. s. [They seem to come
A'MENANCE. } from amener, Fr.] Conduct; behaviour; mien; words disused.

For he is fit to use in all assays,
Whether for arms and warlike amenance,
Or else for wise and civil governance. Spenser.
Well kend him so far space,
Th' enchanter, by his arms and amenance,
When under him he saw his Lybian steed to prance. Fairy Queen.

To AME'ND. v. a. [amender, Fr. emendo, Lat.]

1. To correct; to change any thing that is wrong to something better.
2. To reform the life, or leave wickedness. In these two cases we usually write mend. See MEND.

Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place. Jerem. vii. 3.

3. To restore passages in writers, which the copiers are supposed to have depraved; to recover the true reading.

To AME'ND. v. n. To grow better. To amend differs from to improve; to improve supposes or not denies that the thing is well already, but to amend implies something wrong.

As my fortune either amends or impairs, I may declare it unto you. Sidney.
At his touch
Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They presently amend. Shakesp. Macbeth.

AMENDE. n. s. [French.] This word, in French, signifies a fine, by which recompense is supposed to be made for the fault committed. We use, in a cognate signification, the word amends.

AME'NDMENT. n. s. [amendement, Fr.]

1. A change from bad for the better.

Before it was presented on the stage, some things in it have passed your approbation and amendment. Dryden.
Man is always mending and altering his works; but nature observes the same tenour, because her works are so perfect, that there is no place for amendments; nothing that can be reprehended.
Ray on the Creation
There are many natural defects in the understanding, capable of amendment, which are overlooked and wholly neglected. Locke.

2. Reformation of life.

Our Lord and Saviour was of opinion, that they which would not be drawn to amendment of life, by the testimony which Moses and the prophets have given, concerning the miseries that follow sinners after death, were not likely to be persuaded by other means, although God from the dead should have raised them up preachers. Hooker.
Behold! famine and plague, tribulation and anguish, are sent as scourges for amendment.
2 Esdras, xvi. 19.
Though a serious purpose of amendment, and true acts of contrition, before the habit, may be accepted by God; yet there is no sure judgment whether this purpose be serious, or these acts true acts of contrition. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.

3. Recovery of health.

Your honour's players, hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleasant comedy. Shakesp.

AME'NDMENT. n. s. [emendatio, Lat.] It signifies, in law, the correction of an errour committed in a process, and espied before or after judgment; and sometimes after the party's seeking advantage by the errour. Blount

AME'NDER. n. s. [from amend.] The person that amends any thing.

AME'NDS. n. s. [amende, Fr. from which it seems to be accidentally corrupted.] Recompense; compensation; atonement.

If I have too austerely punish'd you,
Your compensation makes amends. Shakesp
Of the amends recovered, little or nothing returns to those that had suffered the wrong, but commonly all runs into the prince's coffers.
Raleigh's Essays.
There I, a pris'ner chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,
Unwholesome draught; but here I feel amends,
The breath of heav'n fresh blowing, pure and sweet,
With day-spring born; here leave me to respire.
Milton.
Some little hopes I have yet remaining, that I may make the world some part of amends for many ill plays, by an heroick poem. Dryden
If our souls be immortal, this makes abundant amends and compensation for the frailties of life, and sufferings of this state. Tillotson.
It is a strong argument for retribution hereafter, that virtuous persons are very often unfortunate, and vicious persons prosperous: which is repugnant to the nature of a Being, who appears infinitely wise and good in all his works; unless we may suppose that such a promiscuous distribution, which was necessary for carrying on the designs of providence in this life, will be rectified and made amends for in another. Spectator.

AME'NITY. n. s. [amenité, Fr. amœnitas, Lat.] Pleasantness; agreeableness of situation.

If the situation of Babylon was such at first as in the days of Herodotus, it was a seat of amenity and pleasure. Brown.

AMENTA'CEOUS. adj. [amentatus, Lat.] Hanging as by a thread.

The pine tree hath amentaceous flowers or katkins. Miller.

To AME'RCE. v. a. [amercier, Fr ὀφθαλμὸν μὲν ἄμερσε, seems to give the original.]

1. To punish with a pecuniary penalty; to exact a fine; to inflict a forfeiture. It is a word originally juridical, but adopted by other writers, and is used by Spenser of punishments in general.

Where every one that misseth then her make,
Shall be by him amerc'd with penance due. Spenser.
But I'll amerce you with so strong a fine,
That you shall all repent the loss of mine. Shak.
All the suitors were considerably amerced; yet this proved but an ineffectual remedy for those mischiefs. Hale.

2. Sometimes with the particle in before the fine.

They shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel. Deut. xxii. 19.

3. Sometimes it is used, in imitation of the Greek construction, with the particle of.

Millions of spirits, for his fault amerc'd
Of heav'n, and from eternal splendours flung
For his revolt. Milton.

AME'RCER. n. s. [from amerce.] He that sets a fine upon any misdemeanour; he that decrees or inflicts any pecuniary punishment or forfeiture.

AME'RCEMENT. } n. s. [from amerce.]
AME'RCIAMENT. } The pecuniary punishment of an offender, who stands at the mercy of the king, or other lord in his court. Cowell.

All amercements and fines that shall be imposed upon them, shall come unto themselves.
Spenser's State of Ireland.

AMES ACE. n. s. [a corruption of the word ambs ace, which appears, from very old authorities, to have been early softened by omitting the b.] Two aces on two dice.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky sice;
To shun ames ace, that swept my stakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryd.

A'MESS. n. s. [corrupted from amice.] A priest's vestment. Dict.

AMETHO'DICAL. adj. [from a and method.] Out of method; without method; irregular.

A'METHYST. n. s. [ἀμέθυστος, contrary to wine, or contrary to drunkenness: so called, either because it is not quite of the colour of wine, or because it was imagined to prevent inebriation.]

A precious stone of a violet colour, bordering on purple. The oriental amethyst is the hardest, scarcest, and most valuable; it is generally of a dove colour, though some are purple, and others white like the diamond. The German is of a violet colour, and the Spanish are of three sorts; the best are the blackest or deepest violet: others are almost quite white, and some few tinctured with yellow. The amethyst is not extremely hard, but easy to be engraved upon, and is next in value to the emerald. Savary. Chambers.
Some stones approached the granate complexion; and several nearly resembled the amethyst.
Woodward.

A'METHYST. [in heraldry] signifies the same colour in a noblemen's coat, that pur pure does in a gentleman's.

AMETHY'STINE. adj. [from amethyst.] Resembling an amethyst in colour.

A kind of amethystine flint, not composed of crystals or grains, but one entire massy stone.
Grew.

A'MIABLE. adj. [aimable, Fr.]

1. Lovely; pleasing.

That which is good in the actions of men, doth not only delight as profitable, but as amiable also.
Hooker.
She told her, while she kept it,
'Twould make her amiable, subdue my father
Entirely to her love; but if she lost it,
Or made a gift of it, my father's eye
Should hold her loathed. Shakesp. Othello

2. Pretending love; shewing love.

Lay amiable seige to the honesty of this Ford's wife; use your art of wooing. Shakesp.

A'MIABLENESS. n. s. [from amiable.] The quality of being amiable; loveliness; power of raising love.

As soon as the natural gayety and amiableness of the young man wears off, they have nothing left to commend them, but lie by among the lumber and refuse of the species. Addison.

A'MIABLY. adv. [from amiable.] In an amiable manner; in such a manner as to excite love.

A'MICABLE. adj. [amicabilis, Lat.] Friendly; kind. It is commonly used of more than one; as, they live in an amicable manner; but we seldom say, an amicable action, or an amicable man, though it be so used in this passage.

O grace serene! oh virtue heav'nly fair,
Divine oblivion of low-thoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky!
And faith, our early immortality!
Enter each mild, each amicable guest;
Receive and wrap me in eternal rest. Pope.

A'MICABLENESS. n. s. [from amicable.] The quality of being amiable; friendliness; goodwill.

A'MICABLY. adv. [from amicable.] In an amicable manner; in a friendly way; with goodwill and concord.

They see
Through the dun mist, in blooming beauty fresh,
Two lovely youths, that amicably walkt
O'er verdant meads, and pleas'd, perhaps, revolv'd
Anna's late conquests. Philips.

I found my subjects amicably join
To lessen their defects by citing mine. Prior.

In Holland itself, where it is pretended that the variety of sects live so amicably together, it is notorious how a turbulent party, joining with the Armenians, did attempt to destroy the republick. Swift's Church of England Man.

A'MICE. n. s. [amictus, Lat. amict, Fr. Primum ex sex indumentis episcopo et presbyteriis communibus sunt, amictus, alba, cingulum, stola, manipulus, et planeta. Du Cange. Amictus quo collum stringitur, et pectus tegitur, castitatem interioris hominis designat: tegit enim cor, ne vanitates cogitet; stringet autem collum, ne inde ad linguam transeat mendacium. Bruno.] The first or undermost part of a priest's habit, over which he wears the alb.

Thus pass'd the night so foul, till morning fair
Came forth with pilgrim steps in amice grey. Milton.

On some a priest, succinct in amice white,
Attends. Pope.

AMI'D. } prep. [from a and mid, or
AMI'DST. } midst.]

1. In the midst; equally distant from either extremity.

Of the fruit
Of each tree in the garden we may eat;
But of the fruit of this fair tree amidst
The garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat. Milton.

The two ports, the bagnio, and Donatelli's statue of the great duke, amidst the four slaves, chained to his pedestal, are very noble sights. Addison.

2. Mingled with; surrounded by; in the ambit of another thing.

Amid my flock with woe my voice I tear,
And, but bewitch'd, who to his flock would moan? Sidney.

So hills amid the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton.

What have I done, to name that wealthy swain,
The boar amidst my crystal streams I bring,
And southern winds to blast my flow'ry spring. Dryden.

Amata's breast the fury thus invades,
And fires with rage amid the sylvan shades. Dryden.

3. Amongst; conjoined with.

What tho' no real voice nor sound
Amid their radiant orbs be found?
In reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice,
For ever singing, as they shine,
"The hand that made us is divine." Addison.

AMI'SS. adv. [from a, which, in this form of composition, often signifies according to, and miss, the English particle, which shews any thing, like the Greek ἁμαρτάνω, to be wrong; as, to miscount, to count erroneously; to misdo, to commit a crime: amiss therefore signifies not right, or out of order.]

1. Faulty; criminal.

For that which thou hast sworn to do amiss,
Is yet amiss, when it is truly done. Shakesp. King John.

2. Faultily; criminally.

We hope therefore to reform ourselves, if at any time we have done amiss, is not to sever ourselves from the church we were of before. Hooker.

O ye powers that search
The heart of man, and weigh his inmost thoughts,
If I have done amiss, impute it not! Addison.

3. In an ill sense.

She sigh'd withal, they constru'd all amiss,
And thought she wish'd to kill who long'd to kiss. Fairfax.

4. Wrong; improper; unfit.

Examples have not generally the force of laws, which all men ought to keep, but of counsels only and persuasions, not amiss to be followed by them, whose case is the like. Hooker.

Methinks, though a man had all science, and all principles, yet it might not be amiss to have some conscience. Tillotson.

5. Wrong; not according to the perfection of the thing, whatever it be.

Your kindred is not much amiss, 'tis true;
Yet I am somewhat better born than you. Dryd.

I built a wall, and when the mason's plaid the knaves, nothing delighted me so much as to stand by, while my servants threw down what was amiss. Swift.

6. Reproachful; irreverent.

Every people, nation, and language, which speak any thing amiss against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, shall be cut in pieces, and their houses shall be made a dunghill; because there is no other God that can deliver after this sort. Daniel, iii. 29.

7. Impaired in health; as, I was somewhat amiss yesterday, but am well today.

8. Amiss is marked as an adverb, though it cannot always be adverbially rendered; because it always follows the substantive to which it relates, contrary to the nature of adjectives in English; and though we say the action was amiss, we never say an amiss action.

9. Amiss is used by Shakespeare as a noun substantive.

To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss. Hamlet.

AMI'SSION. n. s. [amissio, Lat.] Loss.

To AMI'T. v. a. [amitto, Lat.] To lose: a word little in use.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a consistence or determination of its diffluency, and amitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulg. Err.

A'MITY. n. s. [amitié, Fr. amicitia, Lat.] Friendship, whether publick between nations opposed to war; or among the people, opposed to discord; or between private persons.

The prophet David did think, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Hooker

The monarchy of Great Britain was in league and amity with all the world. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

You have a noble and a true conceit
Of godlike amity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord. Shakesp.

And ye, oh Tyrians, with immortal hate
Pursue this race, this service dedicate
To my deplored ashes; let there be
'Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Denham.

AMMO'NIAC. n. s. The name of a drug.

GUM AMMONIAC is brought from the East Indies, and is supposed to ooze from an umbelliferous plant. Dioscorides says, it is the juice of a kind of ferula growing in Barbary, and the plant is called agasyllis. Pliny calls the tree metopion, which, he says, grows near the Temple of Jupiter Ammon, whence the gum takes its name. It ought to be in dry drops, white within, yellowish without, easily fusible, resinous, somewhat bitter, and of a very sharp taste and smell, somewhat like garlick. This gum is said to have served the ancients for incense, in their sacrifices. Savary. Trevoux.

SAL AMMONIAC is a volatile salt of two kinds, ancient and modern. The ancient sort, described by Pliny and Dioscorides, was a native salt, generated in those large inns where the crowds of pilgrims, coming from the temple of Jupiter Ammon, used to lodge, who travelling upon camels, and those creatures in Cyrene, where that celebrated temple stood, urining in the stables, or in the parched sands, out of this urine, which is remarkably strong, arose a kind of salt, denominated sometimes from the temple, Ammoniac, and sometimes from the country, Cyreniac. No more of this salt is produced there; and from this deficiency, some suspect there never was any such thing but this suspicion is removed, by the large quantities of a salt nearly of the same nature, thrown out by mount Ætna.

The modern sal ammoniac is made in Egypt, where long-necked glass bottles, filled with soot, a little sea salt, and the urine of cattle, and having their mouths luted with a piece of wet cotton, are placed over an oven or furnace, in a thick bed of ashes, nothing but the necks appearing, and kept there two days and a night, with a continual strong fire. The steam swells up the cotton, and forms a paste at the vent-hole, hindering the salts from evaporating; which stick to the top of the bottle, and are taken out in those large cakes, which they send to England. Only soot exhaled from dung, is the proper ingredient in this preparation; and the dung of camels affords the strongest.

Our chymists imitate the Egyptian sal ammoniac, by adding one part of common salt to five of urine; with which some mix that quantity of soot, and putting the whole in a vessel, they raise from it, by sublimation, a white, friable, farinaceous substance, which they call sal ammoniac. Chambers.

AMMONI'ACAL. adj. [from ammoniac.] Having the properties of ammoniac salt.

Human blood calcined, yields no fixed salt; nor is it a sal ammoniack; for that remains immutable after repeated distillations; and distillation destroys the ammoniacal quality of animal salts, and turns them alkaline: so that it is a salt neither quite fixed, nor quite volatile, nor quite acid, nor quite alkaline, nor quite ammoniacal; but soft and benign, approaching nearest to the nature of sal ammoniac. Arbuthnot.

AMMUNI'TION. n. s. [supposed by some to come from amonitio, which, in the barbarous ages, seems to have signified supply of provision; but it surely may be reasonably derived from munitio, fortification; choses à munitions, things for the fortresses.] Military stores.

They must make themselves defensible against strangers; and must have the assistance of some able military man, and convenient arms and ammunition for their defence. Bacon.

The colonel staid to put in the ammunition he brought with him; which was only twelve barrels of powder, and twelve hundred weight of match. Clarendon.

All the rich mines of learning ransackt are,
To furnish ammunition for this war. Denham.

But now his stores of ammunition spent,
His naked valour is his only guard:
Rare thunders are from his dumb cannon sent,
And solitary guns are scarcely heard. Dryden.

AMMUNI'TION BREAD. n. s. Bread for the supply of the armies or garrisons.

A'MNESTY. n. s. [ἀμνηία.] An act of oblivion; an act by which crimes against the government, to a certain time, are so obliterated, that they can never be brought into charge.

I never read of a law enacted to take away the force of all laws, by which a man may safely commit upon the last of June, what he would infallibly be hanged for, if he committed it on the first of July; by which the greatest criminals may escape, provided they continue long enough in power to antiquate their crimes, and, by stifling them awhile, deceive the legislature into an amnesty. Swift.

AMNI'COLIST. n. s. [amnicola, Lat.] Inhabiting near a river. Dict.

AMNI'GENOUS. n. s. [amnigenus, Lat.] Born of a river. Dict.

A'MNION. } n. s. [Lat. perhaps from
A'MNIOS. } ἄμνος]

The innermost membrane with which the fœtus in the womb is most immediately covered, and with which the rest of the secundines, the chorion, and alantois, are ejected after birth. It is whiter and thinner than the chorion. It also contains a nutritious humour, separated by glands for that purpose, with which the fœtus is preserved. It is outwardly cloathed with the urinary membrane and the chorion, which sometimes stick so close to one another, that they can scarce be separated. It has also its vessels from the same origin as the chorion. Quincy.

AMO'MUM. n. s. [Lat.] A sort of fruit.

The commentators on Pliny and Dioscorides suppose it to be a fruit different from ours. The modern amomum appears to be the sison of the ancients, or bastard stone-parsley. It resembles the muscat grape. This fruit is brought from the East Indies, and makes part of treacle. It is of a hot spicy taste and smell. Trevoux. Chambers.

AMONG. } prep. [amang, gemang,
AMO'NGST. } Saxon.]

1. Mingled with; placed with other persons or things on every side.

Amongst strawberries sow here and there some borage-seed; and you shall find the strawberries under those leaves far more large than their fellows. Bacon.

The voice of God they heard,
Now walking in the garden, by soft winds
Brought to their ears, while day declin'd: they heard,
And from his presence hid themselves, among
The thickest trees, both man and wife. Milton.

2. Conjoined with others, so as to make part of the number.

I have then, as you see, observed the failings of many great wits amongst the moderns, who have attempted to write an epic poem. Dryden.

There were, among the old Roman statues, several of Venus in different postures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the same design. Addison.

A'MORIST. n. s. [from amour.] An inamorato; a gallant; a man professing love.

Female beauties are as fickle in their faces as their minds; though casualties should spare them, age brings in a necessity of decay; leaving doters upon red and white perplexed by uncertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness and her beauty, both which are necessary to the amorist's joys and quiet. Boyle.

AMOROSO. n. s. [Ital.] A man enamoured. Dict.

A'MOROUS. adj. [amoroso, Ital.]

1. In love; enamoured; with the particle of before the thing loved; in Shakespeare, on.

Sure my brother is amorous on Hero; and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. Shakesp.

The am'rous master own'd her potent eyes,
Sigh'd when he look'd, and trembled as he drew;
Each flowing line confirm'd his first surprize,
And as the piece advanc'd, the passion grew.
Prior.

2. Naturally inclined to love; disposed to fondness; fond.

Apes, as soon as they have brought forth their young, keep their eyes fastened on them, and are never weary of admiring their beauty; so amorous is nature of whatsoever she produces.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Relating, or belonging to love.

I that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an am'rous looking-glass,
I, that am rudely stampt. Shakesp. Rich. III.

And into all things from her air inspir'd
The spirit of love, and amorous delight. Milton.

In the amorous net
First caught they lik'd; and each his liking chose.
Milton.

O! how I long my careless limbs to lay
Under the plantane's shade, and all the day
With am'rous airs my fancy entertain,
Invoke the muses, and improve my vein! Waller.

A'MOROUSLY. adv. [from amorous.] Fondly; lovingly.

When thou wilt swim in that live-bath,
Each fish, which every channel hath,
Will amorously to thee swim,
Gladder to catch thee, than thou him. Donne.

A'MOROUSNESS. n. s. [from amorous.] The quality of being amorous; fondness; lovingness; love.

All Gynecia's actions were interrupted by Basilius, as proceeding from jealousy of his amorousness. Sidney.

Lindamor has wit, and amorousness enough to make him find it more easy to defend fair ladies, than to defend himself against them. Boyle on Col.

AMO'RT. adv. [à la mort, Fr.] In the state of the dead; dejected; depressed; spiritless.

How fares my Kate? what, sweeting, all amort?
Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

AMORTIZA'TION. } n. s. [amortissement,
AMO'RTIZEMENT. } amortissable, Fr.]
The right or act of transferring lands to mortmain; that is, to some community, that never is to cease.

Every one of the religious orders was confirmed by one pope or other; and they made an especial provision for them, after the laws of amortization were devised and put in use by princes.
Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

To AMO'RTIZE. v. a. [amortir, Fr.] To alien lands or tenements to any corporation, guild, or fraternity, and their successors; which cannot be done without licence of the king, and the lord of the manour. Blount.

This did concern the kingdom, to have farms sufficient to maintain an able body out of penury, and to amortize part of the lands unto the yeomanry, or middle part of the people. Bacon.

To AMO'VE. v. a. [amoveo, Lat.]

1. To remove from a post or station: a juridical sense.

2. To remove; to move; to alter: a sense now out of use.

Therewith, amoved from his sober mood,
And lives he yet, said he, that wrought this act?
And do the heavens afford him vital food?
Fairy Queen.

At her so piteous cry was much amov'd
Her champion stout. Fairy Queen.

To AMO'UNT. v. n. [monter, Fr.]

1. To rise to in the accumulative quantity; to compose in the whole; with the particle to. It is used of several sums in quantities added together.

Let us compute a little more particularly how much this will amount to, or how many oceans of water would be necessary to compose this great ocean rowling in the air, without bounds or banks.
Burnet's Theory.

2. It is used, figuratively, of the consequence rising from any thing taken altogether.

The errours of young men are the ruin of business; but the errours of aged men amount but to this, that more might have been done, or sooner.
Bacon.

Judgments that are made on the wrong side of the danger, amount to no more than an affectation of skill, without either credit or effect. L'Estrange.

AMO'UNT. n. s. [from To amount.] The sum total; the result of several sums or quantities accumulated.

And now, ye lying vanities of life,
Where are you now, and what is your amount?
Vexation, disappointment, and remorse. Thomson.

AMO'UR. n. s. [amour, Fr. amor, Lat.] An affair of gallantry; an intrigue: generally used of vitious love. The ou sounds like oo in poor.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over; and let it burn never so outrageously, yet the impure flame will either die of itself, or consume the body that harbours it. South.

The restless youth search'd all the world around;
But how can Jove in his amours be found? Addison.

A'MPER. n. s. [ampne, Sax.] A tumour, with inflammation; bile: a word said, by Skinner, to be much in use in Essex; but, perhaps, not found in books.

AMPHI'BIOUS. adj. [ἄμφι and βίος.]

1. That which partakes of two natures, so as to live in two elements; as, in air and water.

A creature of amphibious nature,
On land a beast, a fish in water. Hudibras.

Those are called amphibious, which live freely in the air, upon the earth, and yet are observed to live long upon water, as if they were natural inhabitants of that element; though it be worth the examination to know, whether any of those creatures that live at ease, and by choice, a good while, or at any time, upon the earth, can live a long time together, perfectly under water. Locke.

Fishes contain much oil, and amphibious animals participate somewhat of the nature of fishes, and are oily. Arbuthnot.

2. Of a mixt nature, in allusion to animals that live in air and water.

Traulus of amphibious breed,
Motley fruit of mungrel seed;
By the dam from lordlings sprung,
By the sire exhal'd from dung. Swift.

AMPHI'BIOUSNESS. n. s. [from amphibious.] The quality of being able to live in different elements.

AMPHIBOLO'GICAL. adj. [from amphibology.] Doubtful.

AMPHIBOLO'GICALLY. adv. [from amphibological.] Doubtfully; with a doubtful meaning.

AMPHIBO'LOGY. n. s. [ἀμφιβολογία.] Discourse of uncertain meaning. It is distinguished from equivocation, which means the double signification of a single word; as, noli regem occidere timere bonum est, is amphibology; captare lepores, meaning by lepores, either hares or jests, is equivocation.

Now the fallacies, whereby men deceive others, and are deceived themselves, the ancients have divided into verbal and real; of the verbal, and such as conclude from mistakes of the word, there are but two worthy our notation; the fallacy of equivocation, and amphibology. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

He that affirm'd, 'gainst sense, snow black to be,
Might prove it by this amphibology;
Things are not what they seem. Verses on Cleaveland.

In defining obvious appearances, we are to use what is most plain and easy; that the mind be not misled by amphibologies into fallacious deductions. Glanville.

AMPHI'BOLOUS. adj. [ἄμφι and βάλλω.] Tossed from one to another; striking each way.

Never was there such an amphibolous quarrel both parties declaring themselves for the king and making use of his name in all their remonstrances, to justify their actions. Howell.

AMPHI'LOGY. n. s. [ἄμφι and λόγος.] Equivocation; ambiguity. Dict.

AMPHISBÆNA. n. s. [Lat. ἀμφισβαίνη.] A serpent supposed to have two heads, and by consequence to move with either end foremost.

That the amphisbæna, that is, a smaller kind of serpent, which moveth forward and backward hath two heads, or one at either extreme, was affirmed by Nicander, and others. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphisbæna dire. Milton.

AMPHISCII. n. s. [Lat. ἀμφίσκιοι, of ἀμφι and σκία a shadow.] Those people dwelling in climates, wherein the shadows, at different times of the year, fall both ways; to the north pole, when the sun is in the southern signs; and to the south pole, when he is in the northern signs. These are the people who inhabit the torrid zone.

AMPHITHE'ATRE. n. s. [of ἀμφιθέατρον, of ἀμφι and θέαμαι.] A building in a circular or oval form, having its area encompassed with rows of seats one above another: where spectators might behold spectacles, as stage-plays, or gladiators. The theatres of the ancients were built in the form of a semicircle, only exceeding a just semicircle by one-fourth part of the diameter; and the amphitheatre is two theatres joined together; so that the longest diameter of the amphitheatre was to the shortest, as one and a half to one.

Within, an amphitheatre appear'd
Rais'd in degrees; to sixty paces rear'd,
That when a man was placed in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.

Conceive a man placed in the burning iron chair at Lyons, amid the insults and mockeries of a crowded amphitheatre, and still keeping his seat; or stretched upon a grate of iron, over coals of fire, and breathing out his soul among the exquisite sufferings of such a tedious execution, rather than renounce his religion, or blaspheme his Saviour. Addison.

A'MPLE. adj. [amplus, Lat.]

1. Large; wide; extended.

Heav'n descends
In universal bounty, shedding herbs,
And fruits, and flowers, on Nature's ample lap. Thomson.

2. Great in bulk.

Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?——
She took 'em, and read 'em in my presence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheeks. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. Unlimited; without restriction.

Have what you ask, your presents I receive;
Land where and when you please, with ample leave. Dryden.

4. Liberal; large; without parsimony.

If we speak of strict justice, God could no way have been bound to requite man's labours in so large and ample manner as human felicity doth import; in as much as the dignity of this exceedeth so far the other's value. Hooker.

5. Magnificent; splendid.

To dispose the prince the more willingly to undertake his relief, the earl made ample promises, that, within so many days after the siege should be raised, he would advance his highness's levies with two thousand men. Clarendon.

6. Diffusive; not contracted; as, an ample narrative, that is, not an epitome.

A'MPLENESS. n. s. [from ample.] The quality of being ample; largeness; splendour.

Impossible it is for a person of my condition to produce any thing in proportion either to the ampleness of the body you represent, or of the places you bear. South.

To A'MPLIATE. v. a. [amplio, Lat.] To enlarge; to make greater; to extend.

He shall look upon it, not to traduce or extenuate, but to explain and dilucidate, to add and ampliate. Brown.

AMPLIA'TION. n. s. [from ampliate.]

1. Enlargement; exaggeration; extension.

Odious matters admit not of an ampliation, but ought to be restrained and interpreted in the mildest sense. Ayliffe's Parergon

2. Diffuseness; enlargement.

The obscurity of the subject, and the prejudice and prepossession of most readers, may plead excuse for any ampliations or repetitions that may be found, whilst I labour to express myself plain and full. Holder.

To AMPLI'FICATE. v. a. [amplifico, Lat.] To enlarge; to spread out; to amplify. Dict.

AMPLIFICA'TION. n. s. [amplification, Fr. amplificatio, Lat.]

1. Enlargement; extension.

2. It is usually taken in a rhetorical sense, and implies exaggerated representation, or diffuse narrative; an image heightened beyond reality; a narrative enlarged with many circumstances.

I shall summarily, without any amplification at all, shew in what manner defects have been supplied. Davies.

Things unknown seem greater than they are, and are usually received with amplifications above their nature. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Is the poet justifiable for relating such incredible amplifications? It may be answered, if he had put these extravagances into the mouth of Ulysses, he had been unpardonable; but they suit well the character of Alcinous. Pope.

A'MPLIFIER. n. s. [from To amplify.] One that enlarges any thing; one that exaggerates; one that represents any thing with a large display of the best circumstances; it being usually taken in a good sense.

Dorillaus could need no amplifier's mouth for the highest point of praise. Sidney.

To A'MPLIFY. v. a. [amplifier, Fr.]

1. To enlarge; to increase any material substance, or object of sense.

So when a great moneyed man hath divided his chests, and coins, and bags, he seemeth to himself richer than he was: and therefore a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts, and to examine it according to the several circumstances. Bacon.

All concaves that proceed from more narrow to more broad, do amplify the sound at the coming out. Bacon.

2. To enlarge, or extend any thing incorporeal.

As the reputation of the Roman prelates grew up in these blind ages, so grew up in them withal a desire of amplifying their power, that they might be as great in temporal forces, as men's opinions have formed them in spiritual matters. Raleigh.

3. To exaggerate any thing; to enlarge it by the manner of representation.

Thy general is my lover; I have been
The book of his good acts; whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified. Shakesp.

Since I have plainly laid open the negligence and errours of every age that is past, I would not willingly seem to flatter the present, by amplifying the diligence and true judgment of those servitours that have laboured in this vineyard. Davies

4. To enlarge; to improve by new additions.

In paraphrase the author's words are not strictly followed, his sense too is amplified but not altered, as Waller's translation of Virgil. Dryden.

I feel age advancing, and my health is insufficient to increase and amplify these remarks, to confirm and improve these rules, and to illuminate the several pages. Watts.

To A'MPLIFY. v. n. Frequently with the particle on.

1. To speak largely in many words; to lay one's self out in diffusion.

When you affect to amplify on the former branches of a discourse, you will often lay a necessity upon yourself of contracting the latter, and prevent yourself in the most important part of your design. Watts's Logick.

2. To form large or pompous representations.

An excellent medicine for the stone might be conceived, by amplifying apprehensions able to break a diamond. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I have sometimes been forced to amplify on others; but here, where the subject is so fruitful that the harvest overcomes the reaper, I am shortened by my chain. Dryden.

Homer amplifies, not invents; and as there was really a people called Cyclopeans, so they might be men of great stature, or giants. Pope's Odyssey.

A'MPLITUDE. n. s. [amplitude, Fr. amplitudo, Lat.]

1. Extent.

Whatever I look upon, within the amplitude of heaven and earth, is evidence of human ignorance. Glanville.

2. Largeness; greatness.

Men should learn how severe a thing the true inquisition of nature is, and accustom themselves, by the light of particulars, to enlarge their minds to the amplitude of the world, and not reduce the world to the narrowness of their minds. Bacon.

3. Capacity; extent of intellectual faculties.

With more than human gifts from heav'n adorn'd,
Perfections absolute, graces divine,
And amplitude of mind to greatest deeds. Milton.

4. Splendour; grandeur; dignity.

In the great frame of kingdoms and commonwealths, it is in the power of princes, or estates, to add amplitude and greatness to their kingdoms. Bacon's Essays.

5. Copiousness; abundance.

You should say every thing which has a proper and direct tendency to this end; always proportioning the amplitude of your matter, and the fulness of your discourse, to your great design; the length of your time, to the convenience of your hearers. Watts's Logick.

6. Amplitude of the range of a projectile, denotes the horizontal line subtending the path in which it moved.

7. Amplitude, in astronomy, an arch of the horizon, intercepted between the true east and west point thereof, and the centre of the sun or star at its rising or setting. It is eastern or ortive, when the star rises; and western or occiduous, when the star sets. The eastern or western amplitude are also called northern or southern, as they fall in the northern or southern quarters of the horizon.

8. Magnetical amplitude is an arch of the horizon, contained between the sun at his rising, and the east or west point of the compass; or, it is the difference of the rising or setting of the sun, from the east or west parts of the compass. Chambers.

A'MPLY. adv. [amplè, Lat.]

1. Largely; liberally.

For whose well-being,
So amply, and with hands so liberal,
Thou hast provided all things. Milton.

The evidence they had before was enough, amply enough, to convince them; but they were resolved not to be convinced: and to those, who are resolved not to be convinced, all motives, all arguments, are equal. Atterbury.

2. At large; without reserve.

At return
Of him so lately promis'd to thy aid,
The woman's seed, obscurely then foretold,
Now amplier known, thy Saviour, and thy Lord. Milton.

3. At large; copiously; with a diffusive detail.

Some parts of a poem require to be amply written, and with all the force and elegance of words; others must be cast into shadows, that is, passed over in silence, or but faintly touched. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To* A'MPUTATE. v. a. [amputo, Lat.] To cut off a limb: a word used only in chirurgery.

Amongst the cruizers, it was complained, that their surgeons were too active in amputating fractured members. Wiseman's Surgery.

AMPUTA'TION. n. s. [amputatio, Lat.] The operation of cutting off a limb, or other part of the body. The usual method of performing it, in the instance of a leg, is as follows: The proper part for the operation being four or five inches below the knee, the skin and flesh are first to be drawn very tight upwards, and secured from returning by a ligature two or three fingers broad: above this ligature another loose one is passed, for the gripe; which being twisted by means of a stick, may be straitened to any degree at pleasure. Then the patient being conveniently situated, and the operator placed to the inside of the limb, which is to be held by one assistant above, and another below the part designed for the operation, and the gripe sufficiently twisted to prevent too large an hæmorrhage, the flesh is, with a stroke or two, to be separated from the bone with the dismembering knife. Then the periostium being also divided from the bone with the back of the knife, saw the bone asunder, with as few strokes as possible. When two parallel bones are concerned, the flesh that grows between them must likewise be separated before the use of the saw. This being done, the gripe may be slackened, to give an opportunity of searching for the large blood vessels, and securing the hæmorrhage at their mouths. After making proper applications to the stump, loosen the first ligature, and pull both the skin and the flesh, as far as conveniently may be, over the stump, to cover it; and secure them with the cross stitch made at the depth of half or three quarters of an inch in the skin. Then apply pledgets, astringents, plaisters, and other necessaries. Chambers.

The Amazons, by the amputation of their right breast, had the freer use of their bow. Brown's Vulgar Errours

A'MULET. n. s. [amulette, Fr. amuletum, or amoletum, quod malum amolitur, Lat.] An appended remedy, or preservative; a thing hung about the neck, or any other part of the body, for preventing or curing of some particular diseases.

That spirits are corporeal, seems at first view a conceit derogative unto himself; yet herein he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errours

They do not certainly know the falsity of what they report; and their ignorance must serve you as an amulet against the guilt both of deceit and malice. Government of the Tongue.

AMURCO'SITY. n. s. [amurca, Lat.] The quality of lees or mother of any thing. Dict.

To* AMU'SE. v. a. [amuser, Fr.]

1. To entertain with tranquillity; to fill with thoughts that engage the mind, without distracting it. To divert implies something more lively, and to please, something more important. It is therefore frequently taken in a sense bordering on contempt.

They think they see visions, and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations; when, indeed, they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination. Decay of Piety.

I cannot think it natural for a man, who is much in love, to amuse himself with trifles. Walsh.

2. To draw on from time to time; to keep in expectation; as, he amused his followers with idle promises.

AMU'SEMENT. n. s. [amusement, Fr.] That which amuses; entertainment.

Every interest or pleasure of life, even the most trifling amusement, is suffered to postpone the one thing necessary. Rogers.

During his confinement, his amusement was to give poison to dogs and cats, and see them expire by slower or quicker torments. Pope

I was left to stand the battle, while others, who had better talents than a draper, thought it no unpleasant amusement to look on with safety whilst another was giving them diversion at the hazard of his liberty. Swift

AMU'SER. n. s. [amuseur, Fr.] He that amuses, as with false promises. The French word is always taken in an ill sense.

AMU'SIVE. adj. [from amuse.] That which has the power of amusing. I know not that this is a current word.

But amaz'd,
Beholds th' amusive arch before him fly,
Then vanish quite away. Thomson.

AMY'GDALATE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Made of almonds.

AMY'GDALINE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Relating to almonds; resembling almonds.

AN. article. [ane, Saxon; een, Dutch; eine, German.] The article indefinite, used before a vowel, or h mute, See A.

1. One, but with less emphasis; as, there stands an ox.

Since he cannot be always employed in study, reading, and conversation, there will be many an hour, besides what his exercises will take up. Locke.

2. Any, or some; as, an elephant might swim in this water.

He was no way at an uncertainty, nor ever in the least at a loss concerning any branch of it. Locke.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod,
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

3. Sometimes it signifies, like a, some particular state; but this is now disused.

It is certain that odours do, in a small degree, nourish, especially the odour of wine; and we see men an hungred do love to smell hot bread. Bacon.

4. An is sometimes, in old authors, a contraction of and if.

He can't flatter, he!
An honest mind and plain; he must speak truth,
An they will take it so; if not, he's plain. Shakesp.

5. Sometimes a contraction of and before if.

Well I know
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on's face that had it.
——He will an' if he live to be a man. Shakesp.

6. Sometimes it is a contraction of as if.

My next pretty correspondent, like Shakespeare's lion in Pyramus and Thisbe, roars an' it were any nightingale. Addison.

A'NA. adv. [ἄνα.] A word used in the prescriptions of physick, importing the like quantity; as, wine and honey, ā or ana ℥ ii; that is, of wine and honey each two ounces.

In the same weight innocence and prudence take,
Ana of each does the just mixture make. Cowley.

He'll bring an apothecary with a chargeable long bill of anas. Dryden.

A'NA. n. s. Books so called from the last syllables of their titles; as, Scaligerana, Thuaniana; they are loose thoughts, or casual hints, dropped by eminent men, and collected by their friends.

ANACA'MPTICK. adj. [ἀνακάμπτω.] Reflecting, or reflected: an anacamptick sound, an echo; an anacamptick hill, a hill that produces an echo.

ANACA'MPTICKS. n. s. The doctrine of reflected light, or catoptricks. It has no singular.

ANACATHA'RTICK. n. s. [See CATHARTICK.] Any medicine that works upwards. Quincy.

ANACEPHALÆ'OSIS. n. s. [ἀνακεφαλαίωσις.] Recapitulation, or summary of the principal heads of a discourse. Dict.

ANA'CHORETE. } n. s. [sometimes vitiANA'CHORITE. } ously written anchorite; ἀναχωρήτης.] A monk who, with the leave of his superiour, leaves the convent for a more austere and solitary life.

Yet lies not love dead here, but here doth sit,
Vow'd to this trench, like an anachorite. Donne.

ANA'CHRONISM. n. s. [from ἀνά and χρόνος.] An errour in computing time, by which events are misplaced with regard to each other. It seems properly to signify an errour by which an event is placed too early; but is generally used for any errour in chronology.

This leads me to the defence of the famous anachronism, in making Æneas and Dido cotemporaries; for it is certain, that the hero lived almost two hundred years before the building of Carthage. Dryden.

ANACLA'TICKS. n. s. [ἀνά and κλάω.] The doctrine of refracted light; dioptricks. It has no singular.

ANADIPLOSIS. n. s. [ἀναδίπλωσις.] Reduplication; a figure in rhetorick, in which the last word of a foregoing member of a period becomes the first of the following; as, he retained his virtues amidst all his misfortunes, misfortunes which only his virtues brought upon him.

ANAGOGE'TICAL. adj. [ἀναγώγη.] That which contributes or relates to spiritual elevation, or religious raptures; mysterious; elevated above humanity. Dict.

ANAGO'GICAL. adj. [anagogique, Fr.] Mysterious; elevated; religiously exalted. Dict.

ANAGO'GICALLY. adv. [from anagogical.] Mysteriously; with religious elevation.

A'NAGRAM. n. s. [ἀνά and γράμμα.] A conceit arising from the letters of a name transposed; as this, of W,i,l,l,i,a,m, N,o,y, attorney-general to Charles I. a very laborious man, I moyl in law.

Though all her parts be not in th' usual place,
She hath yet the anagrams of a good face:
If we might put the letters but one way,
In that lean dearth of words what could we say?
Donne.

Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

ANAGRA'MMATISM. n. s. [from anagram.] The act or practice of making anagrams.

The only quintessence that hitherto the alchymy of wit could draw out of names, is anagrammatism, or metagrammatism, which is a dissolution of a name truly written into its letters, as its elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial transposition, without addition, substraction, or change of any letter, into different words, making some perfect sense applicable to the person named. Camden.

ANAGRA'MMATIST. n. s. [from anagram.] A maker of anagrams.

To ANAGRA'MMATIZE. v. n. [anagrammatiser, Fr.] To make anagrams.

ANALE'PTICK. adj. [ἀναληπτικός.] Comforting; corroborating: a term of physick.

Analeptick medicines cherish the nerves, and renew the spirits and strength. Quincy.

ANA'LOGAL. adj. [from analogous.] Analogous; having relation.

When I see many analogal motions in animals, though I cannot call them voluntary, yet I see them spontaneous, I have reason to conclude that these in their principle are not simply mechanical. Hale.

ANALO'GICAL adj. [from analogy]

1. Used by way of analogy. It seems properly distinguished from analogous, as words from things; analogous signifies having relation, and analogical having the quality of representing relation.

It is looked on only as the image of the true God, and that not as a proper likeness, but by analogical representation. Stillingfleet.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular idea or object, is attributed to several other objects, not by way of resemblance, but on the account of some evident reference to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts's Logick.

2 Analogous; having resemblance or relation.

There is placed the minerals between the inanimate and vegetable province, participating something analogical to either.
Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

ANALO'GICALLY. adv. [from analogical] In an analogical manner; in an analogous manner.

I am convinced, from the simplicity and uniformity of the Divine Nature, and of all his works, that there is some one universal principle, running through the whole system of creatures analogically, and congruous to their relative natures. Cheyne.

ANALO'GICALNESS n. s. [from analogical.] The quality of being analogical; fitness to be applied for the illustration of some analogy.

ANA'LOGISM. n s. [ἀναλογισμός.] An argument from the cause to the effect.

To ANA'LOGIZE. v. a. [from analogy.] To explain by way of analogy; to form some resemblance between different things; to consider something with regard to its analogy with somewhat else.

We have systems of material bodies, diversly figured and situated, if separately considered; they represent the object of the desire, which is analogized by attraction or gravitation. Cheyne.

ANA'LOGOUS. adj. [ἀνα and λόγος.]

1. Having analogy; bearing some resemblance or proportion; having something parallel.

Exercise makes things easy, that would be otherwise very hard; as, in labour, watchings, heats, and colds; and then there is something analogous in the exercise of the mind to that of the body. It is folly and infirmity that makes us delicate and froward. L'Estrange.

Many important consequences may be drawn from the observation of the most common things, and analogous reasonings from the causes of them. Arbuthnot.

2. It has the word to before the thing to which the resemblance is noted.

This incorporeal substance may have some sort of existence, analogous to corporeal extension: though we have no adequate conception hereof.

ANA'LOGY. n. s. [ἀναλογία.]

1. Resemblance between things with regard to some circumstances or effects; as, learning is said to enlighten the mind; that is, it is to the mind what light is to the eye, by enabling it to discover that which was hidden before.

From God it hath proceeded, that the church hath evermore held a prescript form of common prayer, although not in all things every where the same, yet, for the most part, retaining the same analogy Hooker.

What I here observe of extraordinary revelation and prophecy, will, by analogy and due proportion, extend even to those communications of God's will, that are requisite to salvation. South.

2. When the thing to which the analogy is supposed happens to be mentioned, analogy has after it the particles to or with; when both the things are mentioned after analogy, the particle between or betwixt is used.

If the body politick have any analogy to the natural, an act of oblivion were necessary in a hot distempered state. Dryden.

By analogy with all other liquors and concretions, the form of the chaos, whether liquid or concrete, could not be the same with that of the present earth. Burnet's Theory.

If we make Juvenal express the customs of our country, rather than of Rome, it is when there was some analogy betwixt the customs. Dryden.

3. By grammarians, it is used to signify the agreement of several words in one common mode; as, from love is formed loved; from hate, hated; from grieve, grieved.

ANA'LYSIS. n. s. [ἀνάλυσις.]

1. A separation of a compound body into the several parts of which it consists.

There is an account of dew falling, in some places, in the form of butter, or grease, which grows extremely fetid; so that the analysis of the dew of any place, may, perhaps, be the best method of finding such contents of the soil as are within the reach of the sun. Arbuthnot.

2. A consideration of any thing in parts, so as that one particular is first considered, then another.

Analysis consists in making experiments and observations, and in drawing general conclusions from them by induction, and admitting of no objections but such as are taken from experiments, or other certain truths. Newton's Opticks.

3. A solution of any thing, whether corporeal or mental, to its first elements; as, of a sentence to the single words; of a compound word, to the particles and words which form it; of a tune, to single notes; of an argument, to simple propositions.

We cannot know any thing of nature, but by an analysis of its true initial causes; till we know the first springs of natural motions, we are still but ignorants. Glanville.

ANALY'TICAL. adj. [from analysis.]

1. That which resolves any thing into first principles; that which separates any compound. See ANALYSIS.

Either may be probably maintained against the inaccurateness of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on. Boyle.

2. That which proceeds by analysis, or by taking the parts of a compound into distinct and particular consideration.

Descartes hath here infinitely outdone all the philosophers that went before him, in giving a particular and analytical account of the universal fabrick: yet he intends his principles but for hypotheses. Glanville.

ANALY'TICALLY. adv. [from analytical.] In such a manner as separates compounds into simples. See ANALYSIS.

ANALY'TICK. adj. [ἀναλυτικὸς.] The manner of resolving compounds into the simple constituent or component parts, applied chiefly to mental operations.

He was in logick a great critick,
Profoundly skill'd in analytick. Hudibras.

Analytick method takes the whole compound as it finds it, whether it be a species or an individual, and leads us into the knowledge of it, by resolving into its first principles, or parts, its generick nature, and its special properties; and therefore it is called the method of resolution. Watts's Logick.

To A'NALYZE. v. a. [ἀναλυω.] To resolve a compound into its first principles. See ANALYSIS.

Chemistry enabling us to depurate bodies, and in some measure, to analyze them, and take asunder their heterogeneous parts, in many chymical experiments, we may, better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ; art having made them more simple or uncompounded, than nature alone is wont to present them us. Boyle.

To analyze the immorality of any action into its last principles; if it be enquired, Why such an action is to be avoided? the immediate answer is, Because it is sin. Norris's Miscell.

When the sentence is distinguished into subject and predicate, proposition, argument, act, object, cause, effect, adjunct, opposite, &c. then it is analyzed analogically and metaphysically. This last is what is chiefly meant in the theological schools, when they speak of analyzing a text of scripture. Watts's Logick.

A'NALYZER. n. s. [from To analyze.] That which has the power of analyzing.

Particular reasons incline me to doubt, whether the fire be the true and universal analyzer of mixt bodies. Boyle.

ANAMORPHO'SIS. n. s. [ἀνὰ and μορφόω.] Deformation; a perspective projection of any thing, so that to the eye, at one point of view, it shall appear deformed, in another, an exact and regular representation. Sometimes it is made to appear confused to the naked eye, and regular, when viewed in a mirrour of a certain form.

ANA'NA. n. s. The pine-apple.

The species are, 1. Oval-shaped pine-apple, with a whitish flesh. 2. Pyramidal pine-apple, with a yellow flesh. 3. Pine-apple, with smooth leaves. 4. Pine-apple, with shining green leaves, and scarce any spines on their edges. 5. The olive-coloured pine. Miller.

Witness thou best anana, thou the pride
Of vegetable life, beyond whate'er
The poets imag'd in the golden age. Thomson.

ANA'NA. srild. The same with penguin. See PENGUIN.

ANAPÆST. s. A foot in poetry, consisting of two short and one long syllable, the reverse of a dactyl.

ANA'PHORA. n. s. [ἀναφορὰ.] A figure, when several clauses of a sentence are begun with the same word, or sound; as,

Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world?

ANAPLEROTICK. adj. [ἀναπληρόω.] That which fills up any vacuity; used of applications which promote flesh.

A'NARCH. n. s. [See ANARCHY.] An author of confusion.

Him thus the anarch old,
With fault'ring speech, and visage incompos'd,
Answer'd. Milton.

ANA'RCHICAL. adj. [from anarchy.] Confused; without rule or government.

In this anarchical and rebellious state of human nature, the faculties belonging to the material world presume to determine the nature of subjects belonging to the supreme Spirit. Cheyne.

A'NARCHY. n. s. [ἀναρχία.] Want of government; a state in which every man is unaccountable; a state without magistracy.

Where eldest Night
And Chaos, ancestors of Nature, hold
Eternal anarchy, amidst the noise
Of endless wars, and by confusion stand. Milton.

Arbitrary power is but the first natural step from anarchy, or the savage life; the adjusting power and freedom being an effect and consequence of maturer thinking. Swift.

ANASA'RCA. n. s. [from ἀνὰ and σαρξ.] A sort of dropsy, where the whole substance is stuffed with pituitous humours. Quincy.

When the lympha stagnates, or is extravasated under the skin, it is called an anasarca. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ANASA'RCOUS. adj. [from anasarca.] Relating to an anasarca; partaking of the nature of an anasarca.

A gentlewoman laboured of an ascites, with an anasarcous swelling of her belly, thighs, and legs. Wiseman.

ANASTOMA'TICK. adj. [from ἀνὰ and στόμα.] That which has the quality of opening the vessels, or of removing obstructions.

ANASTOMO'SIS. n. s. [from ἀνὰ and στόμα.] The inosculation of vessels, or the opening of one vessel into another; as, of the arteries into the veins.

ANA'STROPHE. n. s. [ἀναστροφὴ, a preposterous placing, from ἀναστρέφω.] A figure whereby words which should have been precedent, are postponed.

ANA'THEMA. n. s. [ἀνάθεμα.]

1. A curse pronounced by ecclesiastical authority; excommunication.

Her bare anathemas fall but like so many bruta fulmina upon the schismatical; who think themselves shrewdly hurt, forsooth, by being cut off from the body, which they choose not to be of. South's Sermons.

2. The object of the curse, or person cursed. This seems the original meaning, though now little used.

ANATHEMA'TICAL. adj. [from anathema.] That which has the properties of an anathema; that which relates to an anathema.

ANATHEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from anathematical.] In an anathematical manner.

To ANATHE'MATIZE. v. a. [from anathema.] To pronounce accursed by ecclesiastical authority; to excommunicate.

They were therefore to be anathematized, and, with detestation, branded and banished out of the church. Hammond.

ANATI'FEROUS. adj. [from anas and fero, Lat.] Producing ducks. Not in use.

If there be anatiferous trees, whose corruption breaks forth into barnacles; yet, if they corrupt, they degenerate into maggots, which produce not them again. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANA'TOCISM. n. s. [anatocismus, Lat. ἀνατοκισμος.] The accumulation of interest upon interest; the addition of the interest due for money lent, to the original sum. A species of usury generally forbidden.

ANATO'MICAL. adj. [from anatomy.]

1. Relating or belonging to anatomy.

When we are taught by logick to view a thing completely in all its parts, by the help of division, it has the use of an anatomical knife, which dissects an animal body, and separates the veins, arteries, nerves, muscles, membranes, &c. and shews us the several parts which go to the composition of a complete animal. Watts's Logick.

2. Proceeding upon principles taught in anatomy; considered as the object of anatomy.

There is a natural, involuntary distortion of the muscles, which is the anatomical cause of laughter; but there is another cause of laughter, which decency requires. Swift.

3. Anatomized; dissected; separated.

The continuation of solidity is apt to be confounded with, and, if we will look into the minute anatomical parts of matter, is little different from hardness. Locke.

ANATO'MICALLY. adv. [from anatomical.] In an anatomical manner; in the sense of an anatomist; according to the doctrine of anatomy.

While some affirmed it had no gall, intending only thereby no evidence of anger or fury, others have construed anatomically, and denied that part at all. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANA'TOMIST. n. s. [ἀνατομὸς.] He that studies the structure of animal bodies, by means of dissection; he that divides the bodies of animals, to discover the various parts.

Anatomists adjudged, that if nature had been suffered to run her own course, without this fatal interruption, he might have doubled his age. Howel.

Hence when anatomists discourse,
How like brutes organs are to ours;
They grant, if higher powers think fit,
A bear might soon be made a wit;
And that, for any thing in nature,
Pigs might squeak love odes, dogs bark satire. Prior.

To ANA'TOMIZE. v. a. [ἀνατέμνω.]

1. To dissect an animal; to divide the body into its component or constituent parts.

Our industry must even anatomize every particle of that body, which we are to uphold. Hooker.

2. To lay any thing open distinctly, and by minute parts.

I speak but brotherly of him, but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and then must look pale and wonder. Shakesp.

Then dark distinctions reason's light disguis'd,
And into atoms truth anatomiz'd. Denham

ANA'TOMY. n. s. [ἀνατομία.]

1. The art of dissecting the body.

It is proverbially said, Formicæ nu bilis inest habet et musca splenem; whereas these parts anatomy hath not discovered in insects. Brown's Vulg. Err.

It is therefore in the anatomy of the mind, as in that of the body; more good will accrue to mankind, by attending to the large, open, and perceptible parts, than by studying too much such finer nerves and vessels, as will for ever escape our observation. Pope.

2. The doctrine of the structure of the body, learned by dissection.

Let the muscles be well inserted and bound together, according to the knowledge of them which is given us by anatomy. Dryden.

3. The act of dividing any thing, whether corporeal or intellectual.

When a moneyed man hath divided his chests, he seemeth to himself richer than he was; therefore, a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts. Bacon.

4. The body stripped of its integuments; a skeleton.

O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth,
Then with a passion I would shake the world,;
And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy,
Which cannot hear a feeble lady's voice. Shakesp.

5. By way of irony or ridicule, a thin meagre person.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller,
A needy, hollow-ey'd, sharp looking wretch,
A living dead man. Shakesp. Comedy of Errours.

ANATRON. n. s. The scum which swims upon the molten glass in the furnace, which, when taken off, melts in the air, and then coagulates into common salt. It is likewise that salt which gathers upon the walls of vaults.

A'NBURY. n. s. See AMBURY.

A'NCESTOR. n. s. [ancestor, Lat. ancestre, Fr.] One from whom a person descends, either by the father or the mother. It is distinguished from predecessor; which is not, like ancestor, a natural, but civil denomination. An hereditary monarch succeeds to his ancestors; an elective, to his predecessors.

And she lies buried with her ancestors,
O, in a tomb where never scandal slept,
Save this of her's. Shakesp. Much ado about Noth.

Cham was the paternal ancestor of Ninus, the father of Chus, the grandfather of Nimrod; whose son was Belus, the father of Ninus. Raleigh.

Obscure! why pr'ythee what am I? I know
My father, grandsire, and great grandsire too:
If farther I derive my pedigree,
I can but guess beyond the fourth degree.
The rest of my forgotten ancestors
Were sons of earth, like him, or sons of whores.
Dryden.

A'NCESTREL. adj. [from ancestor.] Claimed from ancestors; relating to ancestors: a term of law.

Limitation in actions ancestrel, was anciently so here in England. Hale.

A'NCESTRY. n. s. [from ancestor.]

1. Lineage; a series of ancestors, or progenitors; the persons who compose the lineage.

Phedon I hight, quoth he; and do advance
Mine ancestry from famous Coradin,
Who first to raise our house to honour did begin.
Spenser.

A tenacious adherence to the rights and liberties transmitted from a wise and virtuous ancestry, publick spirit, and a love of one's country, are the support and ornaments of government. Addison.

Say from what scepter'd ancestry ye claim,
Recorded eminent in deathless fame? Pope.

2. The honour of descent; birth.

Title and ancestry render a good man more illustrious, but an ill one more contemptible. Addison.

A'NCHENTRY. n. s. [from ancient, and therefore properly to be written ancientry.] Antiquity of a family; ancient dignity; appearance or proof of antiquity.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly modest, as a measure full of state and ancheatry; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque pace faster and faster, till he sinks into his grave. Shakespeare.

A'NCHOR. n. s. [anchora, Lat.]

1. A heavy iron, composed of a long shank, having a ring at one end to which the cable is fastened, and at the other branching out into two arms or flooks, tending upwards, with barbs or edges on each side. Its use is to hold the ship, by being fixed to the ground.

He said, and wept: then spread his sails before
The winds, and reach'd at length the Cuman shore:
Their anchors dropt, his crew the vessels moor.
Dryden.

2. It is used, by a metaphor, for any thing which confers stability or security.

Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and stedfast, and which entereth into that within the veil. Hebrews.

3. The forms of speech in which it is most commonly used, are, to cast anchor, to lie or ride at anchor.

The Turkish general, perceiving that the Rhodians would not be drawn forth to battle at sea, withdrew his fleet, when casting anchor, and landing his men, he burnt the corn.
Knolles's History of the Turks.

Ent'ring with the tide,
He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,
His vessel moor'd, and made with hausers fast.
Dryden.

Far from your capital my ship resides
At Rethrus, and secure at anchor rides. Pope.

To A'NCHOR. v. n. [from anchor.]

1. To cast anchor; to lie at anchor.

The fishermen that walk upon the beach
Appear like mice; and you tall anchoring bark
Diminish'd to her cock. Shakesp. King Lear.

Near Calais the Spaniards anchored, expecting their land-forces, which came not. Bacon.

Or the strait course to rocky Chios plow,
And anchor under Mimos' shaggy brow. Pope.

2. To stop at; to rest on.

My intention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isabel. Shakespeare.

To A'NCHOR. v. a.

1. To place at anchor; as, he anchored his ship.

2. To fix on.

My tongue should to my ears not name my boys,
Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes.
Shakespeare.

A'NCHOR. n. s. Shakespeare seems to have used this word for anchoret, or an abstemious recluse person.

To desperation turn my trust and hope!
An anchor's cheer in prison be my scope!
Shakespeare.

A'NCHOR-HOLD. n. s. [from anchor and hold.] The hold or fastness of the anchor; and, figuratively, security.

The old English could express most aptly all the conceits of the mind in their own tongue, without borrowing from any; as for example: the holy service of God, which the Latins called religion, because it knitted the minds of men together, and most people of Europe have borrowed the same from them, they called most significantly can-fastness, as the one and only assurance and fast anchor-hold of our souls health. Camden.

A'NCHOR-SMITH. n. s. [from anchor and smith.] The maker or forger of anchors.

Smithing comprehends all trades which use either forge or file, from the anchor-smith to the watchmaker; they all working by the same rules, though not with equal exactness; and all using the same tools, though of several sizes. Moxon.

A'NCHORAGE. n. s. [from anchor.]

1. The hold of the anchor.

Let me resolve whether there be indeed such efficacy in nurture and first production; for if that supposal should fail us, all our anchorage were loose, and we should but wander in a wild sea. Wotton.

2. The set of anchors belonging to a ship.

The bark that hath discharg'd her freight,
Returns with precious lading to the bay,
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage.
Shakespeare

3. The duty paid for the liberty of anchoring in a port.

A'NCHORED. particip. adj. [from To anchor.] Held by the anchor.

Like a well-twisted cable, holding fast
The anchor'd vessel in the loudest blast. Waller.

A'NCHORET. } n. s. [contracted from
A'NCHORITE. } anachoret, ἀναχωρήτης.] A recluse; a hermit; one that retires to the more severe duties of religion.

His poetry indeed he took along with him; but he made that an anchorite as well as himself. Sprat.

You describe so well your hermitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave in a rock, with a fine spring, or any of the accommodations that befit a solitary life. Pope.

ANCHO'VY. n. s. [from anchova, Span. or anchioe, Ital. of the same signification.] A little sea-fish, much used by way of sauce, or seasoning. Savary.

We invent new sauces and pickles, which resemble the animal ferment in taste and virtue, as the falso-acid gravies of meat; the salt pickles of fish, anchovies, oysters. Floyer.

A'NCIENT. adj. [ancien, Fr. antiquus, Lat.]

1. Old; that happened long since; of old time; not modern. Ancient and old are distinguished; old relates to the duration of the thing itself, as, an old coat, a coat much worn; and ancient, to time in general, as, an ancient dress, a habit used in former times. But this is not always observed, for we mention old customs; but though old be sometimes opposed to modern, ancient is seldom opposed to new, but when new means modern.

Ancient tenure is that whereby all the manours belonging to the crown, in St. Edward's or William the Conqueror's days, did hold. The number and names of which manours, as all others belonging to common persons, he caused to be written in a book, after a survey made of them, now remaining in the Exchequer, and called Doomsday Book; and such as by that book appeared to have belonged to the crown at that time, are called ancient demesnes. Cowell.

2. Old; that has been of long duration.

With the ancient is wisdom, and in length of days understanding. Job, xii. 12.

Thales affirms, that God comprehended all things, and that God was of all things the most ancient, because he never had any beginning. Raleigh.

Industry
Gave the tall ancient forest to his axe. Thomson.

3. Past; former.

I see thy fury: if I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient bickerings. Shakesp.

A'NCIENT. n. s. [from ancient, adj.]

1. Those that lived in old time were called ancients, opposed to the moderns.

And though the ancients thus their rules invade,
As kings dispense with laws themselves have made;
Moderns, beware! or if you must offend
Against the precept, ne'er transgress its end. Pope.

2. Senior: not in use.

He toucheth it as a special pre-eminence of Junius and Andronicus, that in Christianity they were his ancients. Hooker.

A'NCIENT. n. s.

1. The flag or streamer of a ship, and, formerly, of a regiment.

2. The bearer of a flag, as was Ancient Pistol; whence, in present use, ensign.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.—
The same indeed, a very valiant fellow. Shakesp.

A'NCIENTLY. adv. [from ancient.] In old times.

To bisond anciently pertained unto this crown; now unjustly possessed, and as unjustly abused, by those who have neither title to hold it, nor virtue to rule it. Sidney.

The colewort is not an enemy, though that were anciently received, to the vine only, but to any other plant, because it draweth strongly the fattest juice of the earth. Bacon.

A'NCIENTNESS. n. s. [from ancient.] Antiquity; existence from old times.

The Fescenine and Saturnian were the same; they were called Saturnian from their ancientness, when Saturn reigned in Italy. Dryden.

A'NCIENTRY. n. s. [from ancient.] The honour of ancient lineage; the dignity of birth.

Of all nations under heaven, the Spaniard is the most mingled, and most uncertain. Wherefore, most foolishly do the Irish think to ennoble themselves, by wresting their ancientry from the Spaniard, who is unable to derive himself from any in certain Spenser on Ireland.

There is nothing in the between, but getting wenches with child, wronging the ancientry, stealing, fighting Shakespeare.

ANCLE. See ANKLE.

A'NCONY. n. s. [in the iron mills.] A bloom wrought into the figure of a flat iron bar, about three foot long, with two square rough knobs, one at each end. Chambers.

AND. conjunction.

1. The particle by which sentences or terms are joined, which it is not easy to explain by any synonimous word.

Sure his honesty
Got him small gains, but shameless flattery
And filthy beverage, and unseemly thrift,
And borrow base, and some good lady's gift.
Spenser.

What shall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own? Cowley.

The Danes unconquer'd offspring march behind,
And Mormi, the last of human kind. Dryden.

It shall ever be my study to make discoveries of this nature in human life, and to settle the proper distinctions between the virtues and perfections of mankind, and those false colours and resemblances of them that shine alike in the eyes of the vulgar. Addison.

2. And sometimes signifies though, and seems a contraction of and if.

It is the nature of extreme self-lovers, as they will set an house on fire, and it were but to roast their eggs. Bacon.

3. In and if, the and is redundant, and is omitted by all later writers.

I pray thee, Launce, an' if thou seest my boy,
Bid him make haste. Shakesp. Two Gent. of Verona.

A'NDIRON. n. s. [supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from hand-iron; an iron that may be moved by the hand, or may supply the place of a hand.] Irons at the end of a fire-grate, in which the spit turns; or irons in which wood is laid to burn.

If you strike an entire body, as an andiron of brass, at the top, it maketh a more treble sound, and at the bottom a baser. Bacon.

ANEMO'GRAPHY. n.s. [ἄνεμος and γράφω.] The description of the winds.

ANEMO'METER. n. s. [ἄνεμος and μέτρον] An instrument contrived to measure the strength or velocity of the wind.

ANEMONE. n. s. [ανεμώνη] The wind flower.

Upon the top of its single stalk, surrounded by a leaf, is produced one naked flower, of many petals, with many stamina in the centre; the seeds are collected into an oblong head, and surrounded with a copious down. The principal colours in anemonies, are white, red, blue, and purple, sometimes curiously intermixed. Miller.

Wind flowers are distinguished into those with broad and hard leaves, and those with narrow and soft ones. The broad-leaved anemony roots should be planted about the end of September. These with small leaves must not be put into the ground till the end of October. Mortimer.

From the soft wing of vernal breezes shed,
Anemonies, auriculas, enrich'd
With shining meal o'er all their velvet leaves.
Thomson.

A'NEMOSCOPE. n. s. [ἄνεμος and σκόπεω.] A machine invented to foretel the changes of the wind. It has been observed, that hygroscopes made of cat's gut proved very good anemoscopes, seldom failing, by the turning the index about, to foretel the shifting of the wind. Chambers.

ANE'NT. prep. A word used in the Scotch dialect.

1. Concerning; about; as, he said nothing anent this particular.

2. Over against; opposite to; as, he lives anent the market-house.

ANES. } n. s. The spires or beards of AWNS. } corn. Dict.

A'NEURISM. n. s. [ἀνευρύνω.] A disease of the arteries, in which, either by a preternatural weakness of any part of them, they become excessively dilated; or, by a wound through their coats, the blood is extravasated amongst the adjacent cavities. Sharp.

In the orifice, there was a throbbing of the arterial blood, as in an aneurism. Wiseman.

ANE'W. adv. [from a and new.]

1. Over again; another time; repeatedly. This is the most common use.

Nor, if at mischief taken, on the ground
Be slain, but pris'ners to the pillars bound,
At either barrier plac'd; nor, captives made,
Be freed, or, arm'd anew, the fight invade. Dryden.

That, as in birth, in beauty you excel,
The muse might dictate, and the poet tell:
Your art no other art can speak; and you,
To show how well you play, must play anew.
Prior.

The miseries of the civil war did, for many years, deter the inhabitants of our island from the thoughts of engaging anew in such desperate undertakings. Addison.

2. Newly; in a new manner.

He who begins late, is obliged to form anew the whole disposition of his soul, to acquire new habits of life, to practise duties to which he is utterly a stranger. Rogers.

ANFRA'CTUOSE. } adj. [from anfractus,
ANFRA'CTUOUS. } Lat.] Winding; mazy; full of turnings and winding passages.

Behind the drum are several vaults and anfractuose cavities in the ear-bone, so to intend the least sound imaginable, that the sense might be affected with it; as we see in subterraneous caves and vaults, how the sound is redoubled. Ray

ANFRA'CTUOUSNESS. n. s. [from anfractuous.] Fulness of windings and turnings.

ANFRA'CTURE. n. s. [from anfractus, Lat.] A turning; a mazy winding and turning. Dict.

A'NGEL. n. s. [ἄγγελος; angelus, Lat.]

1. Originally a messenger. A spirit employed by God in the administration of human affairs.

Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His message ere he come. Shakespeare.

Had we such a knowledge of the constitution of man, as it is possible angels have, and it is certain his Maker has; we should have a quite other idea of his essence. Locke.

2. Angel is sometimes used in a bad sense; as, angels of darkness.

And they had a king over them, which was the angel of the bottomless pit. Revelations.

3. Angel, in scripture, sometimes means man of God, prophet.

4. Angel is used, in the style of love, for a beautiful person.

Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.
Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel. Shakesp.

5. A piece of money anciently coined and impressed with an angel, in memory of an observation of Pope Gregory, that the pagan Angli, or English, were so beautiful, that, if they were Christians, they would be Angeli, or angels. The coin was rated at ten shillings.

Take an empty bason, put an angel of gold, or what you will, into it; then go so far from the bason, till you cannot see the angel, because it is not in a right line; then fill the bason with water, and you will see it out of its place, because of the reflection. Bacon.

Shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; their imprison'd angels
Set thou at liberty. Shakespeare.

AN'GEL. adj. Resembling angels; angelical.

I have mark'd
A thousand blushing apparitions
Start into her face; a thousand innocent shames
In angel whiteness bear away those blushes.
Shakespeare.

Or virgins visited by angel powers,
With golden crowns, and wreathes of heav'nly flow'rs. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

A'NGEL-LIKE. adj. [from angel and like.] Resembling an angel.

In heav'n itself thou sure wert drest
With that angel-like disguise. Waller.

A'NGEL-SHOT. n. s. [perhaps properly angle-shot, being folden together with a hinge.] Chain-shot, being a cannon bullet cut in two, and the halves being joined together by a chain. Dict.

ANGE'LICA. n. s. [Lat. ab angelica virtute.] The name of a plant.

It has winged leaves divided into large segments; its stalks are hollow and jointed; the flowers grow in an umbel upon the tops of the stalks, and consist of five leaves, succeeded by two large channelled seeds.

The species are, 1. Common or manured angelica. 2. Greater wild angelica. 3. Shining Canada angelica. 4. Mountain perennial angelica, with columbine leaves. Miller.

ANGE'LICA. n. s. (Berry bearing) [Aralia, Lat.] A plant.

The flower consists of many leaves, expanding in form of a rose, which are naked, growing on the top of the ovary: these flowers are succeeded by globular fruits, which are soft and succulent, and full of oblong seeds. Miller.

ANGE'LICAL. adj. [angelicus, Lat.]

1. Resembling angels.

It discovereth unto us the glorious works of God, and carrieth up, with an angelical swiftness, our eyes, that our mind, being informed of his visible marvels, may continually travel upward. Raleigh.

2. Partaking of the nature of angels.

Others more mild,
Retreated in a silent valley, sing
With notes angelical to many a harp
Their own heroick deeds, and hapless fall
By doom of battle. Milton.

3. Belonging to angels; suiting the nature or dignity of angels.

It may be encouragement to consider the pleasure of speculations, which do ravish and sublime the thoughts with more clear angelical contentments. Wilkins's Dædalus.

ANGE'LICALNESS. n. s. [from angelical.] The quality of being angelical; resemblance of angels; excellence more than human.

ANGE'LICK. adj. [angelicus, Lat.] Partaking of the nature of angels; angelical; above human.

Here happy creature, fair angelick Eve,
Partake thou also. Milton.

My fancy form'd thee of angelick kind,
Some emanation of th' all-beauteous mind. Pope.

A'NGELOT. n. s. A musical instrument somewhat resembling a lute. Dict.

A'NGER. n. s. [A word of no certain etymology, but, with most probability, derived by Skinner, from ange, Sax. vexed; which, however, seems to come originally from the Latin ango.]

1. Anger is uneasiness or discomposure of the mind, upon the receipt of any injury, with a present purpose of revenge. Locke.

Anger is like
A full hot horse, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakespeare.

Was the Lord displeased against the rivers? was thine anger against the rivers, was thy wrath against the sea, that thou didst ride upon thine horses and thy chariots of salvation? Habb. iii. 8.

Anger is, according to some, a transient hatred, or at least very like it. South.

2. Pain, or smart, of a sore or swelling.

In this sense it seems plainly deducible from angor.

I made the experiment, setting the moxa where the first violence of my pain began, and where the greatest anger and soreness still continued, notwithstanding the swelling of my foot. Temple.

To A'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make angry; to provoke; to enrage.

Who would anger the meanest artisan, which carrieth a good mind? Hooker.

Sometimes he angers me,
With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant.
Shakespeare.

There were some late taxes and impositions introduced, which rather angered than grieved the people. Clarendon.

It anger'd Turenne, once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.

2. To make painful.

He turneth the humours back, and maketh the wound bleed inwards, and angereth malign ulcers and pernicious imposthumations. Bacon.

A'NGERLY. adv. [from anger.] In an angry manner; like one offended: it is now written angrily.

Why, how now, Hecat? you look angerly.
Shakespeare.

Such jesters dishonest indiscretion, is rather charitably to be pitied, than their exception either angerly to be grieved at, or seriously to be confuted. Carew.

ANGIO'GRAPHY. n. s. [from ἀγγεῖον and γεάφω.] A description of vessels in the human body; nerves, veins, arteries, and lymphaticks.

ANGIO'LOGY. n. s. [from ἀγγεῖον and λόγος.] A treatise or discourse of the vessels of a human body.

ANGIOMONOSPE'RMOUS. adj. [from ἀγγεῖον, μόνος, and σπέρμα.] Such plants as have but one single seed in the seed-pod.

ANGIO'TOMY. n. s. [from ἀγγεῖον, and τέμνω to cut.] A cutting open of the vessels, as in the opening of a vein or artery.

A'NGLE. n. s. [angle, Fr. angulus, Lat.] The space intercepted between two lines intersecting or meeting, so as, if continued, they would intersect each other.

Angle of the centre of a circle, is an angle whose vertex, or angular point, is at the centre of a circle, and whose legs are two semidiameters of that circle. Stone's Dict.

A'NGLE. n. s. [angel, Germ. and Dutch.] An instrument to take fish, consisting of a rod, a line, and a hook.

She also had an angle in her hand; but the taker was so taken, that she had forgotten taking. Sidney.

Give me thine angle, we'll to the river there,
My musick playing far off, I will betray
Tawny-finn'd fish; my bending hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws. Shakespeare.

The patient fisher takes his silent stand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand;
With looks unmov'd, he hopes the scaly breed,
And eyes the dancing cork and bending reed.
Pope

To A'NGLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fish with a rod and hook.

The ladies angling in the crystal lake,
Feast on the waters with the prey they take.
Waller.

2. To try to gain by some insinuating artifices, as fishes are caught by a bait.

If he spake courteously, he angled the people's hearts: if he were silent, he mused upon some dangerous plot. Sidney.

By this face,
This seeming brow of justice, did he win
The hearts of all that he did angle for. Shakesp.

The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait;
So angle we for Beatrice. Shakespeare.

A'NGLE ROD. n. s [angel roede, Dutch] The stick to which the line and hook are hung.

It differeth much in greatness; the smallest being fit for thatching of houses; the second bigness is used for angle-rods; and, in China, for beating of offenders upon the thighs. Bacon.

He makes a May-fly to a miracle, and furnishes the whole country with angle-rods. Addison.

A'NGLER. n. s. [from angle.] He that fishes with an angle.

He, like a patient angler, ere he strook,
Would let them play a while upon the hook.
Dryden.

Neither do birds alone, but many sorts of fishes, feed upon insects; as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Ray.

A'NGLICISM. n. s. [from Anglus, Lat.] A form of speech peculiar to the English language; an English idiom.

They corrupt their stile with untutored anglicisms. Milton.

A'NGOBER. n. s. A kind of pear.

A'NGOUR. n. s. [angor, Lat.] Pain.

If the patient be surprised with a lipothymous angour, and great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials. Harvey.

A'NGRILY. adv. [from angry.] In an angry manner; furiously; peevishly.

I will sit as quiet as a lamb;
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angrily. Shakespeare.

A'NGRY. adj. [from anger.]

1. Touched with anger; provoked.

Oh let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak: peradventure there shall be thirty found there. Gen. xviii. 30.

2. It seems properly to require, when the object of anger is mentioned, the particle at before a thing, and with before a person; but this is not always observed.

Your Coriolanus is not much missed, but with his friends: the commonwealth doth stand, and so would do, were he angry at it. Shakespeare.

Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither: for God did send me before you to preserve life. Gen. xlv. 5.

I think it a vast pleasure, that whenever two people of merit regard one another, so many scoundrels envy and are angry at them. Swift.

3. Having the appearance of anger; having the effect of anger.

The north wind driveth away rain: so doth an angry countenance a backbiting tongue. Prov. xxv. 23.

4. In chirurgery, painful; inflamed; smarting.

This serum, being accompanied by the thinner parts of the blood, grows red and angry; and, wanting its due regress into the mass, first gathers into a hard swelling, and, in a few days, ripens into matter, and so dischargeth. Wiseman

A'NGUISH. n. s. [angoisse, Fr. angor, Lat.] Excessive pain either of mind or body; applied to the mind, it means the pain of sorrow, and is seldom used to signify other passions.

Not all so cheerful seemed she of sight,
As was her sister; whether dread did dwell,
Or anguish, in her heart, is hard to tell.
Fairy Queen.

Virtue 's but anguish, when 'tis several,
By occasion wak'd, and circumstantial;
True virtue's soul 's always in all deeds all. Donne.

They had persecutors, whose invention was as great as their cruelty. Wit and malice conspired to find out such deaths, and those of such incredible anguish, that only the manner of dying was the punishment, death itself the deliverance. South.

Perpetual anguish fills his anxious breast,
Not stopt by business, nor compos'd by rest;
No musick cheers him, nor no feast can please. Dryden.

A'NGUISHED. adj. [from anguish.] Seized with anguish: tortured; excessively pained: not in use.

Feel no touch
Of conscience, but of fame, and be
Anguish'd, not that 'twas sin, but that 'twas she. Donne.

A'NGULAR. adj. [from angle.]

1. Having angles or corners; cornered.

As for the figure of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six cornered, being built upon a confused matter, from whence, as it were from a root, angular figures arise, even as in the amethyst and basaltes. Brown's Vulgar Errours

2. Consisting of an angle.

The distance of the edges of the knives from one another, at the distance of four inches from the angular point, where the edges of the knives meet, was the eighth part of an inch. Newton's Opticks.

ANGULA'RITY. n. s. [from angular.] The quality of being angular, or having corners.

A'NGULARLY. adj. [from angular.] With angles or corners.

Another part of the same solution afforded us an ice angularly figured. Boyle.

A'NGULARNESS. n. s. [from angular.] The quality of being angular.

A'NGULATED. adj. [from angle.] Formed with angles or corners.

Topazes, amethysts, or emeralds, which grow in the fissures, are ordinarily crystallized, or shot into angulated figures; whereas, in the strata, they are found in rude lumps, like yellow, purple, and green pebbles. Woodward.

ANGULO'SITY. n. s. [from angulous.] Angularity; cornered form. Dict.

A'NGULOUS. adj. [from angle.] Hooked; angular.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, and angulous involutions; since the coherence of the parts of these will be of as difficult a conception. Glanville.

ANGU'ST. adj. [angustus, Lat.] Narrow; strait.

ANGUSTA'TION. n. s. [from angustus.] The act of making narrow; straitening; the state of being narrowed.

The cause may be referred either to the grumousness of the blood, or to obstruction of the vein somewhere in its passage, by some angustation upon it by part of the tumour. Wiseman.

ANHELA'TION. n. s. [anhelo, Lat.] The act of panting; the state of being out of breath.

ANHELO'SE. adj. [anhelus, Lat.] Out of breath; panting; labouring of being out of breath. Dict.

ANIE'NTED. adj. [aneantir, Fr.] Frustrated; brought to nothing.

ANI'GHTS. adv. [from a for at, and night.] In the night time.

Sir Toby, you must come in earlier anights; my lady takes great exceptions at your ill hours. Shakespeare.

A'NIL. n. s. The shrub from whose leaves and stalks indigo is prepared.

ANI'LENESS. } n. s. [anilitas, Lat.] The ANI'LITY. } state of being an old woman; the old age of women.

A'NIMABLE. adj. [from animate.] That which may be put into life, or receive animation. Dict.

ANIMADVE'RSION. n. s. [animadversio, Lat.]

1. Reproof; severe censure; blame.

He dismissed their commissioners with severe and sharp animadversions. Clarendon.

2. Punishment. When the object of animadversion is mentioned, it has the particle on or upon before it.

When a bill is debating in parliament, it is usual to have the controversy handled by pamphlets on both sides; without the least animadversion upon the authors. Swift

3. In law.

An ecclesiastical censure, and an ecclesiastical animadversion, are different things; for a censure has a relation to a spiritual punishment, but an animadversion has only a respect to a temporal one; as, degradation, and the delivering the person over to the secular court. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. Perception; power of notice: not in use.

The soul is the sole percipient which hath animadversion and sense, properly so called. Glanville.

ANIMADVE'RSIVE. adj. [from animadvert.] That has the power of perceiving; percipient: not in use.

The representation of objects to the soul, the only animadversive principle, is conveyed by motions made on the immediate organs of sense. Glanville.

ANIMADVE'RSIVENESS. n. s. [from animadversive.] The power of animadverting, or making judgment. Dict.

To* ANIMADVERT. v. n. [animadverto, Lat.]

1. To pass censures upon.

I should not animadvert on him, who was a painful observer of the decorum of the stage, if he had not used extreme severity in his judgment of the incomparable Shakespeare. Dryden.

2. To inflict punishments. In both senses with the particle upon.

If the Author of the universe animadverts upon men here below, how much more will it become him to do it upon their entrance into a higher state of being? Grew.

ANIMADVE'RTER. n. s. [from animadvert.] He that passes censures, or inflicts punishments.

God is a strict observer of, and a severe animadverter upon, such as presume to partake of those mysteries, without such a preparation. South.

A'NIMAL. n. s. [animal, Lat.]

1. A living creature corporeal, distinct, on the one side, from pure spirit; on the other, from mere matter.

Animals are such beings, which, besides the power of growing, and producing their like, as plants and vegetables have, are endowed also with sensation and spontaneous motion. Mr. Ray gives us two schemes of tables of them.

Animals are either
- Sanguineous, that is, such as have blood, which breathe either by
  - Lungs, having either
    - Two ventricles in their heart, and those either
      - Viviparous,
      - Aquatick, as the whale kind,
      - Terrestrial, as quadrupeds;
      - Oviparous, as birds.
    - But one ventricle in the heart, as frogs, tortoises, and serpents.
  - Gills, as all sanguineous fishes, except the whale kind.
- Exsanguineous, or without blood, which may be divided into
  - Greater, and those either
    - Naked,
      - Terrestrial, as naked snails.
      - Aquatick, as the poulp, cuttle-fish, &c.
    - Covered with a tegument, either
      - Crustaceous, as lobsters and crab-fish.
      - Testaceous, either
        - Univalve, as limpets;
        - Bivalve, as oysters, muscles, cockles;
        - Turbinate, as periwinkles, snails, &c.
  - Lesser, as insects of all sorts.

Viviparous hairy animals, or quadrupeds, are either
- Hoofed, which are either
  - Whole-footed or hoofed, as the horse and ass,
  - Cloven-footed, having the hoof divided into
    - Two principal parts, called bisulca, either
      - Such as chew not the cud, as swine;
      - Ruminant, or such as chew the cud; divided into
        - Such as have perpetual and hollow horns.
          - Beef-kind,
          - Sheep-kind,
          - Goat-kind.
        - Such as have solid, branched, and deciduous horns, as the deer-kind.
    - Four parts, or quadrisulca, as the rhinoceros and hippopotamus.
- Clawed or digitate, having the foot divided into
  - Two parts or toes, having two nails, as the camel-kind;
  - Many toes or claws; either
    - Undivided, as the elephant;
    - Divided, which have either
      - Broad nails, and an human shape, as apes,
      - Narrower, and more pointed nails, which, in respect of their teeth, are divided into such as have

  - Many foreteeth, or cutters, in each jaw;
    - The greater, which have
      - A shorter snout and rounder head, as the cat-kind;
      - A longer snout and head, as the dog-kind.
    - The lesser, the vermin or weazel-kind.
  - Only two large and remarkable foreteeth, all which are phytivorous, and are called the hare-kind. Ray.

Vegetables are proper enough to repair animals, as being near of the same specifick gravity with the animal juices, and as consisting of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth, all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Some of the animated substances have various organical or instrumental parts, fitted for a variety of motions from place to place, and a spring of life within themselves, as beasts, birds, fishes, and insects; these are called animals. Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principles of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, and trees. Watts's Logick.

2. By way of contempt, we say of a stupid man, that he is a stupid animal.

A'NIMAL adj. [animalis, Lat.]

1. That which belongs or relates to animals.

There are things in the world of spirits, wherein our ideas are very dark and confused; such as their union with animal nature, the way of their acting on material beings, and their converse with each other. Watts's Logick.

2. Animal functions, distinguished from natural and vital, are the lower powers of the mind; as the will, memory, and imagination.

3. Animal life is opposed, on one side, to intellectual; and, on the other, to vegetable.

4. Animal is used in opposition to spiritual or rational; as, the animal nature.

ANIMA'LCULE. n. s. [animalculum, Lat.] A small animal; particularly those, which are in their first and smallest state.

We are to know, that they all come of the seed of animalculæ of their own kind, that were before laid there. Ray.

ANIMA'LITY. n. s. [from animal.] The state of animal existence.

The word animal, in the first proposition, only signifies human animality. In the minor proposition, the word animal, for the same reason, signifies the animality of a goose: thereby it becomes an ambiguous term, and unfit to build the conclusion upon. Watts.

To A'NIMATE. v. a. [animo, Lat.]

1. To quicken; to make alive; to give life to: as, the soul animates the body; man must have been animated by a higher power.

2. To give powers to; to heighten the powers or effect of any thing.

But none, ah! none can animate the lyre,
And tho mute strings with vocal souls inspire:
Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream;
None can record their heav'nly praise so well
As Helen, in whose eyes ten thousand Cupids dwell. Dryden.

3. To encourage; to incite.

The more to animate the people, he stood on high, from whence he might be best heard, and cried unto them with a loud voice. Knolles.

He was animated to expect the papacy, by the prediction of a soothsayer, that one should succeed Pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian. Bacon.

A'NIMATE. adj [from To animate.] Alive; possessing animal life.

All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them; but the main differences, between animate and inanimate, are two: the first is, that the spirits of things animate are all contained within themselves, and are branched in veins and secret canals, as blood is; and, in living creatures, the spirits have not only branches, but certain cells or seats, where the principal spirits do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort: but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in, and cut off by the tangible parts, and are not pervious one to another, as air is in snow. Bacon.

Nobler birth
Of creatures animate with gradual life,
Of growth, sense, reason, all summ'd up in man. Milton.

There are several topicks used against atheism and idolatry; such as the visible marks of divine wisdom and goodness in the works of the creation, the vital union of souls with matter, and the admirable structure of animate bodies. Bentley.

ANIMATED. participial adj. [from animate.] Lively; vigorous.

Warriours she fires with animated sounds;
Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds Pope.

A'NIMATENESS. n. s. [from animate.] The state of being animated. Dict.

ANIMA'TION. n. s. [from animate.]

1. The act of animating or enlivening.

Plants or vegetables are the principal part of the third day's work. They are the first effects of the command producat, which is the word of animation. Bacon.

2. The state of being enlivened.

Two general motions in all animation are its beginning and encrease; and two more, to run through its state and declination. Brown's Vulg. Err.

A'NIMATIVE. adj. [from animate.] That which has the power of giving life, or animating.

ANIMA'TOR. n. s. [from animate.] That which gives life; or any thing analogous to life, as motion.

Those bodies, being of a congenerous nature, do readily receive the impressions of their motor; and, if not fettered by their gravity, conform themselves to situations, wherein they best unite to their animator. Brown.

ANIMO'SE. adj. [animosus, Lat.] Full of spirit; hot; vehement. Dict.

ANIMO'SENESS. n. s. [from animose.] Spirit; heat; vehemence of temper. Dict.

ANIMO'SITY. n. s. [animositas, Lat.] Vehemence of hatred; passionate malignity. It implies rather a disposition to break out into outrages, than the outrage itself.

They were sure to bring passion, animosity, and malice enough of their own, what evidence soever they had from others. Clarendon.

If there is not some method found out for allaying these heats and animosities among the fair sex, one does not know to what outrages they may proceed. Addison.

No religious sect ever carried their aversions for each other to greater heights, than our state parties have done; who, the more to inflame their passions, have mixed religious and civil animosities together; borrowing one of their appellations from the church. Swift.

A'NISE. n. s. [anisum, Lat.] A species of apium or parsley, with large sweet-scented seeds. This plant is not worth propagating in England for use, because the seeds can be had much better and cheaper from Italy. Miller.

Ye pay the tythe of mint, and anise, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Matt. xxiii. 23.

A'NKER. n. s. [ancker, Dutch.] A liquid measure chiefly used at Amsterdam. It is the fourth part of the awm, and contains two stekans: each stekan consists of sixteen mengles; the mengle being equal to two of our wine quarts. Chamb.

A'NKLE. n. s. [ancleop, Sax; anckel, Dutch.] The joint which joins the foot to the leg.

One of his ankles was much swelled and ulcerated on the inside, in several places. Wiseman.

My simple system shall suppose,
That Alma enters at the toes;
That then she mounts by just degrees
Up to the ankles, legs, and knees. Prior.

A'NKLE-BONE. n. s. [from ankle and bone.] The bone of the ankle.

The shin-bone, from the knee to the instep, is made by shadowing one half of the leg with a single shadow; the ankle-bone will shew itself by a shadow given underneath, as the knee. Peacham.

A'NNALIST. n. s. [from annals.] A writer of annals.

Their own annalist has given the same title to that of Syrmium. Atterbury.

A'NNALS. n. s. without singular number. [annales, Lat.] Histories digested in the exact order of time; narratives in which every event is recorded under its proper year.

Could you with patience hear, or I relate,
O nymph! the tedious annals of our fate;
Through such a train of woes if I should run,
The day would sooner than the tale be done! Dryd.

We are assured, by many glorious examples in the annals of our religion, that every one, in the like circumstances of distress, will not act and argue thus; but thus will every one be tempted to act. Rogers.

A'NNATS. n. s. without singular. [annates, Lat.]

1. First fruits; because the rate of first fruits paid of spiritual livings, is after one year's profit. Cowell.

2. Masses said in the Romish church for the space of a year, or for any other time, either for the soul of a person deceased, or for the benefit of a person living. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To ANNE'AL. v. a. [ælan, to heat, Saxon.]

1. To heat glass, that the colours laid on it may be fixed.

But when thou dost anneal in glass thy story,
——— then the light and glory
More rev'rend grows, and more doth win,
Which else shews wat'rish, bleak, and thin. Herb.

When you purpose to anneal, take a plate of iron made fit for the oven; or take a blue stone, which being made fit for the oven, lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peacham.

Which her own inward symmetry reveal'd,
And like a picture shone in glass anneal'd. Dryd.

2. To heat glass after it is blown, that it may not break.

3. To heat any thing in such a manner as to give it the true temper.

To ANNEX. v. a. [annecto, annexum, Lat. annexer, Fr.]

1. To unite to at the end; as, he annexed a codicil to his will.

2. To unite, as a smaller thing to a greater; as, he annexed a province to his kingdom.

3. To unite à posteriori; annexion always presupposing something; thus we may say, punishment is annexed to guilt, but not guilt to punishment.

Concerning fate or destiny, the opinions of those learned men, that have written thereof, may be safely received, had they not thereunto annexed and fastened an inevitable necessity, and made it more general and universally powerful than it is. Raleigh.

Nations will decline so low
From virtue, which is reason; that no wrong,
But justice, and some fatal curse annex'd,
Deprives them of their outward liberty. Milton.

I mean not the authority, which is annexed to your office; I speak of that only, which is inborn and inherent to your person. Dryden.

He cannot but love virtue wherever it is, and annex happiness always to the exercise of it. Atter.

The temporal reward is annexed to the bare performance of the action, but the eternal to the obedience. Rogers.

ANNE'X. n. s. [from To annex.] The thing annexed; additament.

Failing in his first attempt to be but like the highest in heaven, he hath obtained of men to be the same on earth, and hath accordingly assumed the annexes of divinity. Brown.

ANNEXA'TION. n. s. [from annex.]

1. Conjunction; addition.

If we can return to that charity and peaceable mindedness, which Christ so vehemently recommends to us; we have his own promise, that the whole body will be full of light, Matth. vi. that all other christian virtues will, by way of concomitance or annexation, attend them. Hammond.

2. Union; act or practice of adding or uniting.

How annexations or benefices first came into the church, whether by the prince's authority, or the pope's licence, is a very great dispute. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ANNE'XION. n. s. [from annex.] The act of annexing; addition.

It is necessary to engage the fears of men, by the annexation of such penalties, as will overbalance temporal pleasure. Rogers.

ANNEX'MENT. n. s. [from annex.]

1. The act of annexing.

2. The thing annexed.

When it falls,
Each small annexment, petty consequence,
Attends the boist'rous ruin. Shakespeare.

ANNI'HILABLE. adj. [from annihilate.] That which may be reduced to nothing; that which may be put out of existence.

To ANNI'HILATE. v. a. [ad and nihilum, Lat.]

1. To reduce to nothing; to put out of existence.

It is impossible for any body to be utterly annihilated, but that, as it was the work of the omnipotency of God to make somewhat of nothing, so it requireth the like omnipotency to turn somewhat into nothing. Bacon.

Thou taught'st me, by making me
Love her, who doth neglect both me and thee,
T' invent and practise this one way t' annihilate
all three Donne

He despaired of God's mercy; he, by a decollation of all hope, annihilated his mercy. Brown's Vulgar Errours

Whose friendship can stand against assaults, strong enough to annihilate the friendship of puny minds; such an one has reached true constancy. South

Some imagined, water sufficient to a deluge was created, and, when the business was done, disbanded and annihilated. Woodward.

2. To destroy, so as to make the thing otherwise than it was.

The flood hath altered, deformed, or rather annihilated, this place, so as no man can find any mark or memory thereof. Ralegh.

3. To annul; to destroy the agency of any thing.

There is no reason, that any one commonwealth should annihilate that, whereupon the whole world has agreed. Hooker.

ANNIHILA'TION. n. s. [from annihilate.] The act of reducing to nothing. The state of being reduced to nothing.

God hath his influence into the very essence of things, without which their utter annihilation could not choose but follow. Hooker.

That knowledge, which as spirits we obtain,
Is to be valued in the midst of pain:
Annihilation were to lose heav'n more:
We are not quite exil'd, where thought can soar. Dryden.

ANNIVE'RSARY. n. s. [anniversarius, Lat.]

1. A day celebrated as it returns in the course of the year.

For encouragement to follow the example of martyrs, the primitive christians met at the places of their martyrdom, to praise God for them, and to observe the anniversary of their sufferings. Stillingfleet.

2. The act of celebration, or performance, in honour of the anniversary day.

Donne had never seen Mrs. Drury, whom he has made immortal in his admirable anniversaries. Dryden.

3. Anniversary is an office in the Romish church, celebrated now only once a year, but which ought to be said daily through the year, for the soul of the deceased. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ANNIVE'RSARY. adj. [anniversarius, Lat.] Returning with the revolution of the year; annual; yearly.

The heaven whirled about with admirable celerity, most constantly finishing its anniversary vicissitudes. Ray.

They deny giving any worship to a creature, as inconsistent with christianity; but confess the honour and esteem for the martyrs, which they expressed by keeping their anniversary days, and recommending their example. Stillingfleet.

ANNO DOMINI. [Lat.] In the year of our Lord; as, anno domini, or A. D. 1751; that is, in the seventeen hundred and fifty-first year from the birth of our Saviour.

ANNOI'SANCE. n. s. [from annoy, but not now in use.]

It hath a double signification. Any hurt done either to a publick place, as highway, bridge, or common river; or to a private, by laying any thing that may breed infection, by encroaching, or such like means. The writ that is brought upon this transgression. See NUISANCE, the word now used. Blount.

ANNOLIS. n. s. An American animal, like a lizard.

ANNOTA'TION. n. s. [annotatio, Lat.] Explications or remarks written upon books, notes.

It might appear very improper to publish annotations, without the text itself whereunto they relate. Boyle.

ANNOTA'TOR. n. s. [Lat.] A writer of notes, or annotations; a scholiast, a commentator.

I have not that respect for the annotators, which they generally meet with in the world. Felton on the Classicks.

To ANNO'UNCE. v. a. [annoncer, Fr. annuncio, Lat.]

1. To publish; to proclaim.

Of the Messiah I have heard foretold
By all the prophets; of thy birth at length
Announc'd by Gabriel with the first I knew. Milt.

2. To pronounce; to declare by a judicial sentence.

Those, mighty Jove, mean time, thy glorious care,
Who model nations, publish laws, announce
Or life or death. Prior.

To ANNO'Y. v. a. [annoyer, Fr.] To incommode; to vex; to teaze; to molest.

Woe to poor man; each outward thing annoys him;
He heaps in inward grief, that most destroys him. Sidney.

Her joyous presence and sweet company
In full content he there did long enjoy;
Ne wicked envy, nor vile jealousy,
His dear delights were able to annoy. Fairy Queen.

As one, who long in populous city pent,
Where houses thick, and sewers, annoy the air,
Forth issuing on a summer's morn to breathe
Among the pleasant villages and farms
Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight. Milton.

Insects seldom use their offensive weapons, unless provoked: let them but alone, and annoy them not. Ray.

ANNO'Y. n. s. [from the verb.] Injury; molestation; trouble.

Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy. Shakespeare.

All pain and joy is in their way;
The things we fear bring less annoy
Than fear, and hope brings greater joy;
But in themselves they cannot stay. Donne.

What then remains, but, after past annoy,
To take the good vicissitude of joy? Dryden.

ANNO'YANCE. n. s. [from annoy.]

1. That which annoys: that which hurts.

A grain, a dust, a knat, a wand'ring hair,
Any annoyance in that precious sense. Shakesp.

Crows, ravens, rooks, and magpies, are great annoyances to corn. Mortimer.

2. The state of being annoyed; or act of annoying.

The spit venom of their poisoned hearts breaketh out to the annoyance of others. Hooker.

The greatest annoyance and disturbance of mankind has been from one of those two things, force or fraud. South.

For the further annoyance and terrour of any besieged place, they would throw into it dead bodies. Wilkins.

ANNO'YER. n. s. [from To annoy.] The person that annoys.

ANNUAL. adj. [annuel, Fr. from annus, Lat.]

1. That which comes yearly.

Annual for me the grape, the rose, renew
The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew. Pope.

2. That which is reckoned by the year.

The king's majesty
Does purpose honour to you, to which
A thousand pounds a-year, annual support,
Out of his grace he adds. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

3. That which lasts only a year.

The dying in the winter of the roots of plants that are annual, seemeth to be caused by the overexpence of the sap; which being prevented, they will superannuate, if they stand warm. Bacon.

Every tree may, in some sense, be said to be an annual plant; both leaf, flower, and fruit proceeding from the coat, that was superinduced over the wood the last year. Ray.

A'NNUALLY. adv. [from annual.] Yearly; every year.

By two drachms, they thought it sufficient to signify a heart; because the heart at one year weigheth two drachms, that is, a quarter of an ounce; and, unto fifty years, annually encreaseth the weight of one drachm. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The whole strength of a nation is the utmost, that a prince can raise annually from his subjects. Swift.

ANNU'ITANT. n. s. [from annuity.] He that possesses or receives an annuity.

ANNU'ITY. n s. [annuité, Fr.]

1. A yearly rent to be paid for term of life or years. The differences between a rent and an annuity are, that every rent is going out of land; but an annuity charges only the granter, or his heirs, that have assets by descent. The second difference is, that, for the recovery of an annuity, no action lies, but only the writ of annuity against the granter, his heirs, or successors; but of a rent, the same actions lie as do of land. The third difference is, that an annuity is never taken for assets, because it is no freehold in law; nor shall be put in execution upon a statute merchant, statute staple, or elegit, as a rent may. Cowell.

2. A yearly allowance.

He was generally known to be the son of one earl, and brother to another; who supplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father would bear. Clarendon.

To ANNU'L. v. a. [from nullus.]

1. To make void; to nullify; to abrogate; to abolish.

That, which gives force to the law, is the authority that enacts it, and, whoever destroys this authority, does in effect annul the law. Rogers.

2. To reduce to nothing; to obliterate.

Light, the pure work of God, to me's extinct,
And all her various objects of delight
Annull'd, which might in part my grief have eas'd. Milton.

ANNULAR. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of a ring.

That they might not, in bending the arm or leg, rise up, he has tied them to the bones by annular ligaments. Cheyne.

A'NNULARY. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of rings.

Because continual respiration is necessary, the wind-pipe is made with annulary cartilages, that the sides of it may not flag and fall together. Ray.

A'NNULET. n. s. [from annulus, Lat.]

1. A little ring.

2. [In heraldry.] A difference or mark of distinction, which the fifth brother of any family ought to bear in his coat of arms.

3 Annulets are also a part of the coat-armour of several families; they were anciently reputed a mark of nobility and jurisdiction, it being the custom of prelates to receive their investiture per baculum & annulum.

4. [In architecture.] The small square members, in the Dorick capital, under the quarter round, are called annulets.

b. Annulet is also used for a narrow flat moulding, common to other parts of the column; so called, because it encompasses the column round. Chambers.

To ANNUMERATE. v. a. [annumero, Lat.] To add to a former number; to unite to something before mentioned

ANNUMERA'TION. n. s. [annumeratio, Lat.] Addition to a former number.

To ANNU'NCIATE. v. a. [annuncio, Lat.] To bring tidings; to relate something that has fallen out: a word not in popular use.

ANNUNCIA'TION-DAY. n. s. [from annunciate.] The day celebrated by the church, in memory of the angel's salutation of the blessed Virgin: solemnized with us on the twenty-fifth of March.

Upon the day of the annunciation, or Lady-day, meditate on the incarnation of our blessed Saviour; and so, upon all the festivals of the year. Taylor.

A'NODYNE. adj [from α and ὀδύνη.] That which has the power of mitigating pain.

Yet durst she not too deeply probe the wound,
As hoping still the nobler parts were sound:
But strove with anodynes assuage the smart;
And mildly thus her med'cine did impart. Dryden.

Anodynes, or abaters of pain of the alimentary kind, are such things as relax the tensions of the affected nervous fibres, as decoctions of emollient substances; those things, which destroy the particular acrimony which occasions the pain; or what deadens the sensation of the brain, by procuring sleep Arbuthnot.

To ANO'INT. v. a. [oindre, enoindre, part. oint, enoint, Fr.]

1. To rub over with unctuous matter, as oil, or unguents.

Anointed let me be with deadly venom. Shakesp.
Thou shalt have olive trees, throughout all thy coasts, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil: for thine olive shall cast his fruit. Deut. xxviii. 40.

2. To smear; to be rubbed upon.

Warm waters then, in brazen caldrons borne,
Are pour'd to wash his body, joint by joint,
And fragrant oils the stiffen'd limbs anoint Dryden.

3. To consecrate by unction.

I would not see thy sister
In his anointed flesh stick boarish fangs. Shakesp.

ANO'INTER. n. s. [from anoint.] The person that anoints.

ANOMALISM. n. s. [from anomaly.] Anomaly; irregularity, deviation from the common rule. Dict.

ANOMALI'STICAL. adj. [from anomaly.] Irregular; applied in astronomy to the year, taken for the time in which the earth passeth through its orbit, distinct from the tropical year.

ANO'MALOUS. adj. [α priv. and ομαλὸς.] Irregular; out of rule; deviating from the general method or analogy of things. It is applied, in grammar, to words deviating from the common rules of inflection; and, in astronomy, to the seemingly irregular motions of the planets.

There will arise anomalous disturbances, not only in civil and artificial, but also in military officers. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

He being acquainted with some characters of every speech, you may at pleasure make him understand anomalous pronunciation. Holder.

Metals are gold, silver, copper, tin, lead, and iron; to which we may join that anomalous body, quicksilver or mercury. Locke.

ANO'MALOUSLY. adv. [from anomalous.] Irregularly; in a manner contrary to rule.

Eve was not solemnly begotten, but suddenly framed, and anomalously proceeded from Adam. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANO'MALY. n. s. [anomalie, Fr. anomalia, Lat. ἀνώμαλία.] Irregularity; deviation from the common rule.

If we should chance to find a mother debauching her daughter, as such monsters have been seen, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baseness of nature. South

I do not pursue the many pseudographies in use; but intend to shew, how most of those anomalies in writing might be avoided, and better supplied. Holder.

A'NOMY. n. s. [α priv. and νόμος.] Breach of law.

If sin be good and just, and lawful; it is no more evil, it is no sin, no anomy. Bramhall against Hobbes.

ANO'N. adv. [Junius imagines it to be an elliptical form of speaking for in one, that is, in one minute; Skinner from a and nean, or near; Minshew from on on.]

1. Quickly; soon; in a short time.

A little snow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a mountain. Shakespeare.
Will they come abroad anon?
Shall we see young Oberon? Ben Jonson.
However, witness, Heav'n!
Heav'n, witness thou anon! while we discharge
Freely our part. Milton.

He was not without design at that present, as shall be made out anon; meaning, by that device to withdraw himself. Clarendon.

Still as I did the leaves inspire,
With such a purple light they shone,
As if they had been made of fire,
And spreading so would flame anon. Waller.

2. Sometimes; now and then; at other times. In this sense is used ever and anon, for now and then.

Full forty days he pass'd, whether on hill
Sometimes, anon in shady vale, each night,
Or harbour'd in one cave, is not reveal'd. Milton.

ANO'NYMOUS. adj. [α priv. and ὄνυμα.] Wanting a name.

These animalcules serve also for food to another anonymous insect of the waters. Ray.

They would forthwith publish slanders unpunished, the authors being anonymous, the immediate publishers thereof sculking. Notes on the Dunciad.

ANO'NYMOUSLY. adv. [from anonymous.] Without a name.

I would know, whether the edition is to come out anonymously, among complaints of spurious editions. Swift.

A'NOREXY. n. s. [ἀνορεξία.] Inappetency, or loathing of food. Quincy.

ANO'THER. adj. [from an and other.]

1. Not the same.

He that will not lay a foundation for perpetual disorder, must of necessity find another rise of government than that. Locke.

2. One more; a new edition to the former number.

——— A fourth? ———
What! will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom?
Another yet?—a seventh! I'll see no more. Shakespeare.

3. Any other; any one else.

If one man sin against another, the judge shall judge him 1 Samuel, ii. 25.
Why not of her? preferr'd above the rest
By him with knightly deeds, and open love profess'd;
So had another been, where he his vows address'd. Dryden.

4. Not one's self.

A man shall have diffused his life, his self, and his whole concernments so far, that he can weep his sorrows with another's eyes; when he has another heart besides his own, both to share and to support his grief. South.

5. Widely different; much altered.

When the soul is beaten from its station, and the mounds of virtue are broken down; it becomes quite another thing, from what it was before. South.

ANO'THERGAINES. adj. [See ANOTHERGUESS.] Of another kind. This word I have found only in Sidney.

If my father had not plaid the hasty fool, I might have had anothergaines husband than Dametas Sidney

ANO'THERGUESS. adj. [This word, which though rarely used in writing, is somewhat frequent in colloquial language, I conceive to be corrupted from another guise; that is, of a different guise, or manner, or form.] Of a different kind.

Oh Hocus! where art thou? It used to go in anotherguess manner in thy time. Arbuthnot.

A'NSATED. adj. [ansatus, Lat.] Having handles; or something in the form of handles.

To ANSWER. v. n. [The etymology is uncertain; the Saxons had andpyppan, but in another sense: the Dutch have antwoorden.]

1. To speak in return to a question.
Are we succour'd? are the Moors remov'd?
Answer these questions first, and then a thousand more.
Answer them all together. Dryden.

2. To speak in opposition.
No man was able to answer him a word. Matthew xxii. 46.
If it be said, we may discover the elementary ingredients of things, I answer, that it is not necessary, that such a discovery should be practicable. Boyle.

3. To be accountable for: with for
Those many had not dared to do evil,
If the first man, that did th' edict infringe,
Had answer'd for his deed. Shakespeare.
Some men have sinned in the principles of humanity, and must answer for not being men. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
If there be any absurdity in this, our author must answer for it. Locke.

4. To vindicate; to give a justificatory account of: with for.
The night, so impudently fixed for my last, made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my family. Swift.

5. To give an account.
How they have been since received, and so well improved, let those answer either to God or man, who have been the authors and promoters of such wise council. Temple.
He wants a father, to protect his youth,
And rear him up to virtue. You must bear
The future blame, and answer to the world,
When you refuse the easy honest means
Of taking care of him. Southern.

6. To correspond to; to suit with.
As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man. Prov. xxvii. 19

7. To be equivalent to; to stand for something else.
A feast is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry; but money answereth all things. Eccl. x. 19.

8. To satisfy any claim or petition of right or justice.
Zelmane with rageful eyes bade him defend himself, for no less than his life would answer it. Sidney.
Revenge the jeering and disdain'd contempt
Of this proud king, who studies day and night
To answer all the debt he owes unto you,
Ev'n with the bloody payments of your deaths. Shakespeare
Let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world Shakespeare.
Men no sooner find their appetites unanswered, than they complain the times are injurious. Raleigh
That yearly rent is still paid, even as the former casualty itself was wont to be, in parcel meal paid in and answered. Bacon.

9. To act reciprocally.
Say, do'st thou yet the Roman harp command?
Do the stirings answer to thy noble hand? Dryden

10. To stand as opposite or correlative to something else.
There can but two things create love, perfection and usefulness; to which answer, on our part, 1. Admiration; and, 2. Desire. and both these are centered in love Taylor.

11. To bear proportion to.
Weapons must needs be dangerous things, if they answered the bulk of so prodigious a person. Swift.

12. To perform what is endeavoured or intended by the agent.
Our part is, to choose out the most deserving objects, and the most likely to answer the ends of our charity; and, when this is done, all is done, that lies in our power; the rest must be left to providence. Atterbury.

13. To comply with.
He dies, that touches of this fruit,
Till I and my affairs are answered. Shakespeare.

14. To succeed; to produce the wished event.
Jason followed her counsel? whereto when the event had answered, he again demanded the fleece. Raleigh.
In operations upon bodies for their version or alteration, the trial in great quantities doth not answer the trial in small: and so deceiveth many. Bacon.

15. To appear to any call, or authoritative summons; in which sense, though figuratively, the following passage may be, perhaps, taken.
Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer, with thy uncovered body, this extremity of the skies. Shakespeare.

16. To be over-against any thing.
Fire answers fire; and, by their paly beams,
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face. Shak.

A'NSWER, n. s. [from To answer.]

1. That which is said, whether in speech or writing, in return to a question, or position.
It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in wine than in your sight, wine is good. Locke.
How can we think of appearing at that tribunal, without being able to give a ready answer to the questions, which he shall then put to us, about the poor and the afflicted, the hungry and the naked, the sick and imprisoned? Atterbury.

2. An account to be given to the demand of justice.
He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,
That you shall chide your trespass. Shakespeare.

3. In law, a confutation of a charge exhibited against a person.
A personal answer ought to have three qualities; it ought to be pertinent to the matter in hand; it ought to be absolute and unconditional; it ought to be clear and certain. Ayliffe.

A'NSWER-JOBBER, [from answer and jobber.] He that makes a trade of writing answers.
What disgusts me with having any thing to do with answer-jobbers, is that they have no conscience. Swift.

A'NSWERABLE, adj. [from answer.]

1. That to which a reply may be made; that which may be answered as the argument, though subtle, is yet answerable.

2. Obliged to give an account; obliged to answer any demand of justice; or stand the trial of an accusation.
Every chief of every kindred or family should be answerable, and bound to bring forth every one of that kindred, at all times, to be justified, when he should be required or charged with any treason or felony. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Will any man argue, that if a physician should manifestly prescribe poison to all his patients, he cannot be justly punished, but is answerable only to God? Swift.
He cannot think ambition more justly laid to their charge, than to other men; because that would be, to make church government answerable for the errours of human nature. Swift

3. Correspondent.
It was but such a likeness, as an imperfect glass doth give; answerable enough in some features and colours, but erring in others. Sidney.
The daughters of Atlas were ladies who, accompanying such as came to be registered among the worthies, brought forth children answerable in quality to those that begot them. Raleigh.

4. Proportionate; suitable.
Only add
Deeds to thy knowledge answerable; add faith,
Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love
By name to come call'd charity the soul
Of all the rest. Milton

5. Suitable; suited.
The following, by certain estates of men, answerable to that, which a great person himself professeth (as of soldiers to him, that hath been employed in the wars) hath been a thing well taken even in monarchies. Bacon.
If answerable style I can obtain
Of my celestial patroness. Milton.

6. Equal; equivalent.
There be no kings, whose means are answerable unto other men's desires. Raleigh.

7. Relative; correlative.
That, to every petition for things needful, there should be some answerable sentence of thanks provided particularly to follow, is not requisite. Hooker.

A'NSWERABLY, [from answerable.] In due proportion; with proper correspondence; suitably.
The broader seas are, if they be entire, and free from islands, they are answerably deeper. Brerewood on Languages.
It bears light sorts, into the atmosphere, to a greater or lesser height, answerably to the greater or lesser intenseness of the heat. Woodward.

A'NSWERABLENESS, n s. [from answerable.] The quality of being answerable. Dict.

A'NSWERER, [from answer.]

1. He that answers; he that speaks in return to what another has spoken.
I know your mind, and I will satisfy it, neither will I do it like a niggardly answerer, going no further than the bounds of the question. Sidney.

2. He that manages the controversy against one that has written first.
It is very unfair in any writer to employ ignorance and malice together; because it gives his answerer double work. Swift.

A'NT, n. s. [æmette, Sax. which Junius imagines, not without probability, to have been first contracted to æmt, and then softened to ant.] An emmet; a pismire. A small insect that lives in great numbers together in hillocks.
We'll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there is no labouring in the winter. Shakespeare.
Methinks, all cities now but ant-hills are,
Where when the several labourers I see,
For children, house, provision, taking pain;
They're all but ants, carrying eggs, straw, and grain. Donne.
Learn each small people's genius, policies;
The ants republick, and the realm of bees. Pope.

A'NT-BEAR, n. s. [from ant and bear.] An animal that feeds on ants.
Divers quadrupeds feed upon insects; and some live wholly upon them; as two sorts of tamanduas upon ants, which therefore are called in English ant-bears, Ray.

A'NT-HILL, or HILLOCK, n. s. [from ant and hill.] The small protuberances of earth, in which ants make their nests.
Put blue flowers into an ant-hill, they will be stained with red; because the ants drop upon them their stinging liquor, which hath the effect of oil of vitriol. Bacon.
Those who have seen ant-hillocks, have easily perceived those small heaps of corn about their nests. Addison.

A'N'T. A contraction for and it, or rather and if it; as, a'nt please you; that is, and if it please you.

ANTA'GONIST, n. s. [ἀντὶ and ἀγωνίζω.]

1. One who contends with another; an opponent. It implies generally a personal and particular opposition.
Our antagonists in these controversies may have met with some not unlike to Ithacius. Hooker.

What was set before him,
To heave, pull, draw, and break, he still perform'd,
None daring to appear antagonist. Milton.

It is not fit that the history of a person should appear, till the prejudice both of his antagonist and adherents be softened and subdued. Addison.

2. Contrary.

The short club consists of those, who are under five feet; ours is to be composed of such as are above six. These we look upon, as the two extremes and antagonists of the species; considering all these as neuters, who fill up the middle space. Addison.

3. In anatomy, the antagonist is that muscle which counteracts some other.

A relaxation of a muscle must produce a spasm in its antagonist, because the equilibrium is destroyed. Arbuthnot.

To ANTA'GONIZE, v. n. [from ἀντὶ and ἀγωνίζω.] To contend against another. Dict.

ANTA'LGICK, adj. [from ἀντὶ, against, and ἀλγέω, pain.] That which softens pain; anodyne.

ANTANACLA'SIS, n. s. [Lat. from ἀνταναάκλασις, from ἀνταναακλάω to break back.]

1. A figure in rhetorick, when the same word is repeated in a different, if not in a contrary signification; as, In thy youth learn some craft, that in old age thou mayst get thy living without craft. Craft, in the first place, signifies science or occupation; in the second, deceit or subtilty.

2. It is also a returning to the matter at the end of a long parenthesis; as, Shall that heart (which does not only feel them, but hath all motion of his life placed in them), shall that heart, I say, &c. Smith's Rhetorick.

ANTAPHRODI'TICK, adj. [from ἀντὶ against, and Ἀφροδίτη Venus.] That which is efficacious against the venereal disease.

To ANTECE'DE. v. n. [from ante before, and cedo to go.] To precede; to go before.

It seems consonant to reason, that the fabrick of the world did not long antecede its motion. Hale.

ANTECE'DENCE, n. s. [from antecede.] The act or state of going before, precedence.

It is impossible that mixed bodies can be eternal; because there is necessarily a pre-existence of the simple bodies, and antecedence of their constitution, preceding the existence of mixed bodies. Hale.

ANTECE'DENT, adj. [antecedens, Lat.]

1. Going before; preceding. Antecedent is used, I think, only with regard to time; precedent, with regard both to time and place.

To assert, that God looked upon Adam's fall as a sin, and punished it, when (without any antecedent sin of his) it was impossible for him not to fall; seems a thing, that highly reproaches essential equity and goodness. South.

2. It has to before the thing which is supposed to follow.

No one is so hardy as to say, God is in his debt; that he owed him a nobler being: for existence must be antecedent to merit. Collier.

Did the blood first exist, antecedent to the formation of the heart? But that is, to set the effect before the cause. Bentley.

ANTECE'DENT, n. s. [antecedens, Lat.]

1. That which goes before

A duty of so mighty an influence, that it is indeed the necessary antecedent, if not also the direct cause, of a sinner's return to God. South.

2. In grammar, the noun to which the relative is subjoined; as, the man who comes hither.

Let him learn the right joining of substantives with adjectives, the noun with the verb, and the relative with the antecedent. Ascham.

3. In logick, the first proposition of an enthymeme, or argument consisting only of two propositions.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those, whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move; if there be no fire, there will be no smoke. The first part of these propositions, or that wherein the condition is contained, is called the antecedent; the other is called the consequent. Watts's Logick.

ANTECE'DENTLY, adv. [from antecedent.] In the state of antecedence, or going before; previously.

We consider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities. South.

ANTECE'SSOR, n. s. [Lat.] One who goes before, or leads another; the principal. Dict

ANTECHAMBER, n. s. [ante before, and chamber; it is generally written, improperly, antichamber.] The chamber that leads to the chief apartment.

The empress has the antichambers past,
And this way moves with a disorder'd haste Dryd.

His antichamber, and room of audience, are little square chambers wainscoted. Addison.

ANTECU'RSOR, n. s. [Lat.] One who runs before. Dict

To A'NTEDATE v. a. [from ante, and do; datum, Lat.]

1. To date earlier than the real time, so as to confer a fictitious antiquity.

Now thou hast loved me one whole day;
To-morrow, when thou leav'st, what wilt thou say?
Wilt thou then antedate some new-made vow,
Or say, that now
We are not just those persons which we were? Donne.

By reading, a man does (as it were) antedate his life, and makes himself contemporary with the ages past. Collier.

2. To take something before the proper time.

Our joys below it can improve,
And antedate the bliss above Pope.

ANTEDILU'VIAN, adj. [from ante before, and diluvium a deluge.]

1. Existing before the deluge.

During the time of the deluge, all the stone and marble of the antediluvian earth were totally dissolved. Woodward

2. Relating to things existing before the deluge.

The text intends only the line of Seth, conducible unto the genealogy of our Saviour, and the antediluvian chronology. Brown's Vulg. Err

ANTEDILU'VIAN, n. s. One that lived before the flood.

We are so far from repining at God, that he hath not extended the period of our lives to the longevity of the antediluvians, that we give him thanks for contracting the days of our trial. Bentley.

AN'TELOPE, n. s. [The etymology is uncertain.] A goat with curled or wreathed horns.

The antelope, and wolf both fierce and fell. Spenser

ANTI'LOQUIST, n. s. [from ἀντὶ against, and loquor to speak.] A contradictor. Dic.

ANTIMONARCHICAL. adj. [from ἀντὶ against, and μοναρχία government by a single person.] Against government by a single person.

When he spied the statue of King Charles in the middle of the crowd, and most of the kings ranged over their heads, he concluded, that an antimonarchical assembly could never choose such a place. Addison.

ANTIMONA'RCHICALNESS. n. s. [from antimonarchical.] The quality of being an enemy to regal power.

ANTIMO'NIAL, adj. [from antimony.] Made of antimony; having the qualities of antimony; relating to antimony.

They were got out of the reach of antimonial fumes. Grew.

Though antimonial cups, prepar'd with art,
Their force to wine through ages should impart;
This dissipation, this profuse expence,
Nor shrinks their size, nor wastes their stores immense. Blackmore.

A'NTIMONY. n. s. [The stibium of the ancients, by the Greeks called στίμμι. The reason of its modern denomination is referred to Basil Valentine, a German monk; who, as the tradition relates, having thrown some of it to the hogs, observed that, after it had purged them heartily, they immediately fattened; and therefore he imagined his fellow monks would be the better for a like dose. The experiment, however, succeeded so ill, that they all died of it; and the medicine was thenceforward called antimoine, antimonk.]

Antimony is a mineral substance, of a metalline nature, having all the seeming characters of a real metal, except malleability; and may be called a semimetal, being a fossile glebe of some undetermined metal, combined with a sulphurous and stony substance. Mines of all metals afford it; that in gold mines is reckoned best. It has also its own mines in Hungary, Germany, and France. Its texture is full of little shining veins or threads, like needles; brittle as glass. Sometimes veins of a red or golden colour are intermixed, which is called male antimony; that without them being denominated female antimony. It fuses in the fire, though with some difficulty; and dissolves more easily in water. It destroys and dissipates all metals fused with it, except gold; and it is therefore useful in refining. It is a common ingredient in speculums, or burning concaves; serving to give them a finer polish. It makes a part in bell metal; and renders the sound more clear. It is mingled with tin, to make it more hard, white, and sound; and with lead, in the casting of printer's letters, to render them more smooth and firm. It is a general help in the melting of metals, and especially in casting of cannon balls. In pharmacy it is used under various forms, and with various intentions, chiefly as an emetick. Chambers.

ANTINEPHRI'TICK. adj. [from ἀντὶ and νεφρίτικος] Medicines good against diseases of the reins and kidneys.

AN'TINOMY, n. s. [from ἀντὶ and νόμος.] A contradiction between two laws, or two articles of the same law.

Antinomies are almost unavoidable in such variety of opinions and answers. Baker.

ANTIPARALY'TICK, adj. [from ἀντὶ and παραλυσις.] Efficacious against the palsy.

ANTIPATHE'TICAL. adj. [from antipathy.] Having a natural contrariety to any thing.

The soil is fat and luxurious, and antipathetical to all venomous creatures. Howell's Vocal Forest.

ANTIPATHE'TICALNESS. n. s. [from antipathetical.] The quality or state of having a natural contrariety to any thing. Dict.

ANTI'PATHY, n. s. [from ἀντὶ against, and πάθος feeling; antipathie, Fr.]

1. A natural contrariety to any thing, so as to shun it involuntarily; aversion; dislike. It is opposed to sympathy.

No contraries hold more antipathy,
Than I and such a knave. Shakespeare.

To this perhaps might be justly attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in men. Locke.

2. It has sometimes the particle against, before the object of antipathy.

I had a mortal antipathy against standing armies in times of peace; because I took armies to be hired by the master of the family, to keep his children in slavery. Swift.

3. Sometimes to.

Ask you, what provocation I have had?
The strong antipathy of good to bad.
When truth, or virtue, an affront endures,
Th' affront is mine, my friend, and should be your's. Pope.

4. Formerly with; but improperly.

Tangible bodies have an antipathy with air; and any liquid body, that is more dense, they will draw, condense, and (in effect) incorporate. Bacon

ANTIPERISTASIS, n. s. [from ἀντιπερίστασις, formed of ἀντὶ, and περίστημι to stand round.] The opposition of a contrary quality, by which the quality it opposes becomes heightened or intended; or the action by which a body, attacked by another, collects itself, and becomes stronger by such opposition; or an intention of the activity of one quality caused by the opposition of another. Thus quicklime is set on fire by the affusion of cold water; so water becomes warmer in winter than in summer; and thunder and lightning are excited in the middle region of the air, which is continually cold, and all by antiperistasis. This is an exploded principle in the Peripatetick philosophy.

Th' antiperistasis of age
More inflam'd his am'rous rage. Cowley

The riotous prodigal detests covetousness; yet let him find the springs grow dry which feed his luxury, covetousness shall be called in; and so, by a strange antiperistasis, prodigality shall beget rapine. Decay of Piety.

ANTIPESTILE'NTIAL, adj. [from ἀντὶ against, and pestilential.] Efficacious against infection of the plague.

Perfumes correct the air before it is attracted by the lungs; or, rather, antipestilential unguents, to anoint the nostrils with. Harvey on the Plague.

ANTIPHRASIS, n. s. [from ἀντὶ against, and φρασις a form of speech.] The use of words in a sense opposite to their proper meaning.

You now find no cause to repent, that you never dipt your hands in the bloody high courts of justice, so called only by antiphrasis. South.

ANTI'PODAL, adj. [from antipodes.] Relating to the countries inhabited by the antipodes.

The Americans are antipodal unto the Indians Brown.

ANTI'PODES, n. s. It has no singular. [from ἀντὶ against, and πόδες feet.] Those people who, living on the other side of the globe, have their feet directly opposite to ours.

We should hold day with the antipodes,
If you would walk in absence of the sun. Shakespeare.

So shines the sun, tho' hence remov'd, as clear
When his beams warm th' antipodes, as here. Waller.

AN'TIPOPE, n. s. [from ἀντὶ against, and pope.] He that usurps the popedom in opposition to the right pope.

This house is famous in history, for the retreat of an antipope, who called himself Felix V. Addison.

ANTIPTOSIS. n. s. [ἀντίπτωσις.] A figure in grammar, by which one case is put for another.

A'NTIQUARY, n. s. [antiquarius, Lat.] A man studious of antiquity; a collector of ancient things.

All arts, rarities, and inventions, are but the relicks of an intellect defaced with sin. We admire it now, only as antiquaries do a piece of old coin, for the stamp it once bore. South.

With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope.

The rude Latin of the monks is still very intelligible: had their records been delivered in the vulgar tongue, they could not now be understood, unless by antiquaries. Swift.

A'NTIQUARY. adj. [This word is improper.] Old; antique.

Here's Nestor,
Instructed by the antiquary times;
He must, he is, he cannot but be wise. Shakesp.

To A'NTIQUATE, v. a. [antiquo Lat.] To put out of use; to make obsolete.

The growth of Christianity in this kingdom might reasonably introduce new laws, and antiquate or abrogate some old ones, that seemed less consistent with the Christian doctrines. Hale.

Milton's Paradise lost is admirable. But cannot I admire the height of his invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound? Dryden.

Almighty Latium, with her cities crown'd,
Shall like an antiquated fable sound. Addison.

A'NTIQUATEDNESS, n. s. [from antiquated.] The state of being antiquated, worn out of use, or obsolete.

ANTIQUE, adj. [antique, Fr. antiquus, Lat.] It was formerly pronounced according to the English analogy, with the accent on the first syllable; but now after the French, with the accent on the last, at least in prose; the poets use it variously.

1. Ancient; old; not modern.

Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song,
That old and ant que song, we heard last night. Shak.

Such truth in love, as th' antique world did know
In such a style, as courts might boast of now. Waller

2. Of genuine antiquity.

The seals which we have remaining of Julius Cæsar, which we know to be ant que, have the star of Venus over them. Dryden.

My copper lamps, at any rate,
For being true antique I bought;
Yet wisely melted down my plate,
Or modern models to be wrought;
And trifles I alike pursue,
Because they're old, because they're new. Prior.

3. Of old fashion.

Forth came that ancient lord and aged queen,
Array'd in antique robes down to the ground,
And sad habiliments right well beseen. Fairy Q.

Must he no more divert the tedious day?
Nor sparkling thoughts in antique words convey? Smith to the Memory of Philips.

4. Odd; wild; antick.

Name not these living death-heads unto me;
For these not ancient but antique be. Donne.

And sooner may a gulling weather spy,
By drawing forth heav'ns scheme, tell certainly,
What fashion'd hats, or ruffs, or suits, next year
Our giddy-headed antique youth will wear. Donne.

A'NTIQUE, n. s. [from antique, adj.] An antiquity; a remain of ancient times; an ancient rarity.

I leave to Edward, now earl of Oxford, my seal of Julius Cæsar; as also another seal, supposed to be a young Hercules; both very choice antiques, and set in gold. Swift.

A'NTIQUENESS. n. s. [from antique.] The quality of being antique; an appearance of antiquity.

We may discover something venerable in the antiqueness of the work; but we would see the the design enlarged. Addison.

ANTI'QUITY, n. s. [antiquitas, Lat.]

1. Old times; time past long ago.

I mention Aristotle, Polybius, and Cicero, the greatest philosopher, the most impartial historian, and the most consummate statesman, of all antiquity. Addison.

2. The people of old times; the ancients.

That such pillars were raised by Seth, all antiquity has avowed. Raleigh.

3. The works or remains of old times.

As for the observation of Machiavel, traducing Gregory the Great, that he did what in him lay, to extinguish all heathen antiquities: I do not find that those zeals last long; as it appeared in the succession of Sabinian, who did revive the former antiquities. Bacon.

4. Old age; a ludicrous sense.

Is not your voice broken? your wind short? your chin double? your wit single? and every part about you blasted with antiquity? and will you yet call yourself young? Shakespeare.

5. Ancientness; as, this ring is valuable for its antiquity.

ANTISCII. n. s. It has no singular. [from ἀντὶ, and σκιὰ shadow.] In geography, the people who inhabit on different sides of the equator, who consequently at noon have their shadows projected opposite ways. Thus the people of the north are Antiscii to those of the south; the one projecting their shadows at noon toward the north pole, and the other toward the south pole. Chambers

ANTISCORBU'TICAL. adj. [from ἀντὶ against, and scorbutum the scurvy.] Good against the scurvy.

The warm antiscorbutical plants, in quantities, will occasion stinking breath, and corrupt the blood. Arbuthnot.

ANTISCORBU'TICK. adj. [from ἀντὶ against, and scorbutum the scurvy.] Good against the scurvy.

The warm antiscorbuticks, animal diet, and animal salts are proper. Arbuthnot.

A'NTLER, n. s. [andouillier, Fr.] Properly the first branches of a stag's horns; but popularly and generally, any of his branches.

Grown old, they grow less branched, and first lose their brow antlers, or lowest furcations next to the head. Brown.

A well-grown stag, whose antlers rise
High o'er his front, his beams invade the skies. Dryd.

Bright Diana [antlers
Brought hunted wild goats heads, and branching
Of stags, the fruit and honour of her toil. Prior.

ANTOECI, n. s. It has no singular. [Lat. from ἀντὶ, and οἰκέω, to inhabit.] In geography, those inhabitants of the earth who live under the same meridian, and at the same distance from the equator; the one towards the north, and the other to the south. Hence they have the same longitude; and their latitude is also the same, but of a different denomination. They are in the same semicircle of the meridian, but opposite parallels. They have precisely the same hours of the day and night, but opposite seasons; and the night of the one is always equal to the day of the other. Chambers.

ANTONOMASIA, n. s. [from ἀντὶ and ὄνομα a name] A form of speech, in which, for a proper name, is put the name of some dignity, office, profession, science, or trade; or when a proper name is put in the room of an appellative Thus a king is called his majesty; a nobleman his lordship. We say the philosopher instead of Aristotle, and the orator for Cicero: thus a man is called by the name of his country, a German, an Italian; and a grave man is called a Cato, and a wise man a Solomon. Smith's Rhetorick.

AN'TRE, n. s. [antre, Fr. antrum, Lat.] A cavern; a cave; a den: not in use.

With all my travels history,
Wherein of antres vast, and desarts idle,
It was my bent to speak. Shakespeare.

AN'VIL, n. s. [ænpille, Sax.]

1. The iron block on which the smith lays his metal to be forged.

I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on his anvil cool. Shakesp.

On their eternal anvils here he found
The brethren beating, and the blows go round. Dryden.

2. Any thing on which blows are laid.

Here I clip
The anvil of my sword, and do contest
Hotly and nobly. Shakespeare.

3. Figuratively; to be upon the anvil, is to be in a state of formation or preparation.

Several members of our house, knowing what was upon the anvil, went to the clergy, and desired their judgment. Swift

ANXI'ETY. n. s. [anxietas, Lat.]

1. Trouble of mind, about some future event; suspense, with uneasiness; perplexity; solicitude.

To be happy, is not only to be freed from the pains and diseases of the body, but from anxiety and vexation of spirit: not only to enjoy the pleasures of sense, but peace of conscience and tranquillity of mind. Tillotson.

2. In the medical language; lowness of spirits with uneasiness of the stomach.

In anxieties which attend fevers, when the cold fit is over, a warmer regimen may be allowed; and, because anxieties often happen by spasms from wind, spices are useful. Arbuthnot.

A'NXIOUS. adj. [anxius, Lat.]

1. Disturbed, about some uncertain event; solicitous; being in painful suspense; painfully uncertain.

His pensive cheek upon his hand reclin'd,
And anxious thoughts revolving in his mind.
Dryden.

Anxious, and trembling for the birth of fate. Pope.

2. Careful; full of inquietude; unquiet.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;
But, ah! the mighty bliss is fugitive;
Discolour'd sickness, anxious labour come,
And age, and death's inexorable doom. Dryden

3. Careful, as of a thing of great importance.

No writings we need to be solicitous about the meaning of, but those that contain truths we are to believe, or laws we are to obey; we may be less anxious about the sense of other authors. Locke.

4. It has generally for or about, before the object; but sometimes of, less properly.

Anxious of neglect, suspecting change.
Granville.

A'NXIOUSLY. adv. [from anxious.] In an anxious manner; solicitously; unquietly; carefully; with painful uncertainty.

But, where the loss is temporal, every probability of it needs not put us so anxiously to prevent it, since it might be repaired again. South.

Thou, what befits the new lord mayor,
And what the Gallick arms will do,
Art anxiously inquisitive to know. Dryden.

A'NXIOUSNESS. n. s. [from anxious.] The quality, of being anxious; susceptibility of anxiety.

A'NY. adj. [anig, or enig, Sax.]

1. Every; whoever he be; whatever it be. It is, in all its senses, applied indifferently to persons or things.

APA'CE. adv. [from a and pace; that is, with a great pace.]

1. Quick; speedily: used of things in motion.

Or when the flying libbard she did chace,
She could then nimbly move, and after fly apace.
Spenser.

Ay, quoth my uncle Glo'ster,
Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace:
And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast,
Because sweet flow'rs are slow, and weeds make haste. Shakespeare.

He promis'd in his cast a glorious race;
Now, sunk from his meridian, sets apace. Dryden.

Is not he imprudent; who, seeing the tide making haste towards him apace, will sleep till the sea overwhelm him? Tillotson.

2. With haste; applied to some action.

The baron now his diamonds pours apace;
Th' embroider'd king, who shows but half his face,
And his refulgent queen. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

3. Hastily; with speed: spoken of any kind of progression, from one state to another.

This second course of men,
With some regard to what is just and right,
Shall lead their lives, and multiply apace. Milton.

The life and power of religion decays apace here and at home, while we are spreading the honour of our arms far and wide through foreign nations. Atterbury

If sensible pleasure, or real grandeur, be our end, we shall proceed apace to real misery. Watts

APAGO'GICAL. adj. [from ἀπαγωγὴ, compounded of ἀπὸ from, and ἄγω to bring or draw.] An apagogical demonstration is such, as does not prove the thing directly; but shews the impossibility or absurdity, which arises from denying it; and is also called reductio ad impossibile, or ad absurdum. Chambers.

APA'RT. adv. [apart, Fr.]

1. Separately from the rest, in place.

Since I enter into that question, it behoveth me, to give reason for my opinion, with circumspection; because I walk aside, and in a way apart from the multitude. Raleigh.

The party discerned, that the earl of Essex would never serve their turn: they resolved, to have another army apart, that should be at their devotion. Clarendon.

2. In a state of distinction; as, to set apart for any use.

He is so very figurative, that he requires a grammar apart, to construe him. Dryden.

The tyrant shall demand you sacred load,
And gold and vessels, set apart for God. Prior.

3. Distinctly.

Moses first nameth heaven and earth, putting waters but in the third place, as comprehending waters in the word earth; but afterwards he nameth them apart. Raleigh.

4. At a distance; retired from the other company.

So please you, madam,
To put apart these your attendants. Shakesp.

APA'RTMENT. n. s. [appartement, Fr.] A part of the house, allotted to the use of any particular person; a room; a set of rooms.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known. Sir J. Denham.

He, pale as death, despoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryd.

The most considerable ruin is that on the east-earn promontory, where are still some apartments left, very high, and arched at top. Addison.

A'PATHY. n. s. [a not, and πάθος feeling.] The quality of not feeling; exemption from passion; freedom from mental perturbation.

Of good and evil much they argued then,
Passion and apathy, glory, and shame. Milton.

To remain insensible of such provocation, is not constancy, but apathy. South.

In lazy apathy let Stoicks boast
Their virtue fix'd; 'tis fix'd as in frost,
Contracted all, retiring to the breast;
But strength of mind is exercise, not rest. Pope.

APE. n. s. [ape, Icelandish.]

1. A kind of monkey, remarkable for imitating what he sees.

I will be more newfangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires, than a monkey. Shakesp.

Writers report, that the heart of an ape, worn near the heart, comforteth the heart, and increaseth audacity. It is true, that the ape is a merry and bold beast. Bacon.

With glittering gold and sparkling gems they shine;
But apes and monkeys are the gods within.
Granville.

Celestial Beings, when of late they saw
A mortal man unfold all Nature's law,
Admir'd such knowledge in a human shape,
And show'd a Newton, as we show an ape. Pope.

2. An imitator; used generally in the bad sense.

Julio Romano, who, had he himself eternity, and could put breath into his work, would beguile Nature of her custom, so perfectly is he her ape.
Shakesp.

To APE. v. a. [from ape.] To imitate, as an ape imitates human actions.

Aping the foreigners in every dress;
Which, bought at greater cost, becomes him less.
Dryden.

Curse on the stripling! how he apes his sire!
Ambitiously sententious! Addison.

A'PHORISM. n. s. [ἀφορισμὸς.] A maxim; a precept, contracted in a short sentence; an unconnected position.

He will easily discern, how little of truth there is in the multitude; and, though sometimes they are flattered with that aphorism, will hardly believe the voice of the people to be the voice of God. Brown's Vul. Errours.

I shall at present consider the aphorism, that a man of religion and virtue is a more useful, and consequently a more valuable, member of a community. Rogers.

APHORI'STICAL. adj. [from aphorism.] In the form of an aphorism; in separate and unconnected sentences.

APHORI'STICALLY. adv. [from aphoristical.] In the form of an aphorism.

These, being carried down, seldom miss a cure; as Hippocrates doth likeways aphoristically tell us. Harvey.

APHRODISI'ACAL. } adj. [from Ἀφροδίτη,
APHRODISI'ACK. } Venus.] Relating to the venereal disease.

A'PIARY. n. s. [from apis, Lat. a bee.] The place where bees are kept.

Those, who are skilled in bees, when they see a foreign swarm approaching to plunder their hives, have a trick to divert them into some neighbouring apiary, there to make what havock they please. Swift.

A'PICES, of a flower. [Lat. from apex, the top.] Little knobs that grow on the tops of the stamina, in the middle of a flower: they are commonly of a dark purplish colour. By the microscope they have been discovered to be a sort of capsulæ seminales, or seed vessels; containing in them small globular (and often oval) particles, of various colours, and exquisitely formed. Quincy.

API'ECE. adv. [from a for each, and piece or share.] To the part or share of each.

Men, in whose mouths at first sounded nothing but mortification, were come to think that they might lawfully have six or seven wives apiece. Hooker

I have to-night dispatched sixteen businesses, a month's length apiece, by an abstract of success. Shakesp.

One copy of this paper may serve a dozen of you, which will be less than a farthing apiece Swift.

A'PISH. adj. [from ape.]

1. Having the qualities of an ape; imitative.

Report of fashions in proud Italy;
Whose manners still our tardy apish nation
Limps after, in base aukward imitation. Shakesp.

2. Foppish; affected.

Because I cannot flatter and look fair,
Duck with French nods and apish courtesy;
I must be held a rancorous enemy. Shakespeare.

3. Silly; trifling; insignificant.

All this is but apish sophistry; and to give it a name divine and excellent is abusive and unjust. Glanville.

4. Wanton; playful.

Gloomy sits the queen,
Till happy chance reverts the cruel scene;
And apish folly, with her wild resort
Of wit and jest, disturbs the solemn court. Prior.

A'PISHLY. n. s. [from apish.] In an apish manner; foppishly; conceitedly.

A'PISHNESS. n. s. [from apish.] Mimickry; foppery; insignificance; playfulness.

API'TPAT. adv. [a word formed from the motion.] With quick palpitation.

O, there he comes.—Welcome, my bully, my back! Agad, my heart has gone apitpat for you. Congreve.

APLUSTRE. n. s. [Lat.] The ancient ensign, carried in sea vessels.

The one holds a sword in her hand, to represent the Iliad; as the other has an aplustre, to represent the Odyssey, or voyage of Ulysses. Addison.

APO'CALYPSE. n. s. [from ἀποκαλύπτω] Revelation; discovery: a word, used only of the sacred writings.

O, for that warning voice, which he, who saw
Th' apocalypse, heard cry in heav'n aloud. Milton.

With this throne, of the glory of the Father, compare the throne of the Son of God, as seen in the apocalypse. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

APOCALY'PTICAL. adj. [from apocalypse.] Concerning revelation; containing revelation.

If we could understand that scene, at the opening of this apocalyptical theatre, we should find it a representation of the majesty of our Saviour. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

APOCALY'PTICALLY. adv. [from apocalyptical.] In such a manner, as to reveal something secret.

APO'COPE. n. s. [ἀποκοπὴ.] A figure in grammar, when the last letter or syllable of a word is taken away; as, ingeni, for ingenii; apoplex, for apoplexy.

APOCRU'STICK. adj. ἀποκρύστικα, from ἀποκρούω to drive away.] Remedies, endued with a repelling and astringent power, by which they prevent the too great afflux of humours. Chambers.

APO'CRYPHA. n. s. [from ἀποκρύπτω to put out of sight.] Books, not publickly communicated; books, whose authors are not known. It is used for the books, appended to the sacred writings; which, being of doubtful authors, are less regarded.

We hold not the apocrypha for sacred, as we do the holy scripture; but, for human compositions. Hooker.

APO'CRYPHAL. adj. [from apocrypha.]

1. Not canonical; of uncertain authority.

Jerom (who saith that, all writings not canonical, are apocryphal) uses not the title apocryphal, as the rest of the fathers ordinarily have done; whose custom is, so to name (for the most part) only such, as might not publickly be read or divulged. Hooker.

2. Contained in the apocrypha.

To speak of her in the words of the apocryphal writers; wisdom is glorious, and never fadeth away. Addison.

3. It is sometimes used, for an account of uncertain credit

APO'CRYPHALLY. adv. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainly; not indisputably.

APO'CRYPHALNESS. n. s. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainty; doubtfulness of credit.

APODI'CTICAL. adj. [from ἀπόδειξις evident truth; demonstration.] Demonstrative; evident, beyond contradiction.

Holding an apoductical knowledge, and an assured knowledge of it; verily, to persuade their apprehensions otherwise, were to make an Euclid believe, that there were more than one centre in a circle. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

'We can say all, at the number three; therefore the world is perfect.' 'Tobit went, and his dog followed him; therefore there is a world in the moon,' were an argument as apoductical. Glanville.

APODI'XIS. n. s. [ἀπόδειξις.] Demonstration. Dict.

APOGÆ'ON. } n. s. [from ἀπὸ from,
A'POGEE. } and γὴ the earth.] A
APOGE'UM. } point in the heavens, in which the sun, or a planet, is at the greatest distance possible from the earth in its whole revolution. The antient astronomers, regarding the earth as the centre of the system, chiefly regarded the apogæon and perigæon; which the moderns, making the sun the centre, change for the aphelion and perihelion. Chambers.

Thy sin is in his apogæon placed;
And when it moveth next, must needs descend. Fairfax.

APOLOGE'TICAL. } adj. [from ἀπολογία
APOLOGE'TICK. } to defend.] That, which is said in defence of any thing or person.

I design to publish an essay, the greater part of which is apologetical, for one sort of chymists. Boyle.

APOLOGE'TICALLY. adj. [from apologetical.] In the way of defence or excuse.

APO'LOGIST. n. s. [from To apologize.] He, that makes an apology; a pleader in favour of another.

To APO'LOGIZE. n. s. [from apology.]

1. To plead in favour of any person or thing.

It will be much more seasonable, to reform, than apologize or rhetoricate; and therefore it imports those, who dwell secure, to look about them. Decay of Piety.

2. It has the particle for, before the subject of apology.

I ought to apologize, for my indiscretion in the whole undertaking. Wake's Prepar. for Death.

The translator needs not apologize, for his choice of this piece, which was made in his childhood. Pope's Preface to Statius.

A'POLOGUE. n. s. [ἀπόλογος.] Fable; story contrived to teach some moral truth.

An apologue of Æsop is beyond a syllogism; and proverbs more powerful than demonstration. Brown's Vulg. Errours

Some men are remarked for pleasantness in raillery; others for apologues and apposite diverting stories. Locke

APO'LOGY. n. s. [apologia, Lat ἀπολογία.]

1. Defence; excuse. Apology generally signifies, rather excuse, than vindication; and tends, rather to extenuate the fault, than prove innocence. This is, however, sometimes unregarded by writers.

In her face excuse
Came prologue, and apology too prompt;
Which, with bland words at will, she thus address'd. Milton.

2. It has for, before the object of excuse.

It is not my intention, to make an apology for my poem: some will think, it needs no excuse; and others will receive none. Dryden

I shall neither trouble the reader nor myself, with any apology for publishing of these sermons: for, if they be (in any measure) truly serviceable to the end, for which they are designed, I do not see what apology is necessary; and, if they be not so, I am sure none can be sufficient. Tillotson.

APOMECO'METRY. n. s. [ἀπὸ from, μῆκος distance, and μέτρεω to measure.] The art of measuring things at a distance. Dict.

APONEURO'SIS n. s. [from ἀπὸ from, and νεῦρον a nerve.] An expansion of a nerve into a membrane.

When a cyst rises near the orifice of the artery, it is formed by the aponeurosis that runs over the vessel, which becomes excessively expanded. Sharp's Surgery.

APOPHASIS. n. s. [Lat. ἀπόφασις a denying.] A figure in rhetorick; by which the orator, speaking ironically, seems to wave, what he would plainly insinuate; as, Neither will I mention those things, which if I should, you notwithstanding could neither confute or speak against them. Smith's Rhetorick.

APOPHLEGMATICK. n. s. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] That, which has the quality of drawing away phlegm.

APOPHLE'GMATISM. n. s. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] A medicine, of which the intention is, to draw phlegm from the blood.

And so it is in apophlegmatisms and gargarisms, that draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacon.

APOPHLEGMA'TIZANT. n. s. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] Any remedy, which causes an evacuation of serous or mucous humour by the nostrils, as particular kinds of sternutatories. Quincy.

A'POPHTHEGM. n. s. [ἀπόφθεγμα.] A remarkable saying; a valuable maxim, uttered on some sudden occasion.

We may magnify the apophthegms, or reputed replies of wisdom, whereof many are to be seen in Laertius and Lycosthenes. Brown's Vulg Err.

I had a mind, to collect and digest such observations and apophthegms, as tend to the proof of that great assertion, 'All is vanity.' Prior.

APOPHYGE. n. s. [ἀποφυγὴ flight or escape.] Is, in architecture, that part of a column, where it begins to spring out of its base; and was originally no more, than the ring or ferrel, which anciently bound the extremities of wooden pillars, to keep them from splitting, and were afterwards imitated in stone work. We sometimes call it the spring of the column. Chambers.

APOPHYSIS. n. s. [ἀπόφυσις.] The prominent parts of some bones; the same as process. It differs from an epiphysis, as it is a continuance of the bone itself; whereas the latter is somewhat adhering to a bone, and of which it is not properly a part Quincy.

It is the apophysis (or head) of the os tibiæ, which makes the knee. Wiseman's Surgery

APOPLE'CTICAL. adj. [from apoplexy.] Relating to an apoplexy.

We meet with the same complaints of gravity in living bodies, when the faculty locomotive seems abolished; as may be observed in supporting persons inebriated, apoplectical, or in lipothymies and swoonings. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

In an apoplectical case, he found extravasated blood, making way from the ventricles of the brain. Derham.

APOPLE'CTICK. adj. [from apoplexy.] Relating to an apoplexy.

A lady was seized with an apoplectick fit, which afterwards terminated in some kind of lethargy. Wiseman.

A'POPLEX. n. s. [See APOPLEXY.] Apoplexy. The last syllable is cut away; but this is only in poetry.

Present punishment pursues his maw;
When, surfeited and swell'd, the peacock raw
He bears into the bath; whence want of breath,
Repletions, apoplex, intestate death. Dryden.

A'POPLEXED. adj. [from apoplex.] Seized with apoplexy.

Sense (sure) you have,
Else could you not have motion: but (sure) that sense
Is apoplexed. Shakespeare.

A'POPLEXY. n. s. [ἀποπληξις.] A sudden deprivation of all internal and external sensation, and of all motion, unless of the heart and thorax. The cause is generally a repletion; and indicates evacuation, joined with stimuli. Quincy.

Apoplexy is a sudden abolition of all the senses, external and internal, and of all voluntary motion, by the stoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal spirits through the nerves, destined for those motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Peace is a very apoplexy; lethargy, mufled, deaf, sleepy, insensible. Shakesp. Coriolanus

A fever may take away my reason or memory, and an apoplexy leave neither sense nor understanding. Locke.

APORIA. n. s. [ἀπορία.] Is a figure in rhetorick; by which the speaker shews, that he doubts, where to begin for the multitude of matter; or what to say, in some strange and ambiguous thing; and doth, as it were, argue the case with himself. Thus Cicero says, Whether he took them from his fellows more impudently, gave them to a harlot more lasciviously, removed them from the Roman people more wickedly, or altered them more presumptuously, I cannot well declare. Smith's Rhetorick.

APORRHOEA. n. s. [ἀπορρόη.] Effluvium; emanation; something emitted by another: not in use.

The reason of this he endeavours to make out, by atomical aporrhœas; which, passing from the cruentate weapon to the wound, and being incorporated with the particles of the salve, carry them to the affected part. Glanville's Scepsis.

APOSIOPE'SIS. n. s. [ἀποσιώπησις, from ἀπὸ after, and σιωπάω to be silent.] A form of speech, by which the speaker, through some affection (as sorrow, bashfulness, fear, anger) or vehemency, breaks off his speech before it be all ended. A figure, when, speaking of a thing, we yet seem to conceal it, though indeed we aggravate it; or when the course of the sentence begun is so stayed, as thereby some part of the sentence, not being uttered, may be understood. Smith's Rhetorick.

APO'STASY. n. s. [ἀπόστασις.] Departure from what a man has professed: it is generally applied to religion; sometimes with the particle from.

The canon law defines apostasy to be a wilful departure from that state of faith, which any person has professed himself to hold in the Christian church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The affable archangel had forewarn'd
Adam, by due example, to beware
Apostasy; by what befel in heav'n,
To those apostates. Milton.

Vice in us were not only wickedness, but apostasy, degenerate wickedness. Sprat.

Whoever do give different worships, must bring in more gods; which is an apostasy from one God. Stillingfleet.

APO'STATE, n. s. [apostata, Lat. ἀποστάτης.] One, that has forsaken his profession; generally applied to one, that has left his religion.

The angels, for disobedience, thou hast reserved to a miserable immortality; but, un o man, equally rebellious, equally apostate from thee and goodness, thou hast given a Saviour. Roger's Sermons.

Apostates in point of faith are, according to the civil law, subject unto all punishments ordained against hereticks. Ayliffe.

APOSTA'TICAL. adj. [from apostate.] After the manner of an apostate.

To wear turbants, is an apostatical conformity. Sandys.

To APO'STATIZE. v. n. [from apostate.] To forsake one's profession: it is commonly used of one who departs from his religion.

None revolt from the faith, because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her; but, because they are restrained, from the perpetration of their lusts. If wanton glances and libidinous thoughts had been permitted by the gospel, they would have apostatised nevertheless. Bentley.

To APO'STEMATE. v. n. [from aposteme.] To become an aposteme; to swell and corrupt into matter.

There is care to be taken in abscesses of the breast and belly, in danger of breaking inwards; yet, by opening these too soon, they sometimes apostemate again, and become crude. Wiseman.

APOSTE'MATION. n. s. [from apostemate.] The formation of an aposteme; the gathering of a hollow purulent tumour.

Nothing can be more admirable, than the many ways nature hath provided for preventing or curing of fevers; as, vomitings, apostemations, salivations, &c. Grew.

A'POSTEME. } n. s. [ἀπόστημα.] A hollow
A'POSTUME. } swelling, filled with purulent matter; an abscess.

With equal propriety we may affirm, that ulcers of the lungs, or apostemes of the brain, do happen only in the left side. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The opening of apostemes, before the suppuration be perfected, weakeneth the heat, and renders them crude. Wiseman.

APO'STLE. n. s. [apostolus, Lat. ἀπόστολος.] A person, sent with mandates by another. It is particularly applied to them, whom our Saviour deputed to preach the gospel.

But all his mind is bent to holiness;
His champions are the prophets and apostles.
Shakesp.

I am far from pretending infallibility; that would be, to erect myself into an apostle: a presumption in any one, that cannot confirm what he says by miracles. Locke.

We know but a small part of the notion of an apostle, by knowing barely that he is sent forth. Watts's Logick.

APO'STLESHIP. n. s. [from apostle.] The office or dignity of an apostle.

Where, because faith is in too low degree,
I thought it some apostleship in me,
To speak things, which by faith alone I see.
Donne.

God hath ordered it, that St. Paul hath writ epistles; which are all confined within the business of his apostleship, and so contain nothing but points of Christian instruction. Locke.

APOSTO'LICAL. adj. [from apostolick.] Delivered or taught by the apostles; belonging to the apostles.

They acknowledge not, that the church keeps any thing as apostolical, which is not found in the apostle's writings, in what other records soever it be found. Hooker.

Declare yourself for that church, which is founded upon scripture, reason, apostolical practice, and antiquity. Hooker.

APOSTO'LICALLY. adv. [from apostolical.] In the manner of the apostles.

APOSTO'LICALNESS. n. s. [from apostolical.] The quality of relating to the apostles; apostolical authority.

APOSTO'LICK. adj. [from apostle. The accent is placed by Dryden on the antipenult.] Taught by the apostles; belonging to an apostle.

Their oppositions, in maintenance of publick superstition against apostolick endeavours, were vain and frivolous. Hooker.

Or where did I at sure tradition strike,
Provided still it were apostolick? Dryden.

APO'STROPHE. n. s. [ἀποστροφὴ, from ἀπὸ from, and στρέφω to turn.]

1. In rhetorick; a diversion of speech to another person, than the speech appointed did intend or require; or, it is a turning of the speech, from one person to another, many times abruptly. A figure, when we break off the course of our speech, and speak to some new person, present or absent; as, to the people or witnesses, when it was before directed to the judges or opponent. Smith's Rhetorick.

2. In grammar; the contraction of a word, by the use of a comma; as, tho', for though; rep', for reputation.

Many laudable attempts have been made, by abbreviating words with apostrophes; and by lopping polysyllables, leaving one or two syllables at most. Swift.

To APO'STROPHIZE. v. n. [from apostrophe.] To address by an apostrophe.

There is a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apostrophizing Eumæus, and speaking of him in the second person: it is generally applied only to men of account. Pope.

A'POSTUME. n. s. See APOSTEME. [This word is properly aposteme.] A hollow tumour, filled with purulent matter.

How an apostume in the mesentery, breaking, causes a consumption in the parts is apparent. Harvey.

To A'POSTUME. v. n. [from apostume.] To apostemate. Dict.

APO'THECARY. n. s. [apotheca, Lat. a repository.] A man, whose employment is to keep medicines for sale.

Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination. Shakesp. King Lear.

They have no other doctor, but the sun and the fresh air; and that, such an one, as never sends them to the apothecary. South.

Wand'ring in the dark,
Physicians, for the tree, have found the bark;
They, lab'ring for relief of human kind,
With sharpen'd sight some remedies may find;
Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind. Dryden.

A'POTHEGM. n. s. [properly apophthegm; which see.] A remarkable saying.

By frequent conversing with him, and scattering short apothegms and little pleasant stories, and making useful applications of them, his son was in his infancy taught, to abhor vanity and vice as monsters. Walton's Life of Sanderson.

APOTHE'OSIS. n. s. [ἀποθέωσις.] Deification; the rite of adding any one to the number of gods.

As if it could be graved and painted omnipotent, or the nails and the hammer could give it an apotheosis. South.

Allots the prince of his celestial line,
An apotheosis, and rites divine. Garth.

APO'TOME. n. s. [from ἀποτέμνω, to cut off.]

1. In mathematicks, the remainder or difference of two incommensurable quantities.

2. In musick, it is the part remaining of an entire tone, after a greater semitone has been taken from it. The proportion (in numbers) of the apotome, is that of 2048 to 2187. The Greeks thought that, the greater tone could not be divided into two equal parts; for which reason, they called the first part ἀπότομη, and the other λῆμμα. Chambers.

A'POZEM. n. s. [ἀπὸ from, ζέω to boil.] A decoction; an infusion, made by boiling ingredients.

During this evacuation, he took opening broths and apozems. Wiseman's Surgery.

And Squirts read Garth till apozems grow cold.
Gay.

To APPA'L. v. a. [appalir, Fr. It might more properly have been written appale.] To fright; to strike with sudden fear; to depress; to discourage.

Whilst she spake, her great words did appal
My feeble courage, and my heart oppress,
That yet I quake and tremble over all. Fairy Q.

Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax; that th' appalled air
May pierce the head of thy great combatant.
Shakespeare.

The house of peers was somewhat appalled, at this alarum; but took time to consider of it, till next day. Clarendon.

Does neither rage inflame, nor fear appal,
Nor the black fear of death, that saddens all? Pope.

The monster curls
His flaming crest, all other thirst appall'd:
Or shiv'ring flies, or choak'd at distance stands.
Thomson.

APPA'LEMENT. n. s. [from appal.] Depression; discouragement; impression of fear.

As the furious slaughter of them was a great discouragement and appalement to the rest.
Bacon's Henry VII.

A'PPANAGE. n. s. [appanagium, low Latin; probably from panis, bread.] Lands set apart by princes for the maintenance of their younger children.

He became suitor for the earldom of Chester, a kind of appanage to Wales, and using to go to the king's son. Bacon.

Had he thought it fit,
That wealth should be the appanage of wit;
The God of light could ne'er have been so blind,
To deal it to the worst of human kind. Swift.

APPARA'TUS. n. s. [Latin.] Things provided, as means to any certain end; as, the tools of a trade, the furniture of a house, ammunition for war; epuipage; show.

There is an apparatus of things previous to be adjusted, before I come to the calculation itself.
Woodward.

Ourselves are easily provided for; it is nothing, but the circumstantials (the apparatus or equipage) of human life, that costs so much.
Pope's Letters to Gay.

APPA'REL. n. s. It has no plural. [appareil, Fr.]

1. Dress; vesture.

I cannot cog and say, that thou art this and that, like many of those lisping hawthorn buds, that come like women in men's apparel, and smell like Bucklersbury in simpling time.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. External habiliments.

Our late burnt London, in apparel new,
Shook off her ashes, to have treated you. Waller.

At public devotion, his resigned carriage made religion appear in the natural apparel of simplicity.
Tatler.

To APPA'REL. v. a. [from apparel, the noun.]

1. To dress; to clothe.

With such robes were the king's daughters, that were virgins, apparelled. 2 Sam. xiii. 18.

Both combatants were apparelled only in their doublets and hose. Hayward.

2. To adorn with dress.

She did apparel her apparel: and, with the preciousness of her body, made it most sumptuous.
Sidney.

3. To cover, or deck, as with dress.

You may have trees apparelled with flowers, by boring holes in them, and putting into them earth, and setting seeds of violets. Bacon.

Shelves, and rocks, and precipices, and gulfs, being apparelled with a verdure of plants, would resemble mountains and valleys. Bentley's Serm.

. To fit out; to furnish: not in use.

It hath been agreed, that either of them should send ships to sea, well manned and apparelled to fight. Sir J. Hayward.

APPA'RENT. adj. [apparent, Fr. apparens, Lat.]

1. Plain; indubitable; not doubtful.

The main principles of reason are in themselves apparent. For, to make nothing evident of itself unto man's understanding, were to take away all possibility of knowing any thing. Hooker.

2 Seeming; in appearance; not real.

The perception intellective often corrects the report of phantasy; as, in the apparent bigness of the sun, in the apparent crookedness of the staff in air and water. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Visible; in opposition to secret.

What secret imaginations we entertained, is known to God: this is apparent, that we have not behaved ourselves, as if we preserved a grateful remembrance of his mercies. Atterbury.

The outward and apparent sanctity of actions should flow from purity of heart. Rogers.

4. Open; evident; known; not merely suspected.

As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
In my opinion ought to be prevented.
Shakesp. Rich. III.

5. Certain; not presumptive.

He is the next of blood,
And heir apparent to the English crown.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

APPA'RENT. n. s. Elliptically used for heir apparent.

Draw thy sword in right.——
——I'll draw it, as apparent to the crown;
And in that quarrel use it. Shakesp. Henry VI

APPA'RENTLY. [from apparent.] Evidently; openly.

Arrest him, officer;
I would not spare my brother in this case,
If he should scorn me so apparently.
Shakesp. Comedy of Errours.

Vices apparently tend to the impairing of men's health. Tillotson.

APPARI'TION. n. s. [from appareo, Lat. to appear.]

1. Appearance; visibility.

When suddenly stood at my head a dream,
Whose inward apparition gently mov'd
My fancy. Milton.

My retirement tempted me to divert those melancholy thoughts, which the new apparitions of foreign invasion and domestic discontent gave us. Denham.

2. The thing appearing; a form; a visible object.

I have mark'd
A thousand blushing apparitions
To start into her face; a thousand innocent shames
In angel whiteness bear away those blushes. Shak.

A glorious apparition had (no doubt)
And carnal fear, that day, dimm'd Adam's eyes.
Milton.

Any thing besides may take from me the sense, of what appeared; which apparition, it seems, was you. Tatler.

3. A spectre; a walking spirit.

Horatio says, 'tis but our phantasy,
Touching this dreaded sight twice seen of us:
Therefore I have intreated him,
That, if again this apparition come,
He may approve our eyes, and speak to it.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

Tender minds should not receive early impressions of goblins, spectres, and apparitions, wherewith maids fright them into compliance. Locke.

One of those apparitions had his right hand filled with darts; which he brandished in the face of all who came up that way. Tatler.

4. Something only apparent; not real.

Still there's something,
That checks my joys:——
——Nor can I yet distinguish,
Which is an apparition, this or that. Den. Sophy.

5. Astronomically, the visibility of some luminary; opposed to occultation.

A month of apparition is the space, wherein the moon appeareth; deducting three days, wherein it commonly disappeareth: and this containeth but twenty-six days and twelve hours.
Brown's Vulg. Errours.

APPA'RITOR. n. s. [from appareo, Lat. to be at hand.]

1. Such persons as are at hand, to execute the proper orders of the magistrate or judge of any court of judicature. Ayliffe.

2. The lowest officer of the ecclesiastical court; a summoner.

They swallowed all the Roman hierarchy, from the pope to the apparitor. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To APPA'Y. v. a. [appayer, old Fr. to satisfy.]

1. To satisfy; to content; whence well appayed, is pleased; ill appayed, is uneasy. It is now obsolete.

How well appaid she was, her bird to find!
Sidney.

I am well appaid, that you had rather believe, than take the pain of a long pilgrimage. Camden.

So only can high justice rest appaid. Milton.

2. The sense is obscure, in these lines:

Ay, Willy, when the heart is ill assay'd,
How can bagpipe or joints be well appaid? Spenser.

To APPE'ACH. v. a.

1. To accuse; to inform against any person.

He did, amongst many others, appeach Sir William Stanley, the lord chamberlain. Bac. Hen. VII.

Were he twenty times
My son, I would appeach him. Shakesp Rich. II.

Disclose
The state of your affection; for your passions
Have to the full appeached. Shakesp

2. To censure; to reproach; to taint with accusation.

For, when Cymocles saw the foul reproach,
Which them appeached; prick'd with guilty shame
And inward grief, he fiercely gen approach,
Resolv'd to put away that lordly shame. FairyQ.

Nor canst, nor durst thou, traitor, on thy pain,
Appeach my honour, or thine own maintain. Dryd.

APPE'ACHMENT. n. s. [from appeach.] Charge, exhibited against any man; accusation.

A busy-headed man gave first light to this appeachment; but the earl did avouch it. Hayward.

The duke's answers to his appeachments, in number thirteen, I find civilly couched. Wotton.

To APPE'AL. v. n. [appello, Lat.]

1. To transfer a cause from one to another; with the particles to and from.

From the ordinary therefore they appeal to themselves. Hooker.

2. To refer to another, as judge.

Force, or a declared sign of force, upon the person of another, where there is no common superior on earth to appeal to for relief, is the state of war; and it is the want of such an appeal gives a man the right of war, even against an aggressor, though he be in society, and a fellow subject. Locke.

They knew no foe, but in the open field;
And to their cause, and to the gods appeal'd.
Stepney.

3. To call another, as witness.

Whether this, that the soul always thinks, be a self-evident proposition, I appeal to mankind.
Locke.

4. To charge with a crime; to accuse: a term of law.

One but flatters us,
As well appeareth by the cause you come;
Namely, t' appeal each other of high treason.
Shakespeare.

APPE'AL. n. s. [from the verb To appeal.]

1. An appeal is a provocation, from an inferior to a superior judge; whereby the jurisdiction of the inferior judge is for a while suspended, in respect of the cause; the cognizance being devolved to the superior judge. Ayliffe's Parerg.

This ring
Deliver them; and your appeal to us,
There make before them. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Our reason prompts us to a future state,
The last appeal from fortune and from fate,
Where God's all-righteous ways will be declar'd.
Dryden.

There are distributors of justice, from whom there lies an appeal to the prince. Addison.

2. In the common law.

An accusation; which is a lawful declaration of another man's crime before a competent judge, by one that sets his name to the declaration, and undertakes to prove it, upon the penalty that may ensue of the contrary: more commonly used for the private accusation of a murderer, by a party who had interest in the party murdered; and of any felon, by one of his accomplices in the fact.
Cowell.

The duke's unjust,
Thus to retort your manifest appeal,
And put your trial in the villain's mouth,
Which here you come to accuse. Shakesp.

Hast thou, according to thy oath and bond,
Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bold son;
Here to make good the boist'rous late appeal,
Against the duke of Norfolk? Shakesp.

3. A summons, to answer a charge.

Nor shall the sacred character of king
Be urg'd, to shield me from thy bold appeal:
If I have injur'd thee, that makes us equal. Dryd.

4. A call upon any as witness.

The casting up of the eyes and lifting up of the hands is a kind of appeal to the Deity, the author of wonders. Bacon.

APPE'ALANT. n. s. [from appeal.] He that appeals.

Lords appealants,
Your differences shall all rest under gage,
Till we assign you to your days of trial. Shakesp.

APPE'ALER. n. s. [from appeal.] One, who makes an appeal.

2. The thing seen; as the remarkable appearances in the sky.
3. A phœnomenon; that quality of any thing, which is visible.
The advancing day of experimental knowledge discloseth such appearances, as will not lie even in any model extant. Glanville's Scepsis.
4. Semblance; not reality.
He encreased in estimation, whether by destiny, or whether by his virtues, or at least by his appearances of virtues. Hayward.
Heroic virtue did his actions guide;
And he the substance, not th' appearance, chose. Dryden.
The hypocrite would not put on the appearance of virtue, if it was not the most proper means to gain love. Addison.
5. Outside show.
Under a fair and beautiful appearance, there should ever be the real substance of good. Rogers.
6. Entry into a place or company.
Do the same justice to one another, which will be done us hereafter by those, who shall make their appearance in the world, when this generation is no more. Addison.
7. Apparition; supernatural visibility.
I think a person, terrified with the imagination of spectres, more reasonable than one, who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous. Addison
8. Exhibition of the person to a court.
I will not tarry; no, nor ever more
Upon this business my appearance make,
In any of their courts. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
9. Open circumstance of a case.
Or grant her passion be sincere,
How shall his innocence be clear?
Appearances were all so strong,
The world must think him in the wrong. Swift.
10. Presence; mien.
Health, wealth, victory, and honour, are introduced; wisdom enters the last, and so captivates with her appearance, that he gives himself up to her. Addison.
11. Probability; seeming; likelihood.
There is that, which hath no appearance, that this priest, being utterly unacquainted with the true person, according to whose pattern he should shape his counterfeit, should think it possible for him to instruct his player. Bacon

APPE'ARER. n. s. [from To appear.] The person, that appears.
That owls and ravens are ominous appearers, and presignify unlucky events, was an augurial conception. Brown

APPEA'SABLE. adj. [from To appease.] That may be pacified; reconcileable.

APPE'ASEABLENESS. n. s. [from To appease.] The quality, of being easily appeased; reconcileableness.

To APPE'ASE. v. a. [appaiser, Fr.]
1. To quiet; to put in a state of peace.
By his council he appeaseth the deep, and planteth islands therein. Eccles. xliii 23.
England had no leisure, to think of reformation; till the civil wars were appeased, and peace settled. Davies on Ireland.
2. To pacify; to reconcile; to still wrath.
So Simon was appeased towards them, and fought no more against them. 1 Mac. xiii 17.
O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee, yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Shakesp. Rich. III.
The rest shall hear me call, and oft be warn'd
Their sinful state, and to appease betimes
Th' incensed Deity. Milton.
3. To still; to quiet.
The rest
They cut, in legs and fillets for the feast;
Which drawn and serv'd, their hunger they appease. Dryden.

APPE'ASEMENT. n. s [from To appease.] A state of peace.
Being neither in numbers nor in courage great, partly by authority, partly by entreaty, they were reduced to some good appeasements. Hayward.

APPE'ASER. n. s. [from To appease.] He, that pacifies others; he, that quiets disturbances.

APPE'LLANT. n. s. [appello, Lat. to call.]
1. A challenger; one, that summons another to answer, either in the lists or in the court of justice.
In the devotion of a subject's love,
And free from other misbegotten hate,
Come I appellant to this princely presence. Shak.
This is the day, appointed for the combat;
And ready are th' appellant and defendant,
Th' armourer and his man, to enter the lists. Shakespeare.
These shifts refuted, answer thy appellant,
Though by his blindness maim'd for high attempts,
Who now defies thee thrice to single fight. Milton.
2. One, that appeals, from a lower to a higher power.
An appeal transfers the cognizance of the cause, to the superior judge; so that, pending the appeal, nothing can be attempted in prejudice of the appellant. Ayliffe's Parergon.

APPE'LLATE. n. s. [appellatus, Lat.] The person appealed against.
An appellatory libel ought to contain the name of the party appellant; the name of him, from whose sentence it is appealed; the name of him, to whom it is appealed; from what sentence it is appealed; the day of the sentence pronounced, and appeal interposed; and the name of the party appellate, or person against whom the appeal is lodged. Ayliffe's Parergon

APPELLA'TION. n. s. [appellatio, Lat.] Name; word, by which any thing is called.
Nor are always the same plants delivered under the same name and apellation. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
Good and evil commonly operate upon the mind of man, by respective names or appellatums, by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind. South.

APPE'LLATIVE. n. s. [appellativum, Lat.]
Words and names are either common or proper. Common names are such, as stand for universal ideas, or a whole rank of beings, whether general or special; these are called appellatives: so, fish, bird, man, city, river, are common names; and so are trout, eel, lobster; for they all agree to many individuals, and some to many species. Watts's Logick

APPE'LLATIVELY. adv. [from appellative.] According to the manner of nouns appellative; as, this man is a Hercules. Hercules is used appellatively, to signify a strong man.

APPE'LLATORY. adj. [from appeal.] That, which contains an appeal. See APPELLATE.

APPE'LLEE. n. s. [from appeal] One, who is appealed against, and accused.

To APPEND. v. a. [appendo, Lat. to hang to any thing.]
1. To hang any thing, upon another; as, 'the inscription was appended to the 'column; the seal is appended to the 'record.'
2. To add to something, as an accessory, not a principal part.

APP'ENDAGE. n. s. [French.] Something added to another thing, without being necessary to its essence; as, a portico, to the house.
Modesty is the appendage of sobriety; and is to chastity, to temperance, and to humility, as the fringes are to a garment. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
None of the laws of motion (now established) will serve, to account for the production, motion, or number of bodies, nor their appendages; though they may help us a little, to conceive their appearances. Cheyne.
He was so far, from over-valuing any of the appendages of life, that the thoughts of life did not affect him. Atterbury.

APPE'NDANT. adj. [French.]
1. Hanging to something else.
2. Belonging to; annexed; concomitant.
He that despises the world and all it appendant vanities is the most secure. Taylor.
He that looks for the blessings appendant to the sacrament, must expect them upon no terms, but of a worthy communion. Taylor.
Riches, multiplied beyond the proportion of our character, and the wants appendant to it, naturally dispose men to forget God. Rogers.
3. In law.
Appendant is any thing, belonging to another; as accessorium principali, with the civilians; or adjunctum subjecto, with the logicians. An hospital may be appendant to a manour; a common or fishing, appendant to a freehold. Cowell.

APPE'NDANT. n. s. That, which belongs to another thing, as an accidental or adventitious part.
Pliny gives an account of the inventors of the forms and appendants of shipping. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
A word, a look, a tread, will strike, as they are appendants to external symmetry, or indications of the beauty of the mind. Grew.

To APPE'NDICATE. v. a. [appendo, Lat.] To add to another thing.
In a palace, there is the case or fabrick of the structure, and there are certain additaments; as, various furniture, and curious motions of divers things appendicated to it. Hale.

APPENDICA'TION. n. s. [from appendicate.] Adjunct; appendage; annexion.
There are considerable parts and integrals, and appendications unto the mundus aspectabilis, impossible to be eternal. Hale.

APPE'NDIX. n. s. [appendices, plur. Lat.]
1. Something appended, or added, to another thing.
The cherubim were never intended, as an object of worship; because they were only the appendices to another thing. But a thing is then proposed, as an object of worship; when it is set up by itself, and not by way of addition or ornament to another thing. Stillingfleet.
Normandy became an appendix to England, the nobler dominion; and received a greater conformity of their laws, to the English, than they gave to it. Hale's Civil Law of England.
2. An adjunct or concomitant.
All concurrent appendices of the action ought to be surveyed, in order to pronounce with truth concerning it. Watts.

To APPERTA'IN. v. n [appertenir, Fr.]
1. To belong to, as of right; with to.
The honour of devising this doctrine, that religion ought to be enforced by the sword, would be found appertaining to Mahomed, the false prophet. Raleigh.
The Father, t' whom (in heav'n supreme)
Kingdom, and power, and glory appertain.
Hath honour'd me according to his will. Par. Lost.
2. To belong to, by nature or appointment.
If the soul of man did serve, only to give him being in this life; then things appertaining to this life would content him, as we see they do other creatures. Hooker.

And they roasted the passover with fire, as appertaineth; as for the sacrifices, they sod them in brass pots. 1 Esdras.

Both of them seem not to generate any other effect, but such as appertaineth to their proper objects and senses. Bacon.

It is expected, I should know no secrets
That appertain to you. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

APPERTA'INMENT. n. s. [from appertain.] That, which belongs to any rank or dignity.

He sent our messengers; and we lay by
Our appertainments, visiting of him. Shakesp.

APPE'RTENANCE. n. s. [from appartenance, Fr.] That, which belongs or relates to another thing.

Can they, which behold the controversy of divinity, condemn our enquiries in the doubtful appertenances of arts, and receptaries of philosophy? Brown's Vulgar Errours.

APPE'RTINENT. adj. [from To appertain.] Belonging; relating.

You know, how apt our love was to accord,
To furnish him with all appertinents,
Belonging to his honour. Shakesp. Henry V.

A'PPETENCE. } n. s. [appetentia, Lat.]
A'PPETENCY. } Carnal desire; sensual desire.

Bred only and completed, to the taste
Of lustful appetence; to sing, to dance,
To dress, to troule the tongue, and roll the eyes. Milton.

APPETIBI'LITY. n. s. [from appetible.] The quality of being desirable.

That elicitation, which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act, merely from the appetibility of the object; as a man draws a child after him, with the sight of a green bough. Bramhall against Hobbes.

A'PPETIBLE. adj. [appetibilis, Lat.] Desirable; that, which may be the object of appetite.

Power, both to slight the most appetible objects and to controul the most unruly passions. Bramhall against Hobbes.

A'PPETITE. n. s. [appetitus, Lat.]

1. The natural desire of good; the instinct, by which we are led to seek pleasure.

The will, properly and strictly taken, as it is (of things, which are referred unto the end, that man desireth) differeth greatly from that inferiour natural desire, which we call appetite. The object of appetite is, whatsoever sensible good may be wished for; the object of will is that good, which reason does lead us to seek. Hooker.

2. The desire of sensual pleasure.

Why she would hang on him,
As if increase of appetite had grown
By what he fed on. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Urge his hateful luxury,
And bestial appetite in change of lust.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

Each tree,
Loaden with fairest fruit, that hung to th' eye
Tempting, stirr'd in me sudden appetite
To pluck and eat. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Violent longing; eagerness after any thing.

No man could enjoy his life, his wife, or goods; if a mightier man had an appetite, to take the same from him. Davies.

Hopton had an extraordinary appetite, to engage Waller in a battle. Clarendon.

4. The thing eagerly desired.

Power being the natural appetite of princes, a limited monarch cannot gratify it. Swift.

5. Keenness of stomach; hunger; desire of food.

There be four principal causes of appetite; the refrigeration of the stomach, joined with some dryness; contraction, vellication, and abstersion; besides hunger, which is an emptiness.
Bacon's Natural History.

There is continual abundance; which creates such an appetite in your reader; that he is not cloyed with any thing, but satisfied with all. Dryden.

6. It has sometimes of, before the object of desire.

The new officer's nature needed some restraint to his immoderate appetite of power. Clarendon.

7. Sometimes to.

We have generally such an appetite to praise, that we greedily suck it in. Governm. of the Tong

APPETI'TION. n. s. [appetitio, Lat.] Desire.

The actual appetition or fastening our affections, on him. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

We find in animals an estimative or judicial faculty, an appetition or aversation. Judge Hale.

A'PPETITIVE. adj. [from appetite.] That, which desires; that, which has the quality of desiring.

The will is not a bare appetitive power, as that of the sensual appetite; but is a rational appetite. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

I find in myself an appetitive faculty always in exercise, in the very heat of activity and invigoration. Norris.

To APPLA'UD. v. a. [applaudo, Lat.]

1. To praise, by clapping the hand.

I would applaud thee to the very echo,
That should applaud again. Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. To praise in general.

Nations unborn your mighty names shall sound,
And worlds applaud, that must not yet be found. Pope.

APPLA'UDER. n. s. [from applaud.] He, that praises or commends.

I had the voice of my single reason against it, drowned in the noise of a multitude of applauders. Glanville's Scepsis.

APPLA'USE. n. s. [applausus, Lat.] Approbation, loudly expressed; praise: properly a clap.

This general applause, and chearful shout,
Argues your wisdom and your love to Richard.
Shakespeare.

Sylla wept,
And chid her barking waves into attention;
And fell Charybdis murmur'd soft applause. Milton.

Those that are so fond of applause, how little do they taste it, when they have it! South.

See their wide-streaming wounds! They neither came,
For pride of empire, nor desire of fame,
Kings fight for kingdoms, madmen for applause;
But love for love alone, that crowns the lover's cause. Dryden's Fables.

A'PPLE. n. s. [æppel, Saxon.]

1. The fruit of the apple-tree.

Tall thriving trees confess'd the fruitful mold;
The redd'ning apple ripens here to gold. Pope's Od.

2. The pupil of the eye.

He instructed him; he kept him, as the apple of his eye. Deut. xxxii. 10.

A'PPLE, of Love.

Apples of Love are of three sorts; the most common having long trailing branches, with rough leaves and yellow joints, succeeded by apples, as they are called, at the joints; not round, but bunched; of a pale orange shining pulp, and seeds within. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'PPLE-GRA'FT. n. s. [from apple and graft.] A twig of apple-tree, grafted upon the stock of another tree.

We have seen three and twenty sorts of apple-grafts, upon the same old plant; most of them, adorned with fruit. Boyle.

APPLE-TAR'T. n. s. [from apple and tart.] A tart, made of apples

What, up and down carved like an apple-tart!
Shakespeare.

A'PPLE-TREE. n. s. [from apple and tree.]

The fruit of this tree is (for the most part) hollowed about the foot stalk; the cells, inclosing the seed, are separated by cartilaginous partitions: the juice of the fruit is sourish, the tree large and spreading; the flowers consist of five leaves, expanding in form of a rose. There is a great variety of these fruits: those for the dessert are, the white juniting, Margaret apple, summer pearmain, summer queening, embroidered apple, golden reinette, summer white Colville, summer red Colville, silver pippin, aromatick pippin, the grey reinette, la haute-bonté, royal russeting, Wheeler's russet, Sharp's russet, spice apple, golden pippin, nonpareil, and Papi: those for the kitchen use are, codling, summer marigold, summer red pearmain, Holland pippin, Kentish pippin, the hanging body, Lyman's pearmain, French reinette, French pippin, royal russet, monstruous reinette, winter pearmain, pomme violette, Spencer's pippin, stone's pippin, oakenpin: and those generally used for Cyder are, Devonshire royal wilding, redstreaked apple, the whitsour, Herefordshire underleaf, John apple, &c. Miller.

Thus apple trees, whose trunks are strong to bear
Their spreading boughs, exert themselves in air.
Dryden.

A'PPLE-WOMAN. n. s. [from apple and woman.] A woman, that sells apples, that keeps fruit on a stall.

Yonder are two apple-women scolding, and just ready to uncoif one another. Arbuthnot and Pope.

APPLI'ABLE. adj. [from apply.] That, which may be applied. For this word, the moderns use applicable; which see.

Limitations all such principles have, in regard of the varieties of the matter, whereunto they are appliable. Hooker.

All, that I have said of the heathen idolatry, is appliable to the idolatry of another sort of men in the world. South.

APPLI'ANCE. n. s. [from apply.] The act of applying: the thing applied.

Diseases, desp'rate grown,
By desperate appliance are relieved. Shakesp.
Are you chaf'd?
Ask God for temperance; 'tis the appliance only,
Which your desire requires. Shakesp.

APPLICABI'LITY. n. s. [from applicable.] The quality of being fit to be applied to something.

The action of cold is composed of two parts; the one pressing, the other penetration, which require applicability. Digby.

A'PPLICABLE. adj. [from apply.] That, which may be applied, as properly relating to something.

What he says of the portrait of any particular person, is applicable to poetry. In the character, there is a better or a worse likeness; the better is a panegyrick, and the worse a libel. Dryden

It were happy for us, if this complaint were applicable only to the heathen world. Rogers

A'PPLICABLENESS. n. s. [from applicable.] Fitness to be applied.

The knowledge of salts may possibly, by that little part which we have already delivered of its applicableness, be of use in natural philosophy. Boyle.

It was the rabble, of which nobody was named; and, which is more strange, not one apprehended. Clarendon.

3. To conceive by the mind.

The good which is gotten by doing, causeth not action; unless, apprehending it as good, we like and desire it. Hooker.

Yet this I apprehend not, why to those
Among whom God will deign to dwell on earth,
So many and so various laws are given. Milton.

The First Being is invisible and incorruptible, and can only be apprehended by our minds. Still.

4. To think on with terrour; to fear.

From my grandfather's death I had reason to apprehend the stone; and, from my father's life, the gout. Temple.

APPREHE'NDER. n. s. [from apprehend.] Conceiver; thinker.

Gross apprehenders may not think it any more strange, than that a bullet should be moved by the rarified fire. Glanville.

APPREHE'NSIBLE. adj. [from apprehend.] That, which may be apprehended, or conceived.

The north and southern poles are incommunicable and fixed points, whereof the one is not apprehensible in the other. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

APPREHENSION. n. s. [apprehensio, Lat.]

1. The mere contemplation of things, without affirming or denying any thing concerning them. So we think of a horse, high, swift, animal, time, matter, mind, death, &c. Watts

Simple apprehension denotes no more than the soul's naked intellection of an object, without either composition or deduction. Glanville.

2. Opinion; sentiments; concession.

If we aim at right understanding its true nature, we must examine what apprehension mankind make of it. Digby.

To be false, and to be thought false, is all one in respect of men who act not according to truth, but apprehension. South.

The expressions of scripture are commonly suited in those matters to the vulgar apprehensions and conceptions of the place and people where they were delivered. Locke.

3. The faculty, by which we conceive new ideas, or power of conceiving them.

I nam'd them as they pass'd, and understood
Their nature, with such knowledge God indu'd
My sudden apprehension. Milton.

4. Fear.

It behoveth that the world should be held in awe, not by a vain surmise, but a true apprehension of somewhat, which no man may think himself able to withstand. Hooker.

And he the future evil shall no less
In apprehension, than in substance, feel. Milton.

The apprehension of what was to come from an unknown, at least unacknowledged successour to the crown, clouded much of their prosperity. Clarendon.

As they have no apprehension of these things, so they need no comfort against them. Tillotson.

After the death of his nephew Caligula, Claudius was in no small apprehension for his own life. Addison.

5. Suspicion of something to happen, or be done.

I'll note you in my book of memory,
And scourge you for this apprehension. Shaksp.

That he might take away the apprehension, that he meant suddenly to depart, he sent out orders, which he was sure would come into the enemies hands, to two or three villages, that they should send proportions of corn into Basinghouse. Clarendon.

6. Seizure.

See that he be convey'd unto the Tower:
And go we, brothers to the man that took him,
To question of his apprehension. Shakespeare.

He shall approach unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? Jer. xxx. 21.

To have knowledge in all the objects of contemplation, is what the mind can hardly attain unto; the instances are few of those who have, in any measure, approached towards it. Locke.

4. To come near, by natural affinity, or resemblance; as, the cat approaches to the tiger.

To APPRO'ACH. v. a.

1. To bring near to. This sense is rather French than English.

This they will nimbly perform, if objected to the extremes; but slowly, and not at all, if approached unto their roots. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

By plunging paper thoroughly in weak spirit of wine, and approaching it to a candle, the spirituous parts will burn, without harming the paper. Boyle.

Approach'd, and looking underneath the sun,
He saw proud Arcite. Dryden.

2. To come near to.

He was an admirable poet, and thought even to have approached Homer. Temple.

APPRO'ACH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of drawing near.

If I could bid the seventh welcome with so good a heart as I can bid the other five farewell, I should be glad of his approach. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

'Tis with our souls
As with our eyes, that after a long darkness
Are dazzled at th' approach of sudden light. Denham.

2. Access.

Honour hath in it the vantage ground to do good; the approach to kings and principal persons; and the raising of a man's own fortunes. Bacon.

3. Hostile advance.

For England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulph. Shakesp

4. Means of advancing.

Against beleagur'd heav'n the giants move;
Hills pil'd on hills, on mountains mountains lie,
To make their mad approaches to the sky. Dryden.

APPROA'CHER. n. s. [from approach.] The person, that approaches or draws near.

Thou gav'st thine ears, like tapsters, that bid welcome,
To knaves and all approachers. Shakesp.

APPRO'ACHMENT. n. s. [from approach.] The act of coming near.

As for ice, it will not concrete, but in the approachment of the air, as we have made trial in glasses of water, which will not easily freeze. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

APPROBA'TION. n. s. [approbatio, Lat.]

1. The act of approving, or expressing himself pleased or satisfied.

That not past me, but
By learned approbation of my judges. Shakesp.

That from my wounded body flows,
With mortal crisis doth portend
My days to appropinque an end. Hudibras.

APPRO'PRIABLE. adj. [from appropriate.] That which may be appropriated; that which may be restrained to something particular.

This conceit, applied unto the original of man, and the beginning of the world, is more justly appropriable unto its end. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

To APPRO'PRIATE. v. a. [approprier, Fr. opproprio, low Lat.]

1. To consign to some particular use or person.

Things sanctified were thereby in such sort appropriated unto God, as that they might never afterwards again be made common. Hooker.

As for this spot of ground, this person, this thing, I have selected and appropriated, I have inclosed it to myself and my own use; and I will endure no sharer, no rival, or companion in it. South.

Some they appropriated to the gods,
And some to publick, some to private ends. Roscommon.

Marks of honour are appropriated to the magistrate, that he might be invited to reverence himself. Atterbury.

2. To claim or exercise; to take to himself by an exclusive right.

To themselves appropriating
The spirit of God, promis'd alike and giv'n
To all believers. Milton.

Why should people engross and appropriate the common benefits of fire, air, and water to themselves? L'Estrange.

Every body else has an equal title to it; and therefore he cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellow commoners, all mankind. Locke.

3. To make peculiar to something; to annex by combination.

He need but be furnished with verses of sacred scripture; and his system, that has appropriated them to the orthodoxy of his church, makes them immediately irrefragable arguments. Locke.

We, by degrees, get ideas and names, and learn their appropriated connection one with another. Locke.

4. In law, to alienate a benefice. See APPROPRIATION.

Before Richard II. it was lawful to appropriate the whole fruits of a benefice to any abbey, the house finding one to serve the cure; that king redressed that horrid evil. Ayliffe.

APPRO'PRIATE. adj. [from the verb.] Peculiar; consigned to some particular use or person; belonging peculiarly.

He did institute a band of fifty archers, by the name of yeomen of his guard; and that it might be thought to be rather a matter of dignity, than any matter of diffidence appropriate to his own case, he made an ordinance not temporary, but to hold in succession for ever. Bacon.

The heathens themselves had an apprehension of the necessity of some appropriate acts of divine worship. Stillingfleet.

APPROPRIATION. n. s. [from appropriate.]

1. The application of something to a particular purpose.

The mind should have distinct ideas of the things, and retain the particular name, with its peculiar appropriation to that idea. Locke.

2. The claim of any thing as peculiar,

He doth nothing but talk of his horse, and make a great appropriation to his good parts, that he can shoe him himself. Shakespeare.

3. The fixing a particular signification to a word.

The name of faculty may, by an appropriation that disguises its true sense, palliate the absurdity. Locke.

4. In law, a severing of a benefice ecclesiastical to the proper and perpetual use of some religious house, or dean and chapter, bishoprick or college; because, as persons ordinarily have no right of fee simple, these, by reason of their perpetuity, are accounted owners of the fee simple; and therefore are called proprietors. To an appropriation, after the licence obtained of the king in chancery, the consent of the diocesan, patron, and incumbent are necessary, if the church be full: but if the church be void, the diocesan and the patron, upon the king's licence, may conclude. Cowell.

APPROPRIA'TOR. n. s. [from appropriate.] He that is possessed of an appropriated benefice.

These appropriators, by reason of their perpetuities, are accounted owners of the fee simple; and therefore are called proprietors. Ayliffe's Parerg.

APPRO'VABLE. adj. [from approve.] That, which merits approbation.

The solid reason, or confirmed experience, of any men, is very approvable in what profession soever. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

APPRO'VAL. n. s. [from approve.] Approbation; a word rarely found.

There is a censor of justice and manners, without whose approval no capital sentences are to be executed. Temple.

APPRO'VANCE. n. s. [from approve.] Approbation: a word not much used.

A man of his learning should not so lightly have been carried away with old wives' tales from approvance of his own reason. Spenser.

Should she seem
Soft'ning the least approvance to bestow,
Their colours burnish, and, by hope inspir'd,
They brisk advance. Thomson.

To APPRO'VE. v. a. [approuver, Fr. approbo, Lat.]

1. To like; to be pleased with.

There can be nothing possibly evil, which God approveth, and that he approveth much more than he doth command. Hooker.

What power was that, whereby Medea saw,
And well approv'd, and prais'd the better course,
When her rebellious sense did so withdraw
Her feeble pow'rs, that she pursu'd the worse?
Davies.

2. To express liking.

It is looked upon as insolence for a man to set up his own opinion against that of some learned doctor, or otherwise approved writer. Locke.

3. To prove; to show; to justify.

His meaning was not, that Archimedes could simply in nothing be deceived; but that he had in such sort approved his skill, that he seemed worthy of credit for ever after, in matters appertaining to the science he was skilful in. Hooker.

In religion,
What damned errour, but some sober brow
Will bless it, and approve it with a text?
Shakesp.

I am sorry
That he approves the common liar, Fame,
Who speaks him thus at Rome. Shakespeare.

Would'st thou approve thy constancy? Approve
First thy obedience. Milton.

Refer all the actions of this short life to that state which will never end; and this will approve itself to be wisdom at the last, whatever the world judge of it now. Tillotson.

4. To experience; not in use.

Oh! 'tis the curse in love, and still approv'd,
When women cannot love, where they're belov'd.
Shakespeare.

5. To make, or show, to be worthy of approbation.

The first care and concern must be to approve himself to God by righteousness, holiness, and purity. Rogers.

6. It has of before the object, when it signifies to be pleased, but may be used without a preposition; as, I approve your letter, or, of your letter.

I shewed you a piece of black and white stuff, just sent from the dyer; which you were pleased to approve of, and be my customer for. Swift.

APPRO'VEMENT. n. s. [from approve.] Approbation; liking.

It is certain, that at the first you were all of my opinion, and that I did nothing without your approvement. Hayward.

APPRO'VER. n. s. [from approve.]

1. He, that approves.

2. He, that makes trial.

Their discipline,
Now mingled with their courages, will make known
To their approvers; they are people such,
As mend upon the world. Shakespeare.

3. In our common law, one that, confessing felony of himself, appealeth or accuseth another, one or more, to be guilty of the same: and he is called so, because he must prove what he hath alleged in his appeal. Cowell.

APPRO'XIMATE. adj. [from ad to, and proximus next, Lat.] Approaching near to.

APPROXIMA'TION. n. s. [from approximate.]

A'PRON-MA'N. n. s. [from apron and man.] A man, that wears an apron; a workman; a manual artificer.

You have made good work,
You and your apron-men; that stood so much,
Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlick eaters. Shakesp.

A'PRONED. adj. [from apron.] Wearing an apron.

The cobler apron'd, and the parson gown'd. Pope.

A'PSIS. n. s. apsides, plural. [ἁψις, conjunction.]

Is applied, in astronomy, to two points in the orbits of planets; in which they are at the greatest and at the least distance, from the sun or earth. The higher apsis is more particularly denominated aphelion, or apogee; the lower, perihelion, or perigee. Chambers.

If bodies revolve in orbits that are pretty near circles, and the apsides of these orbits be fixed; then the centripetal forces of those bodies will be reciprocally, as the squares of the distances. Cheyne.

APT. adj. [aptus, Lat.]

1. Fit.

This so eminent industry, in making proselytes, more of that sex than of the other, groweth; for that they are deemed apter, to serve as instruments in the cause. Apter they are, through the eagerness of their affection; apter, through a natural inclination unto piety; apter, through sundry opportunities, &c. Finally, apter, through a singular delight, which they take in giving very large and particular intelligence, how all near about them stand affected, as concerning the same cause. Hooker.

2. Having a tendency to; liable to,

Things natural, as long as they keep those forms which give them their being, cannot possibly be apt or inclinable, to do otherwise than they do. Hooker.

My vines and peaches on my best south walls were apt, to have a soot or smuttiness upon their leaves and fruits. Temple.

3. Inclined to; led to; disposed to.

You may make her you love, believe it; which, I warrant, she is apter to do, than confess she does. Shakesp. As you like it.

Men are apt to think well of themselves and of their nation, of their courage and strength. Temp.

One, who has not these lights, is a stranger to what he reads; and apt to put a wrong interpretation upon it. Addison.

Even those, who are near the court, are apt to deduct wrong consequences, by reasoning upon the motives of actions. Swift.

What we have always seen, to be done in one manner; we are apt to imagine, there was but that one way. Bentley.

4. Ready; quick: as, an apt wit.

I have a heart, as little apt as yours;
But yet a brain, that leads my use of anger
To better vantage. Shakesp.

5. Qualified for.

These brothers had a while served the king in war, whereunto they were only apt. Sidney.

All, that were strong and apt for war, even them the king of Babylon brought captive to Babylen. 2 Kings.

To APT. v. a. [apto, Lat.]

1. To suit; to adapt.

We need a man, that knows the several graces
Of history, and how to apt their places;
Where brevity, where splendour, and where height,
Where sweetness is required, and where weight,
Ben Jonson.

In some ponds, apted for it by nature, they become pikes. Walton.

2. To fit; to qualify; to dispose; to prepare.

The king is melancholy,
Apted for any ill impressions. Denham's Sophy.

To A'PTATE. v. a. [aptatum, Lat.] To make fit.

To aptate a planet, is to strengthen the planet in position of house and dignities to the greatest advantage, in order to bring about the desired end Bailey.

A'PTITUDE. n. s. [French.]

1. Fitness.

This evinces its perfect aptitude and fitness for the end, to which it was aimed, the planting and nourishing all true virtue among men. Decay of Pie.

2. Tendency.

In an abortion, the mother, besides the frustration of her hopes, acquires an aptitude to miscarry for the future. Decay of Piety.

3. Disposition.

He, that is about children, should study their natures and aptitudes; what turns they easily take, and what becomes them; what their native stock is, and what it is fit for. Locke.

A'PTLY. adv. [from apt.]

1. Properly; with just connection, or correspondence; fitly.

That part
Was aptly fitted and naturally perform'd. Shakesp

But, what the mass nutritious does divide?
What makes them aptly to the limbs adhere,
In youth increase them, and in age repair?
Blackmore.

2. Justly; pertinently.

Irenæus very aptly remarks, that those nations, who were not possest of the gospels, had the same accounts of our Saviour, which are in the Evangelists. Addison.

3. Readily; acutely; as, he learned his business very aptly.

A'PTNESS. n. s. [from apt.]

1. Fitness; suitableness.

The nature of every law must be judged of, by the aptness of things therein prescribed, unto the same end. Hooker.

There are antecedent and independent aptnesses in things; with respect to which, they are fit to be commanded or forbidden. Norris's Miscell.

2. Disposition to any thing; of persons.

The nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness to take all power from the people. Shakesp.

3. Quickness of apprehension; readiness to learn.

What should be the aptness of birds, in comparison of beasts, to imitate speech, may be enquired. Bacon.

4. Tendency of things.

Some seeds of goodness give him a relish of such reflections, as have an aptness to improve the mind. Addison.

AP'TOTE. n. s. [of a and πτῶσις a case.] A noun, which is not declined with cases.

A'QUA. n. s. [Latin.] A word signifying water, very much used in chymical writings.

AQUA FO'RTIS. [Latin.] A corrosive liquor, made by distilling purified nitre with calcined vitriol, or rectified oil of vitriol in a strong heat: the liquor, which rises in fumes red as blood, being collected, is the spirit of nitre, or aqua fortis; which serves as a menstruum, for dissolving of silver, and all other metals, except gold. But, if sea salt or sal ammoniack be added to aqua fortis, it commences aqua regia, and will then dissolve no metal but gold. Chambers.

The dissolving of silver in aqua fortis, and gold in aqua regia, and not vice versâ, would not be difficult to know. Locke.

AQUA MARI'NA of the Italian lapidaries, is of a sea or bluish green. This stone seems to me to be the beryllus of Pliny. Woodward.

AQUA MIRA'BILIS. [Lat.] The wonderful water, is prepared of cloves, galangals, cubebs, mace, cardamomum, nutmegs, ginger, and spirit of wine, digested twenty-four hours, then distilled.

AQUA REGIA, or AQUA REGA'LIS, [Latin.] An acid water, so called because it dissolves gold, the king of metals. Its essential ingredient is common sea salt, the only salt which will operate on gold. It is prepared by mixing common sea-salt, or sal ammoniack, or the spirit of them, with spirit of nitre, or common aqua fortis. Chambers.

He adds to his complex idea of gold, that of fixedness or solubility in aqua regia. Locke.

AQUA-VITÆ. [Lat.] It is commonly understood of what is otherwise called brandy, or spirit of wine, either simple or prepared with aromaticks. But some appropriate the term brandy to what is procured from wine, or the grape; aqua-vitæ, to that drawn after the same manner from malt. Cham.

I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, an Irishman with my aqua vitæ bottle, or a thief to walk with my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself Shakesp.

AQUA'TICK. adj. [aquaticus, Lat. from aqua, water.]

1. That, which inhabits the water.

The vast variety of worms found in animals, as well terrestrial as aquatick, are taken into their bodies by meats and drinks. Ray on the Creation.

Brutes may be considered, as either aerial, terrestrial, aquatick, or amphibious. Aquatick are those whose constant abode is upon the water. Locke.

2. Applied to plants; that which grows in the water.

Flags, and such like aquaticks, are best destroyed by draining. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'QUATILE. adj. [aquatilis, Lat.] That, which inhabits the water.

We behold many millions of the aquatile or water frog, in ditches and standing plashes. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'QUEDUCT. n. s. [aquæductus, Lat.] A conveyance made for carrying water from one place to another; made on uneven ground, to preserve the level of the water, and convey it by a canal. Some aqueducts are under ground, and others above it, supported by arches.

Among the remains of old Rome, the grandeur of the commonwealth shews itself chiefly in temples, highways, aqueducts, walls, and bridges of the city. Addison.

Hither the rills of water are convey'd,
In curious aquaducts; by nature laid,
To carry all the humour. Blackmore.

A'QUEOUS. adj. [from aqua, water, Lat.] Watery.

The vehement fire, requisite to its fusion, forced away all the aqueous and fugitive moisture. Ray on the Creation.

A'QUEOUSNESS. n. s. [aquositas, Lat.] Waterishness.

A'QUILINE. adj. [aquilinus, Lat. from aquila an eagle.] Resembling an eagle; when applied to the nose, hooked.

His nose was aquiline, his eyes were blue,
Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue. Dryd.

Gryps signifies some kind of eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet grypus, for an hooked or aquiline nose. Brown.

AQUO'SE. adj. [from aqua, Lat.] Watery; having the qualities of water. Dict.

AQUO'SITY. n. s. [from aquose.] Wateriness. Dict.

A'RABLE. adj. [from aro, Lat. to plough.] Fit for the plough; fit for tillage; productive of corn.

His eyes he open'd, and beheld a field,
Part arable, and tilth; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd. Milton.

'Tis good for arable; a glebe, that asks
Tough teams of oxen, and laborious tasks. Dryd.

Having but very little arable land they are forced to fetch all their corn from foreign countries. Addison.

ARACHNOIDES. s. [from ἀράχνη a spider's web, and εἶδος form.]

1. One of the tunicks of the eye, so called from its resemblance to a cobweb.

As to the tunicks of the eye many things might be taken notice of; the prodigious fineness of the arachnoides, the acute sense of the retina. Derh.

2. It is also a fine thin transparent membrane; which, lying between the dura and the pia mater, is supposed to invest the whole substance of the brain. Cham.

ARAIGNEE. n. s. [Fr.] A term in fortification, which sometimes denotes a branch, return, or gallery of a mine. Dict.

ARA'NEOUS. adj. [from aranea, Lat. a cobweb.] Resembling a cobweb.

The curious araneous membrane of the eye constringeth and dilateth it, and so varieth its focus. Derham.

ARA'TION. n. s. [aratio, Lat.] The act or practice of ploughing.

ARA'TORY. adj. [from aro, Lat. to plough.] That, which contributes to tillage. Dict.

A'RBALIST. n. s. [from arcus, a bow, and balista an engine to throw stones.] A cross-bow.

It is reported by William Brito, that the arcubalista or arbalist was first shewed to the French, by our king Richard the first, who was shortly after slain by a quarrel thereof. Camden.

A'RBITER. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A judge appointed by the parties, to whose determination they voluntarily submit.

He would put himself into the king's hands, and make him arbiter of the peace. Bacon

2. One, who has the power of decision or regulation; a judge,

Next him, high arbiter,
Chance governs all. Milton.

His majesty, in this great conjuncture, seems to be generally allowed for the sole arbiter of the affairs of Christendom. Temple.

A'RBITRABLE. adj. [from arbitror, Lat.] Arbitrary; depending upon the will.

The ordinary revenue of a parsonage is in land, called the glebe; in tythe, a set part of our goods, rendered to God; in other offerings, bestowed upon God by the people, either in such arbitrable proportion, as their own devotion moveth them, or as the laws or customs of particular places do require them. Spelman.

ARBI'TRAMENT. n. s. [from arbitror, Lat.] Will; determination; choice. This should be written arbitrement.

Stand fast! to stand or fall,
Free in thine own arbitrament it stands:
Perfect within, no outward aid require,
And all temptation to transgress repel. Milton.

A'RBITRARILY. adv. [from arbitrary.] With no other rule, than the will; despotically; absolutely.

He governed arbitrarily: he was expelled, and came to the deserved end of all tyrants. Dryden.

ARBITRA'RIOUS. adj. [from arbitrarius, Lat.] Arbitrary; depending on the will. These are standing and irrepealable truths; such, as have no precarious existence, or arbitrarious dependence upon any will or understanding whatsoever. Norris.

ARBITRARIOUSLY. adv. [from arbitrarious.] Arbitrarily; according to mere will and pleasure.

Where words are imposed arbitrariously, distorted from their common use; the mind must be led into misprision. Glanville.

A'RBITRARY. adj. [arbitrarius, Lat.]

1. Despotick; absolute; bound by no law; following the will without restraint. It is applied both to persons and things.

In vain the Tyrian queen resigns her life,
For the chaste glory of a virtuous wife;
If lying bards may false amours rehearse,
And blast her name with arbitrary verse. Walsh.

Their regal tyrants shall with blushes hide
Their little lusts of arbitrary pride,
Nor bear to see their vassals ty'd. Prior.

2. Depending on no rule; capricious.

It may be perceived, with what insecurity we ascribe effects depending on the natural period of time, unto arbitrary calculations, and such as vary at pleasure. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

To A'RBITRATE. v. a. [arbitror, Lat.]

1. To decide; to determine.

This might have been prevented, and made whole,
With very easy arguments of love;
Which now, the manage of two kingdoms must,
With fearful bloody issue, arbitrate. Shakesp.

2. To judge of.

Yet, where an equal poise of hope and fear
Does arbitrate th' event, my nature is,
That I incline to hope, rather than fear. Milton.

To A'RBITRATE. v. n. To give judgment.

It did arbitrate upon the several reports of sense, not like a drowsy judge, only hearing, but also directing their verdict. South

A'RBITRARINESS. n. s. [from arbitrary.] Despoticalness; tyranny.

He, that by harshness of nature, and arbitrariness of commands, uses his children like servants, is what they mean by a tyrant. Temple.

ARBITRA'TION. n. s. [from arbitror, Lat.] The determination of a cause, by a judge mutually agreed on by the parties contending.

A'RBITRATOR. n. s. [from arbitrate.]

1. An extraordinary judge between party and party, chosen by their mutual consent. Cowell.

Be a good soldier, or upright trustee,
An arbitrator from corruption free. Dryden

2. A governor; a president.

Though heav'n be shut,
And heav'n's high arbitrator sit secure
In his own strength; this place may be expos'd. Milton.

3. He, that has the power of prescribing to others without limit or controul.

Another Blenheim or Ramillies will make the confederates masters of their own terms, and arbitrators of a peace. Addison on the State of the War

4. The determiner; he, that puts an end to any affair.

But now the arbitrator of despairs,
Just death, kind umpire of man's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence. Shakesp.

The end crowns all;
And that old common arbitrator, time,
Will one day end it. Shakesp.

ARBI'TREMENT. n. s. [from arbitror, Lat.]

1. Decision; determination.

I know, the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal arbitrement; but nothing of the circumstance more. Shakesp.

We of the offending side
Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement. Shakesp.
Aid was granted, and the quarrel brought to the arbitrement of the sword. Hayward.

2. Compromise.

Lukewarm persons think, they may accommodate points of religion by middle ways and witty reconcilements; as if they would make an arbitrement between God and man. Bacon.

A'RBORARY. adj. [arborarius, Lat.] Belonging to a tree. Dict.

A'RBORET. n. s. [arbor, Lat. a tree.] A small tree or shrub.

No arboret, with painted blossoms dreſt,
And smelling sweet; but there it might be found,
To bud out fair, and her sweet smells throw all around. Fairy Queen.

Now hid, now seen,
Among thick woven arborets, and flow'rs
Imbroider'd on each bank. Milton.

ARBO'REOUS. adj. [arborous, Lat.]

1. Belonging to trees; constituting a tree.

A grain of mustard becomes arboreous. Brown.

2. A term in botany, to distinguish such funguses or mosses as grow upon trees, from those that grow on the ground. Quincy.

They speak properly, who make it an arboreous excrescence, or rather a superplant bred of a viscous and superfluous lopp, which the tree itself cannot assimulate. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

A'RBORIST. n. s. [arboriste, Fr. from arbor a tree.] A naturalist, who makes trees his study.

The nature of the mulberry, which the arborists observe to be long in the begetting his buds; but the cold seasons being past, he shoots them all out in a night. Howel's Vocal Forest.

A'RBOROUS. adj. [from arbor, Lat.] Belonging to a tree.

From under shady arborous roof,
Soon as they forth were come to open light
Of day-spring and the sun. Milton.

A'RBOUR. n. s. [from arbor a tree.] A bower; a place, covered with green branches of trees.

Nay, you shall see mine orchard; where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting. Shakesp.

Let us divide our labours: thou, where choice
Leads thee, or where most needs; whether to wind
The woodbine round this arbour, or direct
The clasping ivy where to climb. Milton.

For noon-day's heat, are closer arbours made;
And, for fresh ev'ning air, the op'ner glade. Dryden.

A'RBOUR-VINE. n. s. A species of bindweed; which see.

A'RBUSCLE. n. s. [arbuscula, Lat.] Any little shrub. Dict.

A'RBUTE. n. s. [arbutus, Lat.]

Arbute, or strawberry tree, grows common in Ireland. It is difficult to be raised from the seeds; but may be propagated by layers. It grows to a goodly tree; endures our climate, unless the weather be very severe; and makes beautiful hedges. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Rough arbute slips into a hazel bough
Are oft ingrafted, and good apples grow
Out of a plain tree stock. May's Virgil.

ARC. n. s. [arcus, Lat.]

1. A segment; a part of a circle; not more than a semicircle.

Their segments or arcs, for the most part, exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton's Opticks.

2. An arch.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state;
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate. Pope.

A'RCADE. n. s. [French.] A continued arch; a walk arched over.

Or call the winds, through long arcades to roar;
Proud, to catch cold at a Venetian door. Pope.

ARCANUM. n. s. in the plural arcana. A Latin word signifying a secret.

ARCH. n. s. [arcus, Lat.]

1. Part of a circle, not more than the half.

The mind perceives, that an arch of a circle is less than the whole circle, as clearly as it does the idea of a circle. Locke.

2. A building, open below and closed above, standing by the form of its own curve; used for bridges and other works.

Ne'er through an arch, so hurried the blown tide;
As the recomforted, through the gates. Shakesp.

Let Rome in Tiber melt, and the wide arch
Of the rais'd empire fall! here is my space. Shakesp.

The royal squadron marches;
Erect triumphal arches. Dryden's Albion.

3. The sky, or vault of heaven.

Hath nature given them eyes,
To see this vaulted arch, and the rich cope
Of sea and land? Shakespeare.

4. [from ἀρχὸς.] A chief: obsolete.

The noble duke, my master,
My worthy arch and patron, comes to-night. Shakesp.

To ARCH. v. a. [arcuo, Lat.]

1. To buid arches.

The nations of the field and wood
Build on the wave, or arch beneath the sand. Pope.

2. To cover with arches.

Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may get through. Shakespeare

The proud river, which makes her bed at her feet, is arched over with such a curious pile of stones; that, considering the rapid course of the deep stream that roars under it, it may well take place among the wonders of the world. Howel.

3. To form into arches.

Fine devices of arching water without spilling, and making it rise in several forms of feathers and drinking-glasses, be pretty things to look on, but nothing to health and sweetness. Bacon.

ARCH. adj. [from ἀρχὸς chief.]

1. Chief; of the first class.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakesp.

There is sprung up
An heretick, an arch one, Cranmer. Shakesp.

2. Waggish; mirthful; triflingly mischievous. This signification it seems to have gained, by being frequently applied to the boy most remarkable for his pranks; as, the arch rogue: unless it be derived from Archy, the name of the jester to Charles I.

Eugenio set out from the university; he had the reputation of an arch lad at school. Swift.

ARCH, in composition, signifies chief, or of the first class [from ἀρχὸς,]; as, archangel, archbishop. It is pronounced variously with regard to the ch, which before a consonant sound as in cheese, as archdeacon; before a vowel like k, as archangel.

ARCHA'NGEL. n. s. [archangelus, Lat.] One of the highest order of angels.

His form had yet not lost
All her original brightness, nor appear'd
Less than archangel ruin'd, and th' excess
Of glory obscur'd. Milton.

'Tis sure th' archangel's trump I hear,
Nature's great passing-bell; the only call
Of God's, that will be heard by all. Norris.

ARCHA'NGEL. a. s. [lamium, Lat.] The name of a plant, called also Dead-nettle.

ARCHANGE'LICK. adj. [from archangel.] Belonging to archangels.

He ceas'd; and th' archangelick pow'r prepar'd
For swift descent; with him the cohort bright
Of watchful cherubim. Milton.

ARCHBE'ACON. n. s. [from arch and beacon.] The chief place of prospect, or of signal.

You shall win the top of the Cornish archbeacon Hainborough; which may for prospect compare with Rama in Palestina. Carew.

ARCHBI'SHOP. [from arch and bishop] A bishop of the first class, who superintends the conduct of other bishops his suffragans.

Cranmer is return'd with welcome,
Install'd lord archbishop of Canterbury. Shakesp.

The archbishop was the known architect of this new fabrick. Clarendon.

ARCHBI'SHOPRICK. n. s. [from archbishop.] The state or jurisdiction of an archbishop.

'Tis the cardinal;
And, merely to revenge him on the emperor,
For not bestowing on him at his asking
The archbishoprick of Toledo, this is purpos'd. Shakesp.

This excellent man, from the time of his promotion to the archbishoprick, underwent the envy and malice of men, who agreed in nothing else. Clarendon.

ARCHCHA'NTER. n. s. [from arch and chanter.] The chief chanter.

ARCHDE'ACON. n. s. [archidiaconus, Lat.] One, that supplies the bishop's place and office in such matters, as do belong to the episcopal function. The law styles him the bishop's vicar, or vicegerent. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Lest negligence might foist in abuses, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings Carew's Survey.

ARCHDE'ACONRY. n. s. [archidiaconatus, Lat.] The office of an archdeacon.

It oweth subjection to the metropolitan of Canterbury, and hath one only archdeaconry. Carew's Survey.

ARCHDE'ACONSHIP. n. s. [from archdeacon.] The office or jurisdiction of an archdeacon.

ARCHDU'KE. n. s. [archidux, Lat.] A title given to some sovereign princes, as of Austria and Tuscany.

Philip, archduke of Austria, during his voyage from the Netherlands towards Spain, was weather-driven into Weymouth. Carew's Survey.

ARCHDU'CHESS. n. s. [from arch and duchess.] A title given to the sister or daughter of the archduke of Austria, or to the wife of an archduke of Tuscany.

A'RCH-PHILO'SOPHER. n. s. [from arch and philosopher.] Chief philosopher.

It is no improbable opinion therefore, which the arch-philosopher was of; that the chiefest person in every household was always (as it were) a king. Hooker.

ARCH-PRELATE. n. s. [from arch and prelate.] Chief prelate.

May we not wonder, that a man of St. Basil's authority and quality, and arch-prelate in the house of God, should have his name far and wide called in question? Hooker.

ARCH-PRESBYTER. n. s. [from arch and presbyter.] Chief presbyter.

As simple deacons are in subjection to presbyters, according to the canon law; so are also presbyters and arch-presbyters in subjection to these archdeacons. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ARCH-PRI'EST. n. s. [from arch and priest.] Chief priest.

The word decanus was extended to an ecclesiastical dignity, which included the arch-priests. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ARCHAIOLO'GICK. adj. [from archaiology.] Relating to a discourse on antiquity.

A'RCHAISM. n. s. [ἀρχαισμὸς.] An ancient phrase, or mode of expression.

I shall never use archaisms, like Milton. Watts.

A'RCHED. participial adj. [from To arch.] Bent in the form of an arch.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond, thou hast the right arched bent of the brow. Shakesp.

Let the arched knife,
Well sharpen'd, now assail the spreading shades
Of vegetables. Philips.

ARCHER. n. s. [archer, Fr. from arcus, Lat. a bow.] He that shoots with a bow: he that carries a bow in battle.

Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head. Shakesp.

This Cupid is no longer an archer; his glory shall be our's; for we are the only love-gods. Shakesp.

Thou frequent bring'st the smitten deer;
For seldom, archers say, thy arrows err. Prior.

A'RCHERY. n. s. [from archer.]

1. The use of the bow.

Among the English artillery, archery challengeth the pre-eminence, as peculiar to our nation. Camd.

2. The act of shooting with the bow.

Flower of this purple dye,
Hit with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye!
Shakesp. Mids. Night's Dream.

3. The art of an archer.

Blest seraphims shall leave their quire,
And turn love's soldiers upon thee,
To exercise their archery. Crashaw's Steps to Temple.

Say, from what golden quivers of the sky
Do all thy winged arrows fly?
Swiftness and power by birth are thine.
'Tis (I believe) this archery to shew,
That so much cost in colours thou,
And skill in painting, dost bestow
Upon thy ancient arms, the gaudy heavenly bow.
Cowley.

A'RCHES-COURT. n. s. [from arches and court.] The chief and most ancient consistory, that belongs to the archbishop of Canterbury, for the debating of spiritual causes; so called from Bow-Church in London, where it is kept; whose top is raised of stone-pillars, built archwise. The judge of this court is termed the dean of the arches, or official of the arches-court: dean of the arches, because with this office is commonly joined a peculiar jurisdiction of thirteen parishes in London, termed a deanery, being exempted from the authority of the bishop of London, and belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury; of which the parish of Bow is one. Some others say, that he was first called dean of the arches, because the official to the archbishop, the dean of the arches, was his substitute in his court; and by that means the names became confounded. The jurisdiction of this judge is ordinary, and extends through the whole province of Canterbury: so that, upon any appeal, he forthwith, and without any further examination of the cause, sends out his citation to the party appealed; and his inhibition to the judge, from whom the appeal is made. Cowell.

A'RCHETYPE. n. s. [archetypum, Lat.] The original, of which any resemblance is made.

Our souls, though they might have perceived images themselves, by simple sense; yet it seems inconceivable, how they should apprehend their archetypes. Glanville's Scepsis.

As a man, a tree, are the outward objects of our perception, and the outward archetypes or patterns of our ideas; so our sensations of hunger, cold, are also inward archetypes or patterns of our ideas. But the notions or pictures of these things, as they are in the mind, are the ideas. Watts's Logick.

ARCHE'TYPAL. adj. [archetypus, Lat.] Original; being a pattern, from which copies are made.

Through contemplation's opticks I have seen
Him, who is fairer than the sons of men;
The source of good, the light archetypal. Norris.

ARCHEUS. n. s. [probably, from ἀρχὴ chief power.] A word by which Paracelsus seems to have meant a power, that presides over the animal œconomy, distinct from the rational soul.

ARCHIDIA'CONAL. adj. [from archidiaconus, Lat. an archdeacon.] Belonging to an archdeacon; as, this offence is liable to be censured in an archidiaconal visitation.

ARCHIEPI'SCOPAL. adj. [from archiepiscopus, Lat. an archbishop.] Belonging to an archbishop; as, Canterbury is an archiepiscopal see; the suffragans are subject to archiepiscopal jurisdiction.

A'RCHITECT. n. s. [architectus, Lat.]

1. A professor of the art of building.

The architect's glory consists in the designment and idea of the work; his ambition should be, to make the form triumph over the matter. Wotton.

2. A contriver of a building; a builder.

The hasty multitude
Admiring enter'd; and the work some praise,
And some the architect: his hand was known
In heav'n, by many a tow'red structure high;
Where sceptr'd angels held their residence,
And sat as princes. Milton.

3. The contriver or former of any compound body.

This inconvenience the divine architect of the body obviated. Ray on the Creation.

4. The contriver of any thing.

An irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes. Shakesp.

ARCHITE'CTIVE. adj. [from architect.] That performs the works of architecture.

How could the bodies of many of them, particularly the last mentioned, be furnished with architective materials? Derh. Physico-Theology.

ARCHITECTO'NICK. adj. [from ἀρχὴ chief, and τέκτων an artificer.] That, which has the power or skill of an architect; that, which can build or form any thing.

To say, that some more fine part of either, or all the hypostatical principle, is the architect of this elaborate structure; is to give occasion to demand, what proportion of the tria prima afforded this architectonick spirit, and what agent made so skilful and happy a mixture. Boyle.

ARCHITE'CTURE. n. s. [architectura, Lat.]

1. The art or science of building.

Architecture is divided into civil architecture, called by way of eminence architecture; military architecture, or fortification; and naval architecture, which, besides building of ships and vessels, includes also ports, moles, docks, &c. Chambers.

Our fathers next, in architecture skill'd,
Cities for use, and forts for safety build:
Then palaces and lofty domes arose;
These for devotion, and for pleasure those.
Blackmore.

2. The effect or performance of the science of building.

The formation of the first earth being a piece of divine architecture, ascribed to a particular providence. Burnet's Theology.

A'RCHITRAVE. n. s. [from ἀρχὴ chief, and trabs, Lat. a beam; because it is supposed to represent the principal beam in timber buildings.] That part of a column, or order of a column, which lies immediately upon the capital, and is the lowest member of the entablature. This member is different in the different orders; and, in building architrave doors and windows, the workman frequently follows his own fancy. The architrave is sometimes called the reason piece, or master-beam, in timber buildings; as porticos, cloysters, &c. In chimnies, it is called the mantle-piece; and over jambs of doors, and lintels of windows, hyperthyron. Builder's Dict.

The materials, laid over this pillar, were of wood; through the lightness whereof, the architrave could not suffer, nor the column itself, being so substantial. Wotton's Architecture.

Westward a pompous frontispiece appear'd
On Doick pillars of white marble rear'd,
Crown'd with an architrave of antique mold,
And sculpture rising on the roughen'd gold. Pope.

A'RCHIVES. n. s. without a singular. [archiva, Lat.] The places, where records or ancient writings are kept. It is perhaps sometimes used for the writings themselves.

Though we think, our words vanish with the breath that utters them; yet they become records in God's court, and are laid up in his archives, as witnesses either for or against us. Got. of the Tong.

I shall now only look a little into the Mosaic archives, to observe what they furnish us with, upon this subject. Woodward.

A'RCHWISE. adv. [from arch and wise.] In the form of an arch.

The court of arches, so called ab arcuata ecclesia, or from Bow church, by reason of the steeple or clochier thereof, raised at the top with stone pillars, in fashion of a bow bent archwise. Ayliffe's Parer.

ARCI'TENENT. adj. [arcitenens, Lat.] Bow-bearing. Dict.

ARCTA'TION. n. s. [from arcto to straiten.] Straitening; confinement to a narrower compass.

A'RCTICK. n. s. [from ἄρκτος a bear, the northern constellation.] Northern lying under the Arctos, or bear. See ARTICK.

Ever during snows, perpetual shades
Of darkness, would congeal their livid blood;
Did not the arctick tract spontaneous yield
A cheering purple berry, big with wine. Philips.

A'RCTICK Circle. The circle, at which the northern frigid zone begins.

A'RCUATE. adj. [arcuatus, Lat.] Bent in the form of an arch.

The cause of the confusion in sounds, and the inconfusion of species visible, is for that, the sight worketh in right lines; but sounds, that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

In the gullet, where it perforateth the midriff, the carneous fibres are infected and arcuate. Ray on the Creation.

A'RCUATILE. adj. [from arcuate.] Bent; inflected. Dict.

ARCUA'TION. n. s. [from arcuate.]

2. The state of being bent; curvity, or crookedness.
3. [In gardening.] The method of raising by layers such trees, as cannot be raised from seed, or that bear no seed; as the elm, lime, alder, willow: and is so called, from bending down to the ground the branches, which spring from the off-sets or stools after they are planted. Chamb.

A'RCUATURE. n. s. [arcuatura, low Lat.] The bending or curvature of an arch. Dict.

ARCUBA'LISTER. n. s. [from arcus, a bow, and balista an engine.] A crossbow-man.

King John was espied, by a very good arcubalister; who said, that he would soon dispatch the cruel tyrant. God forbid, vile varlet, quoth the earl, that we should procure the death of the holy one of God. Camden's Remains

ARD. [Saxon.] Signifies natural disposition; as, Goddard, is a divine temper; Reinard, a sincere temper; Giffard, a bountiful and liberal disposition; Bernard, filial affection. Gibson's Camden.

A'RDENCY. n. s. [from ardent.] Ardour; eagerness; warmth of affection.

Accepted our prayers shall be, if qualified with humility, and ardency, and perseverance, so far as concerns the end immediate to them. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.

The ineffable happiness of our dear Redeemer must needs bring an increase to our's, commensurate to the ardency of our love for him. Boyle.

A'RDENT. adj. [ardens, Lat. burning.]

1. Hot; burning; fiery.

Chymists observe, that vegetables (as lavender, rue, marjoram, &c.) distilled before fermentation, yield oils without any burning spirits; but, after fermentation, yield ardent spirits without oils: which shews that the oil is, by fermentation, converted into spirit. Newton's Opticks

2. Fierce; vehement; having the appearance or quality of fire.

A knight of swarthy face,
High on a cold black steed, pursued the chace;
With flashing flames his ardent eyes were fill'd. Dryden.

3. Passionate; affectionate: used generally of desire.

Another nymph with fatal pow'r may rise,
To damp the sinking beams of Cælia's eyes;
With haughty pride may hear her charms confest,
And scorn the ardent vows that I have blest. Prior.

A'RDENTLY. adv. [from ardent.] Eagerly; affectionately.

With true zeal may our hearts be most ardently inflamed to our religion. Spratt's Sermons.

A'RDOUR. n. s. [ardor, Lat. heat.]

1. Heat.

Joy, like a ray of the sun, reflects with a greater ardour and quickness, when it rebounds upon a man from the breast of his friend. South.

2. Heat of affection; as, love, desire, courage.

The soldiers shout around with gen'rous rage;
He prais'd their ardour, inly pleas'd to see
His host. Dryden.

Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd,
And the vain ardours of our love restrain'd. Pope.

3. The person ardent or bright. This is only used by Milton.

Nor delay'd the winged saint,
After his charge receiv'd; but, from among
Thousand celestial ardours, where he stood
Veil'd with his gorgeous wings, up-springing light,
Flew thro' the midst of heav'n. Paradise Lost.

ARDU'ITY. n. s. [from arduous.] Height; difficulty. Dict.

A'RDUOUS. adj. [arduus, Lat.]

1. Lofty; hard to climb.

High on Parnassus' top her sons she show'd,
And pointed out those arduous paths they trod. Pope.

2. Difficult.

It was a means, to bring him up in the school of arts and policy; and so to fit him for that great and arduous employment, that God designed him to. South.

A'RDUOUSNESS. n. s. [from arduous.] Height; difficulty.

ARE. The plural of the present tense of the verb to be; as, young men are rash, old are cautious.

A'RE. or Alamire. The lowest note but one in Guido's scale of musick.

Gamut I am, the ground of all accord,
Are to plead Hortensio's passion;
B mi Bianca take him for thy lord,
C faut, that loves with all affection. Shakesp.

A'REA. n. s. [Latin.]

1. The surface, contained between any lines or boundaries.

The area of a triangle is found, by knowing the height and the base. Watts's Logick.

2. Any open surface, as, the floor of a room; the open part of a church; the vacant part or stage of an amphitheatre. An inclosed place, as lists, or a bowling-green, or grass-plot.

Let us conceive a floor or area of goodly length, with the breadth somewhat more than half the longitude. Wotton.

The Alban lake is of an oval figure; and, by reason of the high mountains that encompass it, looks like the area of some vast amphitheatre. Addison.

In areas vary'd with Mosaick art,
Some whirl the disk, and some the jav'lin dart. Pope.

To* ARE'AD, or ARE'ED. v. a. [aneban, Sax. to counsel.] To advise; to direct.

Knights and ladies gentle deeds;
Whose praises having slept in silence long,
Me, all too meane, the sacred muse areeds
To blazon broad. Fairy Queen.

But mark, what I aread thee now. Avant!
Fly thither, whence thou fled'st! If from this hour
Within these hallow'd limits thou appear,
Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd. Paradise Lost.

ARE'FACTION. n. s. [arefacio, Lat. to dry.] The state of growing dry; the act of drying.

From them, and their motions, principally proceed arefaction, and most of the effects of nature. Bacon.

Your mind is tossing on the ocean;
There, where your argosies with portly sail,
Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakesp.

To* A'RGUE. v. n. [arguo, Lat.]

1. To reason; to offer reasons.

Know, your majesty has always lov'd her
So dear in heart, not to deny her, what
A woman of less place might ask by law;
Scholars, allow'd freely to argue for her. Shakesp.

Publick arguing oft serves not only to exasperate the minds, but to whet the wits of hereticks. Decay of Piety.

An idea of motion, not passing on, would perplex any one, who should argue from such an idea Locke.

2. To persuade by argument.

It is a sort of poetical logick, which I would make use of, to argue you into a protection of this play. Congreve's Ded. to Old Batchelor.

3. To dispute; with the particles with or against before the opponent, and against before the thing opposed.

Why do Christians, of several persuasions, so fiercely argue against the salvability of each other? Decay of Piety.

He, that by often arguing against his own sense, imposes falsehoods on others, is not far from believing himself. Locke.

I do not see, how they can argue with any one, without setting down strict boundaries. Locke.

To ARGUE. v. a.

1. To prove any thing by argument.

If the world's age and death be argued well,
By the sun's fall, which now towards earth doth bend;
Then we might fear, that virtue (since she fell So low as woman) should be near her end. Donne.

2. To debate any question; as, to argue a cause.

3. To prove, as an argument.

So many laws argue so many sins
Among them: how can God with such reside? Milton.

It argues distemper of the mind as well as of the body when a man is continually tossing from one side to the other. South.

This argues a virtue and disposition in those sides of the rays, which answers to that virtue and disposition of the chrystal. Newton's Opticks.

4. To charge with, as a crime: with of.

I have pleaded guilty, to all thoughts and expressions of mine, which can be truly argued of obscenity, profaneness, or immorality; and retract them. Dryden's Fables.

The accidents are not the same, which would have argued him of a servile copying, and total barrenness of invention; yet the seas were the same. Dryden's Fables.

A'RGUER. n. s. [from argue.] A reasoner; a disputer; a controvertist.

Men are ashamed to be proselytes to a weak arguer, as thinking, they must part with their reputation as well as their sin. Decay of Piety.

Neither good Christians, nor good arguers. Atterbury.

A'RGUMENT. n. s. [argumentum, Lat.]

1. A reason alleged, for or against anything.

We sometimes see, on our theatres, vice rewarded, at least unpunished; yet it ought not to be an argument against the art. Dryden.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments, as that thing is capable of, supposing it were; we ought not in reason, to make any doubt of the existence of that thing. Tillotson.

Our authors two great and only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren. Locke.

2. The subject of any discourse or writing.

That she, who ev'n but now was your best object,
Your praise's argument, balm of your age,
Dearest and best. Shakesp. King Lear.

To the height of this great argument,
I may assert eternal providence,
And justify the ways of God to man. Milton.

Sad task! yet argument
Not less, but more heroick, than the wrath
Of stern Achilles. Milton.

A much longer discourse, my argument requires; your merciful dispositions, a much shorter. Spratt.

3. The contents of any work, summed up by way of abstract.

The argument of the work, that is, its principal action, the œconomy and disposition of it, are the things, which distinguish copies from originals. Dryden.

4. A controversy.

This day, in argument upon a case,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me. Shakesp.

An argument, that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mistresses. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

If the idea be not agreed on, betwixt the speaker and hearer; the argument is not about things, but names. Locke.

5. It has sometimes the particle to before the thing to be proved, but generally for.

The best moral argument to patience, in my opinion, is the advantage of patience itself. Tillot.

This, before that revelation had enlightened the world, was the very best argument for a future state. Atterbury.

6. [In astronomy.] An arch by which we seek another unknown arch, proportional to the first. Chambers.

ARGUME'NTAL. adj. [from argument.] Belonging to argument; reasoning.

Afflicted sense thou kindly dost set free,
Oppress'd with argumental tyranny;
And routed reason finds a safe retreat in thee. Pope.

ARGUMENTA'TION. n. s. [from argument.] Reasoning; the act of reasoning.

Argumentation is that operation of the mind, whereby we infer one proposition, from two or more propositions premised: or it is the drawing a conclusion, which before was unknown or doubtful, from some propositions more known and evident; so, when we have judged, that matter cannot think, and that the mind of man doth think; we conclude, that therefore the mind of man is not matter. Watts's Logick.

I suppose, it is no ill topick of argumentation, to shew the prevalence of contempt, by the contrary influences of respect. South.

His thoughts must be masculine, full of argumentation, and that sufficiently warm. Dryd.

The whole course of his argumentation comes to nothing. Addison.

ARGUME'NTATIVE. adj. [from argument.]

1. Consisting of argument; containing argument.

This omission (considering the bounds, within which the argumentative part of my discourse was confined) I could not avoid. Atterbury.

2. Sometimes with of, but rarely.

Another thing, argumentative of Providence, is that pappous plumage, growing upon the tops of some seeds; whereby they are wafted with the wind, and disseminated far and wide. Ray.

Shall build a wond'rous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household, from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milton.

2. The repository of the covenant of God with the Jews.

This coffer was of shittim wood, covered with plates or leaves of gold, being two cubits and a half in length, a cubit and a half wide, and a cubit and a half high. It had two rings of gold on each side, through which the staves were put for carrying it: upon the top of it was a kind of gold crown, all around it; and two cherubim were fastened to the cover: it contained the two tables of stone, written by the hand of God. Calmet.

A'RM. n. s. [earm, eorm, Sax.]

1. The limb, which reaches from the hand to the shoulder.

If I have lift up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate; then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone. Job.

Like helpless friends, who view from shore
The lab'ring ship, and hear the tempest roar;
So stood they, with their arms across. Dryden.

2. The bough of a tree.

The trees spread out their arms, to shade her face;
But she on elbow lean'd. Sidney.

Where the tall oak his spreading arms entwines,
And with the beech a mutual shade combines. Gay.

3. An inlet of water from the sea.

Full in the centre of the sacred wood,
An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood. Dryd. Æn.

We have yet seen but an arm of this sea of beauty. Norris.

4. Power; might. In this sense is used the secular arm, &c.

Cursed be the man, that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm; and whose heart departeth from the Lord. Jer. xvii. 5.

O God, thy arm was here!
And not to us, but to thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all. Shakesp. Hen. V.

A'RM'S END. n. s. A phrase, taken from boxing; in which the weaker man may overcome the stronger, if he can keep him from closing.

Such a one, as can keep him at arm's end, need never wish for a better companion. Sidney's Arcad.

For my sake be comfortable: hold death a while at the arm's end. Shakespeare.

In the same sense is used arm's length.

To* A'RM. v. a. [armo, Lat.]

And, when Abram heard, that his brother was taken captive; he armed his trained servants, born in his own house, three hundred and eighteen; and pursued them unto Dan. Genesis.

True conscious honour is, to feel no sin;
He's arm'd without, that's innocent within. Pope.

2. To plate with any thing, that may add strength.

Their wounded steeds
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters. Shakespeare.

3. To furnish; to fit up; as, to arm a loadstone, is to case it with iron.

You must arm your hook, with the line in the inside of it. Walton's Angler.

Having wasted the callus, I left off those tents; and dressed it with others, armed with digestives. Wiseman's Surgery.

4. To provide against.

His servant arm'd against such coverture,
Reported unto all, that he was sure
A noble gentleman of high regard. Spenser.

To* A'RM. v. n. To take arms; to be fitted with arms.

Think we king Harry strong;
And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet him. Shakespeare.

ARMA'DA. n. s. [Span. a fleet of war.] An armament for sea; a fleet of war. It is often erroneously spelt armado.

In all the mid-earth seas was left no road,
Wherein the pagan his bold head untwines;
Spread was the huge armado wide and broad,
From Venice, Genes, and towns which them confine. Fairfax.

So by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armado of collected sail
Is scatter'd, and disjoin'd from fellowship. Shakes.

At length, resolv'd t' assert the wat'ry ball,
He in himself did whole armados bring:
Him aged seamen might their master call,
And chose for general, were he not their king. Dryd.

ARMADI'LLO. n. s. [Spanish] A four footed animal of Brazil, as big as a cat; with a snout, like a hog; a tail, like a lizard; and feet like a hedge-hog. He is armed all over with hard scales like armour, whence he takes his name; and retires under them, like the tortoise. He lives in holes, or in the water, being of the amphibious kind. His scales are of a bony or cartilaginous substance; but they are easily pierced. This animal hides himself a third part of the year, under ground. He feeds upon roots, sugar-canes, fruits, and poultry. When he is caught, he draws up his feet and head to his belly, and rolls himself up in a ball, which the strongest hand cannot open; and he must be brought near the fire, before he will shew his nose. His flesh is white, fat, tender; and more delicate, than that of a sucking pig. Trevoux.

ARRI'ERE BAN. n. s. [Casseneuve derives this word from arriere and ban: Ban denotes the convening of the noblesse or vassals, who hold fees immediately of the crown; and arriere, those who only hold of the king mediately.] A general proclamation, by which the king of France summons to the war, all that hold of him; both his own vassals or the noblesse, and the vassals of his vassals.

ARRI'ERE FEE, or FIEF. Is a fee, dependant on a superiour one. These fees commenced, when dukes and counts, rendering their governments hereditary, distributed to their officers parts of the domains, and permitted those officers to gratify the soldiers under them in the same manner.

ARRI'ERE VA'SSAL. The vassal of a vassal. Trevoux.

ARRI'SION. n. s. [arrisio, Lat.] A smiling upon. Dict.

ARRI'VAL. n. s. [from arrive.] The act of coming to any place; and, figuratively, the attainment of any purpose.

How are we chang'd, since we first saw the queen! She, like the sun, does still the same appear; Bright, as she was at her arrival here. Waller.

The unravelling is the arrival of Ulysses upon his own island. Broome's View of Epic Poetry.

ARRI'VANCE. n. s. [from arrive.] Company coming: not in use.

Every minute is expectancy Of more arrivance. Shakesp.

To ARRI'VE. v. n. [arriver, Fr. to come on shore.]

1. To come to any place by water.

At length arriving on the banks of Nile, Wearied with length of ways, and worn with toil, She laid her down. Dryden.

2. To reach any place by travelling.

When we were arrived, upon the verge of his estate; we stopped at a little inn, to rest ourselves and our horses. Sidney.

3. To reach any point.

The bounds of all body, we have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress. Locke.

4. To gain any thing by progressive approach.

It is the highest wisdom, by despising the world to arrive at heaven; they are blessed, who converse with God. Taylor.

The virtuous may know in speculation, what they could never arrive at by practice; and avoid the snares of the crafty Addison.

5. The thing, at which we arrive, is always supposed to be good.

6. To happen; with to before the person. This sense seems not proper.

Happy! to whom this glorious death arrives; More to be valued, than a thousand lives. Waller.

To ARRO'DE. v. a. [arrodo, Lat.] To gnaw or nibble. Dict.

A'RROGANCE. } n. s. [arrogantia, Lat.]
A'RROGANCY. } The act or quality of taking much upon one's self; that species of pride, which consists in exorbitant claims.

Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife, And loves not me; be you, good lord, assur'd, I hate not you for her proud arrogance. Shakesp.

Pride hath no other glass To shew itself, but pride: for supple knees Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees. Shak.

Pride and arrogance, and the evil way, and the froward mouth, do I hate. Prov. viii. 13.

Discoursing of matters dubious, and on any controvertible truths, we cannot, without arrogancy, entreat a credulity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Humility it expresses by the stooping and bending of the head; arrogance, when it is lifted, or (as we say) tossed up. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

A'RROGANT. adj. [arrogans, Lat.] Given to make exorbitant claims; haughty; proud.

Feagh's right unto that country, which he claims, or the signiory therein, must be vain and arrogant. Spenser on Ireland.

An arrogant way of treating with other princes and states, is natural to popular governments. Temple.

A'RROGANTLY. adv. [from arrogant.] In an arrogant manner.

Our poet may Himself admire the fortune of his play And arrogantly, as his fellows do, Think he writes well, because he pleases you. Dry.

Another, warm'd With high ambition, and conceit of prowess Inherent, arrogantly thus presum'd; What if this sword, full often drench'd in blood, Should now cleave sheer the execrable head Of Churchill. Philips.

A'RROGANTNESS. n. s. [from arrogant.] The same with arrogance; which see. Dict.

To A'RROGATE. v. a. [arrogo, Lat.] To claim vainly; to exhibit unjust claims, prompted only by pride.

I intend, to describe this battle fully, not to derogate any thing from one nation, or to arrogate to the other. Hayward.

The popes arrogated unto themselves, that the empire was held of them in homage. Sir Walter Raleigh.

Who, not content With fair equality, fraternal state, Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd Over his brethren. Milton.

Rome never arrogated to herself any infallibility, but what she pretended to be founded upon Christ's promise. Tillotson.

ARROGA'TION. n. s. [from arrogate.] A claiming in a proud unjust manner. Dict.

ARRO'SION. n. s. [from arrosus, Lat.] A gnawing. Dict.

A'RROW. n. s. [apepe, Sax.] The pointed weapon, which is shot from a bow. Darts are thrown by the hand: but in poetry they are confounded.

I swear to thee by Cupid's strongest bow, By his best arrow with the golden head. Shakesp.

Here were boys so desperately resolved, as to pull arrows out of their flesh; and deliver them, to be shot again, by the archers on their side. Hayward.

A'RROWHEAD. n. s. [from arrow and head.] A water plant; so called, from the resemblance of its leaves to the head of an arrow. Dict.

A'RROWY. adj. [from arrow.] Consisting of arrows.

He saw them, in their forms of battle rang'd; How quick they wheel'd, and flying behind them shot, Sharp sleet of arrowy show'r against the face Of their pursuers, and o'ercame by flight. Milton.

A'RSE. n. s. [eapre, Sax.] The buttocks, or hind part of an animal.

To hang an A'RSE. A vulgar phrase, signifying to be tardy, sluggish, or dilatory.

For Hudibras wore but one spur; As wisely knowing, could he stir To active trot one side of 's horse, The other would not hang an arse. Hudibras

A'RSE-FOOT. n. s. A kind of water fowl, called also a didapper. Dict.

A'RSE-SMART. n. s. [persicaria, Lat.] An herb.

A'RSENAL. n. s. [arsenale, Ital.] A repository of things requisite to war; a magazine of military stores.

I would have a room, for the old Roman instruments of war; where you might see all the ancient military furniture, as it might have been in an arsenal of old Rome. Addison.

ARSE'NICAL. adj. [from arsenick.] Containing arsenick; consisting of arsenick.

An hereditary consumption, or one engendered by arsenical fumes under ground, is incapable of cure. Harvey.

There are arsenical, or other like noxious minerals, lodged underneath. Woodward

A'RSENICK. n. s. [ἀρσένικον.] A ponderous mineral substance, volatile and uninflammable; which gives a whiteness to metals in fusion, and proves a violent corrosive poison; of which there are three sorts. Native or yellow arsenick, called also auripigmentum or orpiment, is chiefly found in copper mines. White or crystalline arsenick is extracted from the native kind, by subliming it with a proportion of sea salt: the smallest quantity of crystalline arsenick, being mixed with any metal, absolutely destroys its malleability; and a single grain will turn a pound of copper into a beautiful seeming silver, but without ductility. Red arsenick is a preparation of the white, made by adding to it a mineral sulphur. Chambers.

Arsenick is a very deadly poison; held to the fire, it emits fumes, but liquates very little. Woodward on Fossils.

ART. n. s. [arte, Fr. ars, Lat.]

1. The power of doing something not taught by nature and instinct; as, to walk is natural, to dance is an art.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims, by which a man is governed and directed in his actions. South.

Blest with each grace of nature and of art. Pope.

Ev'n copious Dryden wanted or forgot
The last and greatest art, the art to blot. Pope.

2. A science; as, the liberal arts.

Arts, that respect the mind, were ever reputed nobler, than those that serve the body. Ben Jonson.

When did his pen on learning fix a brand,
Or rail at arts he did not understand? Dryden.

3. A trade.

This observation is afforded us by the art of making sugar. Boyle.

4. Artfulness; skill; dexterity.

The art of our necessities is strange,
That can make vile things precious. Shakesp.

5. Cunning.

More matter, with less art. Shakesp.

6. Speculation.

I have as much of this in art, as you;
But yet my nature could not bear it so. Shakesp.

ARTE'RIAL. adj. [from artery.] That, which relates to the artery; that, which is contained in the artery.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame;
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in the arterial road. Blackmore.

As this mixture of blood and chyle passeth through the arterial tube, it is pressed by two contrary forces; that of the heart, driving it forward against the sides of the tube; and the elastick force of the air, pressing it on the opposite sides of those air-bladders, along the surface of which this arterial tube creeps. Arbuthnot.

ARTERIO'TOMY. n. s. [from ἀρτηρία, and τέμνω to cut.] The operation of letting blood from the artery: a practice much in use among the French.

A'RTERY. n. s. [arteria, Lat.] An artery is a conical canal, conveying the blood from the heart to all parts of the body. Each artery is composed of three coats; of which the first seems to be a thread of fine blood vessels and nerves, for nourishing the coats of the artery; the second is made up of circular, or rather spiral fibres, of which there are more or fewer strata, according to the bigness of the artery: these fibres have a strong elasticity, by which they contract themselves with some force, when the power by which they have been stretched out ceases. The third and inmost coast is a fine transparent membrane, which keeps the blood within its canal; that otherwise, upon the dilatation of an artery, would easily separate the spiral fibres from one another. As the arteries grow smaller, these coats grow thinner, and the coats of the veins seem only to be continuations of the capillary arteries. Quincy.

The arteries are elastic tubes, endued with a contractile force, by which they drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbuthnot.

A'RTFUL. adj. [from art and full.]

1. Performed with art.

The last of these was certainly the most easy; but, for the same reason, the least artful. Dryden.

2. Artificial; not natural.

3. Cunning; skilful; dexterous.

O still the same, Ulysses, she rejoin'd;
In useful craft, successfully refin'd;
Artful in speech, in action, and in mind. Pope.

A'RTFULLY. adv. [from artful.] With art; skilfully; dexterously.

The rest in rank: Honoria, chief in place,
Was artfully contriv'd to set her face,
To front the thicket, and behold the chace. Dryden.

Vice is the natural growth of our corruption. How irresistibly must it prevail, when the seeds of it are artfully sown, and industriously cultivated! Rogers.

A'RTFULNESS. n. s. [from artful.]

1. Skill.

Consider, with how much artfulness his bulk and situation is contrived; to have just matter, to draw round him these massy bodies. Cheyne.

2. Cunning.

ARTHRI'TICAL. } adj. [from arthritis.]
ARTHRI'TICK. }

1. Gouty; relating to the gout.

Frequent changes produce all the arthritick diseases. Arbuthnot.

2. Relating to joints.

Serpents, worms, and leaches, though some want bones, and all extended articulations, yet have they arthritical analogies; and, by the motion of fibrous and musculous parts, are able to make progression. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

ARTHRITIS. n. s. [ἀρθρίτις, from ἄρθρον a joint.] Any distemper that affects the joints; but the gout particularly. Quincy.

A'RTICHOKE. n. s. [artichault, Fr.]

This plant is very like the thistle; but hath large scaly heads, shaped like the cone of the pine tree: the bottom of each scale, as also at the bottom of the florets, is a thick fleshy eatable substance. Miller

No herbs have curled leaves, but cabbage and cabbage lettuce; none have double leaves, one belonging to the stalk, another to the fruit or seed, but the artichoke. Bacon

Artichokes contain a rich, nutritious, stimulating juice. Arbuthnot on Aliments

A'RTICHOKE of Jerusalem. A species of sun flower.

A'RTICK. adj. [it should be written arctick, from ἀρκτικὸς.] Northern; under the Bear. See ARCTICK.

But they would have winters, like those beyond the artick circle; for the sun would be 80 degrees from them. Brown.

In the following example it is, contrary to custom, spelt after the French manner, and accented on the last syllable.

To you, who live in chill degree
As map informs, of fifty-three;
And do not much for cold atone,
By bringing thither fifty-one;
Methinks all climes should be alike,
From tropick, c'en to pole artique. Dryden.

A'RTICLE. n. s. [articulus, Lat.]

1. A part of speech, as, the, an; the man, an ox.

2. A single clause of an account; a particular part of any complex thing.

Laws, touching matters of order, are changeable by the power of the church; articles concerning doctrine, not so. Hooker.

Have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve to shew in articles. Shakesp.

Many believe the article of remission of sins, but believe it without the condition of repentance. We believe the article otherwise, than God intended it. Taylor's Holy Living.

All the precepts, promises, and threatenings of the gospel, will rise up in judgment against us; and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation: and the great weight of our charge will be this, That we did not obey the gospel, which we professed to believe; that we made confession of the Christian faith, but lived like Heathens. Tillotson.

You have small reason, to repine upon that article of life. Swift.

3. Terms; stipulations.

I embrace these conditions; let us have articles between us. Shakesp.

It would have gall'd his surly nature,
Which easily endures not article,
Tying him to aught. Shakesp.

4. Point of time; exact time.

If Cansfield had not, in that article of time, given them that brisk charge, by which other troops were ready; the king himself had been in danger. Clarendon.

To A'RTICLE. v. n. [from the noun article.] To stipulate; to make terms.

Such, in love's warfare, is my case;
I may not article for grace,
Having put love at last to show this face. Donne.

He had not infringed the least tittle of what was articled, that they aimed at one mark, and their ends were concentrick. Howel's Vocal Forest.

If it be said, God chose the successor; that is manifestly not so in the story of Jephtha, where he articled with the people, and they made him judge over them. Locke

To ARTI'CLE. v. a. To draw up in particular articles.

He, whose life seems fair; yet, if all his errours and follies were articled against him, the man would seem vicious and miserable. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

ARTI'CULAR. adj. [articularis, Lat.] Belonging to the joints. In medicine, an epithet, applied to a disease, which more immediately infests the joints. Thus the gout is called morbus articularis.

ARTI'CULATE. adj. [from articulus, Lat.]

1. Distinct; divided, as the parts of a limb are divided by joints; not continued in one tone, as, articulate sounds; that is, sounds varied and changed at proper pauses, in opposition to the voice of animals, which admit no such variety. An articulate pronunciation, a manner of speaking clear and distinct, in which one sound is not confounded with another.

In speaking under water, when the voice is reduced to an extreme exility, yet the articulate sounds, the words, are not confounded. Bacon.

The first, at least, of these I thought deny'd
To beasts; whom God, on their creation-day,
Created mute to all articulate sound. Milton.

Antiquity expressed numbers by the fingers on either hand. On the left, they accounted their digits and articulate numbers unto an hundred; on the right hand, hundreds and thousands. Brown's Vulgar Errours

2. Branched out into articles. This is a meaning little in use.

Henry's instructions were extreme curious and articulate; and, in them, more articles touching inquisition, than negotiation; requiring an answer in distinct articles to his questions. Bacon.

To ARTI'CULATE. v. a. [from article.]

1. To form words; to utter distinct syllables; to speak as a man.

The dogmatist knows not, by what art he directs his tongue, in articulating sounds into voices. Glanville.

Parisian academists, in their anatomy of apes, tell us; that the muscles of the tongue, which do most serve to articulate a word, were wholly like those of man. Ray on the Creation.

They would advance in knowledge, and not deceive themselves with a little articulated air. Locke.

2. To draw up in articles.

These things indeed, you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches,
To face the garment of rebellion
With some fine colour. Shakesp.

3. To make terms; to treat. These two latter significations are unusual.

Send us to Rome
The best, with whom we may articulate
For their own good and ours. Shakesp.

To ARTI'CULATE. v. n. To speak distinctly.

ARTI'CULATELY. adv. [from articulate.] In an articulate voice.

The secret purpose of our heart, no less articulately spoken to God, who needs not our words to discern our meaning. Decay of Piety.

ARTI'CULATENESS. n. s. [from articulate.] The quality of being articulate.

ARTICULA'TION. n. s. [from articulate.]

1. The juncture, or joint of bones.

With relation to the motion of the bones in their articulations, there is a twofold liquor prepared for the inunction and lubrification of their heads; an oily one, and a mucilaginous, supplied by certain glandules seated in the articulations. Ray.

2. The act of forming words.

I conceive, that an extreme small, or an extreme great sound, cannot be articulate; but that the articulation requireth a mediocrity of sound. Bacon

By articulation I mean a peculiar motion and figure of some parts belonging to the mouth, between the throat and lips. Holder.

3. [In botuny.] The joints or knots in some plants, as the cane.

A'RTIFICE. n. s. [artificium, Lat.]

2. Art; trade; skill obtained by science or practice.

ARTI'FICER. n. s. [artifex, Lat.]

1. An artist; a manufacturer; one, by whom any thing is made.

The lights, doors, and stairs, rather directed to the use of the guest, than to the eye of the artificer. Sidney.

The great artificer would be more than ordinarily exact, in drawing his own picture. South.

In the practices of artificers, and the manufactures of several kinds, the end being proposed, we find out ways. Locke.

2. A forger; a contriver.

He, soon aware,
Each perturbation smooth'd with outward calm,
Artificer of fraud! and was the first,
That practis'd falsehood under saintly show. Milton.
Th' artificer of lies
Renews th' assault, and his last batt'ry tries. Dryden.

3. A dexterous or artful fellow: not in use.

Let you alone, cunning artificer. Ben Jonson.

ARTIFI'CIAL. adj. [artificiel, Fr.]

1. Made by art; not natural.

Basilius used the artificial day of torches, to lighten the sports their inventions could contrive. Sidney.

The curtains, closely drawn the light to skreen,
As if he had contriv'd, to lie unseen:
Thus cover'd with an artificial night,
Sleep did his office. Dryden.

There is no natural motion perpetual; yet it doth not hinder, but that it is possible to contrive such an artificial revolution. Wilkins.

2. Fictitious; not genuine.

Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile;
And cry, Content, to that which grieves my heart;
And wet my cheeks, with artificial tears. Shakesp.

The resolution, which we cannot reconcile to public good, has been supported by an obsequious party; and then, with usual methods, confirmed by an artificial majority. Swift.

3. Artful; contrived with skill.

These seem to be the more artificial, as those of a single person the more natural governments. Temple.

ARTIFI'CIAL Arguments. [In rhetorick.] Are proofs on considerations, which arise from the genius, industry, or invention of the orator; which are thus called, to distinguish them from laws, authorities, citations, and the like, which are said to be inartificial arguments.

ARTIFI'CIAL Lines, on a sector or scale, are lines so contrived, as to represent the logarithmick sines and tangents; which, by the help of the line of numbers, solve (with tolerable exactness) questions in trigonometry, navigation, &c. Chambers.

ARTIFI'CIAL Numbers, are the same with logarithms.

ARTIFI'CIALLY. adv. [from artificial.]

1. Artfully; with skill; with good contrivance.

Bacon's Henry VII.

11. While; at the same time that.

At either end, it whistled as it flew;
And, as the brands were green, so dropp'd the dew;
Infected, as it fell, with sweat of sanguine hue.
Dryden.

These haughty words Alecto's rage provoke;
And frighted Turnus trembled, as she spoke.
Dryden.

So the pure limpid stream, when foul with stains
Of rushing torrents and descending rains,
Works itself clear; and, as it runs, refines.
Addison's Cato.

12. Because.

He, that commanded the injury to be done, is first bound; then he, that did it: and they also are obliged, who did so assist, as without them the thing could not have been done. Taylor.

13. Because it is; because they are.

The kernels draw out of the earth juice, fit to nourish the tree; as those, that would be trees themselves. Bacon.

14. Equally

Before the place
A hundred doors a hundred entries grace;
As many voices issue, and the sound
Of Sybil's words as many times rebound. Dryden.

15. How; in what manner.

Men are generally permitted to publish books, and contradict others, and even themselves, as they please, with as little danger of being confuted, as of being understood. Boyle.

16. With; answering to like or same.

Sister, well met! whither away so fast?—
—Upon the like devotion, as yourselves;
To gratulate the gentle princes there.
Shakesp. Richard III.

17. In a reciprocal sense, answering to as.

Every offence, committed in the state of nature, may in the state of nature be also punished; and as far forth, as it may in a commonwealth.
Locke.

As sure, as it is good, that human nature should exist; so certain it is, that the circular revolutions of the earth and planets (rather than other motions, which might as possibly have been) do declare God. Bentley.

18. Going before as, in a comparative sense; the first as being sometimes understood.

Sempronius is as brave a man as Cato. Addison.

Bright as the sun, and like the morning fair. Glan.

19. Answering to such.

Is it not every man's interest, that there should be such a governor of the world, as designs our happiness, as would govern us for our advantage?
Tillotson.

20. Having so to answer it; in a conditional sense.

As far, as they carry light and conviction to any other man's understanding; so far, I hope, my labours may be of use to him. Locke.

21. So is sometimes understood.

As in my speculations I have endeavoured, to extinguish passion and prejudice; I am still desirous of doing some good, in this particular. Specta.

22. Answering to so conditionally.

So may th' auspicious queen of love
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind;
As thou, to whom the muse commends
The best of poets and of friends,
Dost thy committed pledge restore. Dryden.

23. Before how, it is sometimes redundant; but this is in low language.

As how, dear Syphax? Addison's Cato.

24. It seems to be redundant before yet; to this time.

Though that war continued nine years, and this hath as yet lasted but six; yet there hath been much more action in the present war. Addison.

25. In a sense of comparison, followed by so.

As when a dab-chick waddles through the copse,
On feet and wings; and flies, and wades, and hops;
So lab'ring on, with shoulders, hands, and head,
Wide as a windmill all his figure spread. Pope.

26. As for; with respect to.

As for the rest of those, who have written against me, they deserve not the least notice.
Dryden's Fables, Preface.

27. As if; in the same manner that it would be, if.

Answering their questions, as if it were a matter that needed it. Locke.

28. As to; with respect to.

I pray thee, speak to me, as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of thoughts
The worst of words. Shakesp. Othello.

They pretend (in general) to great refinements, as to what regards Christianity. Addison on Italy.

I was mistaken, as to the day; placing that accident about thirty-six hours sooner, than it happened. Swift.

29. As well as; equally with.

Each man's mind has some peculiarity, as well as his face; that distinguishes him from all others.
Locke.

It is adorned with admirable pieces of sculpture, as well modern, as ancient. Addison on Italy.

30. As though; as if.

These should be at first gently treated, as though we expected an imposthumation. Sharp's Surg.

A'SA DUL'CIS. See BENZOIN.

A'SA FOE'TIDA. } A'SSA FOE'TIDA. } n. s. A gum or resin, brought from the East Indies, of a sharp taste, and a strong offensive smell; which is said to distil, during the heat of summer, from a little shrub. Chambers.

ASARABA'CCA. n. s. [asarum, Lat.] The name of a plant.

ASBE'STINE. adj. [from asbestos.] Something incombustible, or that partakes of the nature and qualities of the lapis asbestos.

ASBE'STOS. n. s. [ἄσβεστος.] A sort of native fossile stone, which may be split into threads and filaments, from one inch to ten inches in length, very fine, brittle, yet somewhat tractable, silky, and of a greyish colour. It is almost insipid to the taste, indissoluble in water, and endued with the wonderful property of remaining unconsumed in the fire: but, in two trials before the Royal Society, a piece of cloth, made of this stone, was found to lose a dram of its weight each time. This stone is found, in Anglesey in Wales, and in Aberdeenshire in Scotland. Chambers.

ASCA'RIDES. n. s. [from ἀσκαρίδης, from ἀσκαρίζω to leap.] Little worms in the rectum, so called from their continual troublesome motion, causing an intolerable itching. Quincy.

To ASCEND. v. n. [ascendo, Lat.]

1. To move upwards; to mount; to rise.

Then, to the heav'n of heav'ns, shall he ascend
With victory, triumphing through the air
Over his foes and thine. Milton.

2. To proceed from one degree of good to another.

By these steps we shall ascend, to more just ideas of the glory of Jesus Christ; who is intimately united to God, and is one with him.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. To stand higher in genealogy.

The only incest was in the ascending (not collateral) branch; as, when parents and children married, this was accounted incest.
Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

To ASCE'ND. v. a. To climb up any thing.

They ascend the mountains; they descend the vallies. Delaney's Revelation examined.

ASCE'NDABLE. adj. [from ascend.] That may be ascended. Dict.

ASCENDANT. n. s. [from ascend.]

1. The part of the ecliptick, at any particular time above the horizon; which is supposed by astrologers, to have great influence.

2. Height; elevation.

He was initiated, in order to gain instruction in sciences, that were there in their highest ascendant. Temple.

3. Superiority; influence.

By the ascendant he had in his understanding, and the dexterity of his nature, he could persuade him very much. Clarendon.

Some star (I find)
Has giv'n thee an ascendant o'er my mind. Dryd.

When they have got an ascendant over them, they should use it with moderation, and not make themselves scarecrows. Locke.

4. One of the degrees of kindred reckoned upwards.

The most nefarious kind of bastards, are incestuous bastards; which are begotten between ascendants and descendants, in infinitum; and between collaterals, as far as the divine prohibition.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

ASCE'NDANT. adj.

1. Superiour; predominant; overpowering.

Christ outdoes Moses, before he displaces him; and shews an ascendant spirit above him. South.

2. In an astrological sense, above the horizon.

Let him study the constellation of Pagasus, which is about that time ascendant. Brown's Vul. Er.

ASCE'NDENCY. n. s. [from ascend.] Influence; power.

Custom has some ascendency over understanding; and, what at one time seemed decent, appears disagreeable afterwards. Watts.

ASCE'NSION. n. s. [ascensio, Lat.]

1. The act of ascending or rising; frequently applied to the visible elevation of our Saviour to heaven.

Then, rising from his grave,
Spoil'd principalities and pow'rs, triumph'd,
In open shew; and, with ascension bright,
Captivity led captive through the air. Parad. Lost.

2. The thing rising, or mounting.

Men err, in the theory of inebriation; conceiving, the brain doth only suffer from vaporous ascensions from the stomach. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ASCE'NSION, in astronomy, is either right or oblique. Right ascension of the sun, or a star, is that degree of the equinoctial, counted from the beginning of Aries, which rises with the sun or star in a right sphere. Oblique ascension is an arch of the equator, intercepted between the first point of Aries, and that point of the equator, which rises together with a star in an oblique sphere.

ASCE'NSION-DAY. The day, on which the ascension of our Saviour is commemorated, commonly called Holy Thursday; the Thursday but one, before Whitsuntide.

ASCE'NSIONAL Difference, is the difference, between the right and oblique ascension of the same point to the surface of the sphere. Chambers.

ASCE'NSIVE. adv. [from ascend.] In a state of ascent: not in use.

The cold augments, when the days begin to increase, though the sun be then ascensive, and returning from the winter tropick. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ASCE'NT. n. s. [ascensus, Lat.]

1. Rise; the act of rising; the act of mounting.

To him with swift ascent he up return'd,
Into his blissful bosom reassum'd
In glory, as of old. Milton.

2. The way, by which one ascends.

The temple, and the several degrees of ascent, whereby men did climb up to the same, as if it had been a scala cæli, be all poetical and fabulous Bacon.

It was a rock,
Conspicuous far, winding with one ascent,
Accessible from earth, one entrance high. Milton.

3. An eminence, or high place.

No land like Italy erects the sight
By such a vast ascent, or swells to such a height. Addison.

A wide flat cannot be pleasant in the Elysian fields, unless it be diversified with depressed valleys and swelling ascents. Bentley.

To ASCERTA'IN. v. a. [acertener, Fr.]

1. To make certain; to fix; to establish.

The divine law both ascertaineth the truth, and supplieth unto us the want of other laws. Hooker.

Money differs from uncoined silver in this, that the quantity of silver in each piece is ascertained by the stamp. Locke.

2. To make confident; to take away doubt; often with of.

Right judgment of myself may give me the other certainty; that is, ascertain me, that I am in the number of God's children.
Hammond's Practical Catechism.

This makes us act, with a repose of mind and wonderful tranquillity; because it ascertains us, of the goodness of our work. Dryden's Dufresnoy

ASCERTA'INER. n. s. [from ascertain.] The person, that proves or establishes.

ASCERTA'INMENT. n. s. [from ascertain.] A settled rule; an established standard.

For want of ascertainment, how far a writer may express his good wishes for his country, innocent intentions may be charged with crimes.
Swift to Lord Middleton.

ASCE'TICK. adj. [ἀσκητικὸς.] Employed wholly in exercises of devotion and mortification.

None lived such long lives, as monks and hermits; sequestered from plenty, to a constant ascetick course of the severest abstinence and devotion. South.

ASCE'TICK. n. s. He, that retires to devotion and mortification; a hermit.

I am far from commending those asceticks; that, out of a pretence of keeping themselves unspotted from the world, take up their quarters in desarts. Norris.

He, that preaches to man, should understand what is in man: and that skill can scarce be attained by an ascetick in his solitudes. Atterbury.

A'SCII. n. s. It has no singular, [from a without, and σκιὰ a shadow.] Those people, who (at certain times of the year) have no shadow at noon: such are the inhabitants of the torrid zone; because they have the sun, twice a year, vertical to them. Dict.

ASCI'TES. n. s. [from ἀσκὸς a bladder.] A particular species of dropsy; a swelling of the lower belly and depending parts, from an extravasation and collection of water, broke out of its proper vessels. This case, when certain and inveterate, is universally allowed to admit of no cure, but by means of the manual operation of tapping. Quincy.

There are two kinds of dropsy: the anasarca, called also leucophlegmacy, when the extravasated matter swims in the cells of the membrana adiposa; and the ascites, when the water possesses the cavity of the abdomen. Sharp's Surgery.

ASCI'TICAL. } adj. [from ascites.] Be-
ASCI'TICK. } longing to an ascites; dropsical; hydropical.

When it is part of another tumour, it is hydropical, either anasarcous or ascitical.
Wiseman's Surgery.

Homer has been reckoned an ascititious name from some accident of his life. Pope.

ASCRI'BABLE, adj. [from ascribe.] That, which may be ascribed.

The greater part have been forward to reject it, upon a mistaken persuasion; that those phænomena are the effects of nature's abhorrency of a vacuum, which seem to be more fitly ascribable to the weight and spring of the air. Boyle.

To ASCRI'BE. v. a. [ascribo, Lat.]

1. To attribute to, as a cause.

The cause of his banishment is unknown; because he was unwilling to provoke the emperor, by ascribing it to any other reason, than what was pretended. Dryden.

To this we may justly ascribe those jealousies and encroachments, which render mankind uneasy to one another. Rogers.

2. To attribute, as a quality to persons, or accident to substance.

These perfections must be somewhere; and therefore may much better be ascribed to God, in whom we suppose all other perfections to meet, than to any thing else. Tillotson.

ASCRI'PTION. n. s. [ascriptio, Lat.] The act of ascribing. Dict.

ASCRI'PTITIOUS. adj. [ascriptitius, Lat.] That, which is ascribed. Dict.

ASH. n. s. [fraxinus, Lat. æsc, Saxon.]

1. A tree.

This tree hath pennated leaves, which end in an odd lobe. The male flowers, which grow at a remote distance from the fruit, have no petals, but consist of many stamina. The ovary becomes a seed vessel, containing one seed at the bottom, shaped like a bird's tongue. Miller.

With which of old he charm'd the savage train,
And call'd the mountain ashes to the plain. Dryden.

2. The wood of the ash.

Let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where against,
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scar'd the moon with splinters. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

ASHA'MED. adj. [from shame.] Touched with shame; generally with of before the cause of shame, if a noun; and to, if a verb.

Profess publickly the doctrine of Jesus Christ, not being ashamed of the word of God, or of any practices enjoined by it. Taylor's Holy Living.

One would have thought, she would have stirr'd, but strove
With modesty, and was asham'd to move. Dryden.

This I have shadowed, that you may not be asham'd of that hero, whose protection you undertake. Dryden.

ASH-COLOURED. adj. [from ash and colour.] Coloured between brown and grey, like the bark of an ashen branch.

Clay, ash-coloured, was part of a stratum, which lay above the strata of stone.
Woodward on Fossils.

A'SHEN. adj. [from ash.] Made of ash wood.

At once he said, and threw
His ashen spear; which quiver'd, as it flew. Dryd.

A'SHES. n. s. wants the singular. [æsce, Sax. asche, Dutch.]

1. The remains of any thing burnt.

Some relicks would be left of it, as when ashes remain of burned bodies. Digby on Bodies.

This late dissension, grown between the peers,
Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love,
And will at last break out into a flame.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

Ashes contain a very fertile salt, and are the best manure for cold lands, if kept dry, that the rain doth not wash away their salt. Mortimer's Husb.

2. The remains of the body; often used in poetry for the carcase, from the ancient practice of burning the dead.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood!
Shakespeare.

To great Laërtes I bequeath
A task of grief, his ornaments of death;
Lest, when the fates his royal ashes claim,
The Grecian matrons taint my spotless name.
Pope.

A'SHLAR, n. s. [with masons.] Free stones, as they come out of the quarry, of different lengths, breadths, and thicknesses.

A'SHLEERING. n. s. [with builders.] Quartering in garrets, about two foot and a half or three foot high, perpendicular to the floor, and reaching to the under side of the rafters. Builder's Dict.

ASHO'RE. adv. [from a and shore.]

1. On shore; on the land.

The poor Englishman riding in the road, having all that he brought thither ashore, would have been undone. Raleigh.

2. To the shore; to the land.

We may as bootless spend our vain command,
As send our precepts to the leviathan
To come ashore. Shakesp. Henry V.
May thy billows rowl ashore
The beryl, and the golden ore. Milton's Comus.
Moor'd in a Chian creek, ashore I went,
And all the following night in Chios spent.
Addison's Ovid.

ASH-WE'DNESDAY. n. s. The first day of Lent; so called, from the ancient custom of sprinkling ashes on the head.

A'SHWEED. n. s. [from ash and weed.] An herb.

A'SHY. adj. [from ash.] Ash-coloured; pale; inclining to a whitish grey.

Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless.
Shakesp.

ASI'DE. adv. [from a and side.]
1. To one side; out of the perpendicular direction.
The storm rush'd in, and Arcite stood aghast:
The flames were blown aside; yet shone they bright,
Fann'd by the wind; and gave a ruffled light.
Dryden.
2. To another part; out of the true direction.
He had no brother; which, though it be a comfortable thing for kings, to have; yet it draweth the subjects eyes a little aside. Bacon.
3. From the company; as, to speak aside.
He took him aside from the multitude.
Mark, vii. 33.

A'SINARY. adj. [asinarius, Lat.] Belonging to an ass. Dict.

A'SININE. adj. [from asinus, Lat.] Belonging to an ass.
You shall have more ado, to drive our dullest youth, our stocks and stubs, from such nurture; than we have now, to hale our choicest and hopefullest wits, to that asinine feast of sow-thistles and brambles. Milton.

To* ASK. v. a. [arcian, Saxon.]
1. To petition; to beg: sometimes with an accusative only; sometimes with for.
When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness. Shakesp.
We have nothing else to ask; but that,
Which you deny already: yet will ask;
That, if we fail in our request, the blame
May hang upon your hardness. Shakesp.
In long journies, ask your master leave to give ale to the horses. Swift
2. To demand; to claim: as, to ask a a price for goods.
Ask me never so much dowry and gift; and I will give, according as ye shall say unto me: but give me the damsel to wife. Genesis, xxxiv. 12.
He saw his friends; who, whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves. Dryden's Æneid.
3. To question.
O inhabitant of Aroer, stand by the way, and espy! ask him that flieth, and her that escapeth; and say, what is done. Jeremiah, xlviii. 19.
4. To enquire; with after before the thing.
He said, wherefore is it, that thou dost ask after my name? And he blessed him there.
Genesis, xxxii. 29.
5. To require; as physically necessary.
As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all sail; so to take it in and contract it, is no less praise, when the argument doth ask it. Ben Jonson.
A lump of ore, in the bottom of a mine, will be stirred by two men's strength; which, if you bring it to the top of the earth, will ask six men to stir it. Bacon.
The administration passes into different hands, at the end of two months; which contributes to dispatch: but any exigence of state asks a much longer time, to conduct any design to its maturity. Addison.

To* ASK. v. n.
1. To petition; to beg: with for before the thing.
My son, hast thou sinned? do so no more; but ask pardon for thy former sins. Ecclus. xxi. 1.
If he ask for bread, will he give him a stone?
Matt. vii. 9.
2. To make enquiry; with for or of before the thing. To enquire.
Stand ye in the ways, and see; and ask for the old paths, where is the good way; and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls.
Jerem. vi. 16.
For ask now, of the days that are past, which were before thee; since the day, that God created man upon the earth; and ask, from the one side of heaven unto the other; whether there hath been any such thing, as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it? Deut. iv. 32.

ASK, ASH, AS, do all come from the Saxon æsc, an ash tree. Gibson's Camden.

ASKA'NCE. } adv. Sideways; obliquely.
ASKA'UNCE. }

His wannish eyes upon them bent askance;
And when he saw their labours well succeed,
He wept for rage, and threaten'd dire mischance.
Fairfax.
Some say, he bid his angels turn askance
The poles of earth, twice ten degrees and more,
From the sun's axle: they with labour push'd
Oblique the centrick globe. Milton.

ASKA'UNT. adv. Obliquely; on one side.
At this Achilles roll'd his furious eyes,
Fix'd on the king askaunt; and thus replies,
O, impudent. Dryden.
Since the space, that lies on either side
The solar orb, is without limits wide;
Grant, that the sun had happen'd to prefer
A seat askaunt, but one diameter:
Lost to the light by that unhappy place,
This globe had lain a frozen loansome mass.
Blackmore.

A'SKER. n. s. [from ask.]
1. Petitioner.
Have you
Ere now denied the asker? and now again
On him, that did not ask but mock, bestow.
Shakesp.
The greatness of the asker, and the smallness of the thing asked, had been sufficient to enforce his request. South.
2. Enquirer.
Every asker being satisfied, we may conclude, that all their conceptions of being in a place are the same. Digby of Bodies.

A'SKER. n. s. A water newt.

ASKE'W. adv. [from a and skew.] Aside; with contempt.
For, when ye mildly look with lovely hue,
Then is my soul with life and love inspir'd:
But, when ye lowre, or look on me askew,
Then do I die. Spenser.
Then take it, Sir, as it was writ;
Nor look askew, at what it saith:
There's no petition in it. Prior.

To* ASLA'KE. v. a. [from a, and slake or slack.] To remit; to mitigate; to slacken. Obsolete.
But this continual, cruel, civil war
No skill can stint, nor reason can aslake. Spenser.
Whilst, seeking to aslake thy raging fire,
Thou in me kind lest much more great desire.
Spenser.

ASLA'NT. adv. [from a and slant.] Obliquely; on one side; not perpendicularly.
There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shews his hoar leaves in the glassy stream.
Shakesp. Hamlet.
He fell; the shaft
Drove thro' his neck, aslant: he spurns the ground;
And the soul issues, through the weazon's wound.
Dryden.

ASLE'EP. adv. [from a and sleep.]
1. Sleeping; at rest.
How many thousands of my poorest subjects
Are at this hour asleep! O gentle sleep,
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee!
Shakesp.
The diligence of trade, and noiseful gain,
And luxury, more late asleep were laid:
All was the night's; and, in her silent reign,
No sound the rest of nature did invade. Dryden.
There is no difference, between a person asleep, and in an apoplexy; but that the one can be awaked, and the other cannot. Arbuthnot on Diet.
2. To sleep.
If a man watch too long, it is odds but he will fall asleep. Bacon's Essays.
Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
By whispering winds soon lull'd asleep. Milton.

I have built a strong wall, faced to the south aspect with brick. Swift.

5. Disposition of any thing to something else; relation.

The light got from the opposite arguings of men of parts, shewing the different sides of things, and their various aspects and probabilities, would be quite lost, if every one were obliged to say after the speaker. Locke.

6. Disposition of a planet to other planets.

There's some ill planet reigns:
I must be patient, till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Not unlike that, which astrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aspect the one to the other. Wotton.

To the blank moon,
Her office they prescrib'd; to th' other five,
Their planetary motions and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite. Paradise Lost.

Why does not every single star shed a separate influence, and have aspects with other stars of their own constellation? Bentley's Sermons.

To ASPE'CT. v. a. [aspicio, Lat.] To behold: not used.

Happy in their mistake, those people, whom
The northern pole aspects; whom fear of death
(The greatest of all human fears) ne'er moves. Temple.

ASPE'CTABLE. adj. [aspectabilis, Lat.] Visible; being the object of sight.

He was the sole cause of this aspectable and perceivable universal. Raleigh.

ASPE'CTION. n. s. [from aspect.] Beholding; view.

A Moorish queen, upon aspection of the picture of Andromeda, conceived and brought forth a fair one. Brown.

AS'PEN, or ASP. n. s. [espe, Dutch; asp, Dan. espe, trembling, Sax. Somner. See POPLAR, of which it is a species. The leaves of this tree always tremble.]

The aspen or asp tree hath leaves much the same with the poplar, only much smaller, and not so white Mortimer.

The builder, oak sole king of forests all;
The aspen, good for statues; the cypress funeral. Spenser.

A'SPEN. adj. [from asp or aspen.]

1. Belonging to the asp tree.

Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble like aspen leaves upon a lute. Shakesp.

No gale disturbs the trees;
Nor aspen leaves confess the gentlest breeze. Gay.

2. Made of aspen wood.

A'SPER. adj. [Lat.] Rough; rugged. This word I have found only in the following passage.

All base notes, or very treble notes, give an asper sound; for that the base striketh more air, than it can well strike equally. Bacon.

To A'SPERATE. v. a. [aspero, Lat.] To roughen; to make rough or uneven.

Those corpuscles of colour, insinuating themselves into all the pores of the body to be dyed, may asperate its superficies, according to the bigness and texture of the corpuscles. Boyle.

ASPERA'TION. n. s. [from asperate.] A making rough. Dict.

ASPERIFO'LIOUS. adj. [from asper rough, and folium a leaf, Lat.] One of the divisions of plants; so called, from the roughness of their leaves.

ASPE'RITY. n. s. [asperitas, Lat.]

Sometimes the pores and asperities of dry bodies are so incommensurate to the particles of the liquor, that they glide over the surface. Boyle.

2. Roughness of sound; harshness of pronunciation.

3. Roughness or ruggedness of temper; moroseness; sourness; crabbedness.

The charity of the one, like kindly exhalations, will descend in showers of blessings; but the rigour and asperity of the other, in a severe doom upon ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

Avoid all unseemliness and asperity of carriage; do nothing that may argue a peevish or froward spirit. Rogers.

ASPERNA'TION. n. s. [aspernatio, Lat.] Neglect; disregard. Dict.

A'SPEROUS. adj. [asper, Lat.] Rough; uneven.

Black and white are the most asperous and unequal of colours; so like, that it is hard to distinguish them: black is the most rough. Boyle.

To ASPE'RSE. v. a. [aspergo, Lat.] To bespatter with censure or calumny.

In the business of Ireland, besides the opportunity to asperse the king, they were safe enough. Clarendon.

Curb that impetuous tongue; nor rashly vain,
And singly mad, asperse the sov'reign reign. Pope.

Unjustly poets we asperse;
Truth shines the brighter, clad in verse. Swift.

ASPE'RSION. n. s. [aspersio, Lat.]

1. A sprinkling.

If thou dost break her virgin knot, before
All sanctimonious ceremonies;
No sweet aspersions shall the heav'ns let fall,
To make this contract grow. Shakesp.

It exhibits a mixture of new conceits and old; whereas the instauration gives the new unmixed, otherwise than with some little aspersion of the old, for taste's sake. Bacon.

2. Calumny; censure.

The same aspersions of the king, and the same grounds of a rebellion. Dryden.

ASPHA'LTICK. adj. [from asphaltos.] Gummy; bituminous.

And with asphaltick slime, broad as the gate,
Deep to the roots of hell, the gather'd beach
They fasten'd. Milton.

ASPHA'LTOS. n. s. [Ἄσφαλτος bitumen.] A solid, brittle, black, bituminous, inflammable substance; resembling pitch, and chiefly found swimming on the surface of the Lacus Asphaltites, or Dead Sea, where anciently stood the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. It is cast up, in the nature of liquid pitch, from the bottom of this sea; and, being thrown upon the water, swims like other fat bodies, and condenses gradually.

ASPHA'LTUM. n. s. [Lat.] A bituminous stone found near the ancient Babylon, and lately in the province of Neufchatel; which, mixed with other matters, makes an excellent cement, incorruptible by air, and impenetrable by water; supposed to be the mortar, so much celebrated among the ancients, with which the walls of Babylon were laid. Chambers.

A'SPHODEL. n. s. [lilio-asphodelus, Lat.] Day-lily. Asphodels were by the ancients planted near burying-places, in order to supply the manes of the dead with nourishment.

By those happy souls, who dwell
In yellow meads of asphodel. Pope.

A'SPICK. n. s. [See ASP.] The name of a serpent.

Why did I 'scape th' invenom'd aspick's rage,
And all the fiery monsters of the desart,
To see this day? Addison.

To A'SPIRATE. v. n. [aspiro, Lat.] To be pronounced with full breath.

Where a vowel ends a word, the next begins either with a consonant, or what is its equivalent; for our w and h aspirate. Dryden.

A'SPIRATE. adj. [aspiratus, Lat.] Pronounced with full breath.

For their being pervious, you may call them (if you please) perspirate; but yet they are not aspirate, i. e. with such an aspiration as h. Holder.

ASPIRA'TION. n. s. [aspiratio, Lat.]

1. A breathing after; an ardent wish: used generally, of a wish for spiritual blessings.

A soul inspired with the warmest aspirations after celestial beatitude, keeps its powers attentive. Watts

2. The act of aspiring, or desiring something high and great.

'Tis he; I ken the manner of his gait:
He rises on his toe; that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth. Shakesp.

3. The pronunciation of a vowel with full breath.

H is only a guttural aspiration, i. e. a more forcible impulse of the breath from the lungs. Holder.

To ASPI'RE. v. n. [aspiro, Lat.]

1. To desire with eagerness; to pant after something higher: sometimes, with the particle to.

Most excellent lady! no expectation in others, nor hope in himself, could aspire to a higher mark, than to be thought worthy to be praised by you. Sidney.

His father's grave counsellors, by whose means he had aspir'd to the kingdom, he cruelly tortured. Knolles.

Hence springs that universal strong desire,
Which all men have of immortality:
Not some few spirits unto this thought aspire;
But all men's minds in this united be. Davies.

Horace did ne'er aspire to epic bays;
Nor lofty Maro stoop to lyrick lays. Roscommon.
Till then a helpless, hopeless, homely swain;
I sought not freedom, nor aspir'd to gain. Dryden.
Aspiring to be gods, if angels fell,
Aspiring to be angels, men rebel. Pope.

2. Sometimes, with after.

Those are raised above sense, and aspire after immortality, who believe the perpetual duration of their souls. Tillotson.
There is none of us, but who would be thought, throughout the whole course of his life, to aspire after immortality. Atterbury.

3. To rise; to tower.

There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes, and our ruin,
More pangs and fears, than war or women have.
Shakespeare.
My own breath still foments the fire;
Which flames as high, as fancy can aspire. Waller.

ASPI'RER. n. s. [from aspire.] One that ambitiously strives to be greater than he is.

They ween'd,
To win the mount of God; and, on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer: but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.
Milton.

ASPORTA'TION. n. s. [asportatio, Lat.] A carrying away. Dict.

ASQUI'NT. adv. [from a and squint.] Obliquely; not in the straight line of vision.

A single guide may direct the way better, than five hundred; who have contrary views, or look asquint, or shut their eyes. Swift

ASS. n. s. [asinus, Lat.]

1. An animal of burden, remarkable for sluggishness, patience, hardiness, coarseness of food, and long life.

You have among you many a purchas'd slave;
Which, like your asses and your dogs and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part,
Because you bought them. Shakespeare.

2. A stupid, heavy, dull fellow; a dolt.

I do begin to perceive, that I am made an ass.
Shakespeare
That such a crafty mother
Should yield the world to this ass! a woman, that
Bears all down with her brain; and yet her son
Cannot take two from twenty, for his heart,
And leave eighteen. Shakespeare.

To ASSA'IL. v. a. [assailler, Fr.]

1. To attack in a hostile manner; to assault; to fall upon; to invade.

So, when he saw his flatt'ring arts to fail;
With greedy force he 'gan the fort t' assail
Fairy Queen.

2. To attack with argument; censure; or motives applied to the passions.

My gracious lord, here in the parliament
Let us assail the family of York. Shakesp.

Nor bide th' encounter of assailing eyes. Shakesp.
How have I fear'd your fate! but fear'd it most,
When love assail'd you on the Libyan coast. Dryd.
All books he reads, and all he reads assails,
From Dryden's Fables down to D—y's Tales.
Pope.
In vain Thalestris with reproach assails;
For who can move, when fair Belinda fails? Pope.

ASSAI'LABLE. adj. [from assail.] That, which may be attacked.

Banquo, and his Fleance, lives.—
—But in them nature's copy 's not eternal.—
—There's comfort yet, they are assailable.
Shakespeare.

ASSA'ILANT. n. s. [assaillant, Fr.] He, that attacks; in opposition to defendant.

The same was so well encountered, by the defendants; that the obstinacy of the assailants did but increase the loss. Hayward.

I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber smirch my face;
The like do you: so shall we pass along,
And never stir assailants. Shakespeare.

ASSA'ILANT. adj. Attacking; invading.

And as ev'ning dragon came,
Assailant on the perched roosts
Of tame villatick fowl. Milton.

ASSA'RT. n. s. [essart, from essarter, Fr. to clear away wood in a forest] An offence committed in the forest, by plucking up those woods by the roots, that are thickets or coverts of the forest; and by making them as plain, as arable land. Cowell.

To ASSA'RT. v. a. [essarter, Fr.] To commit an assart. See ASSART.

ASSA'SSIN. } n. s. [assassin, Fr. a
ASSA'SSINATE. } word, brought originally from Asia; where, about the time of the holy war, there was a set of men called assassins, as is supposed for Arsacidæ: who killed any man, without regard to danger, at the command of their chief.] A murderer; one, that kills by treachery, or sudden violence.

In the very moment, as the knight withdrew from the duke, this assassinate gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side.
Wotton.
The Syrian king; who, to surprize
One man, assassin like had levy'd war,
War unproclaim'd. Milton.
The old king is just murdered; and the person, that did it, is unknown—Let the soldiers seize him, for one of the assassinates; and let me alone, to accuse him afterwards. Dryden.
Here hir'd assassins for their gain invade;
And treach'rous pois'ners urge their fatal trade.
Creech.
When she hears of a murder, she enlarges more on the guilt of the suffering person, than of the assassin. Addison.
Orestes brandish'd the revenging sword;
Slew the dire pair; and gave to fun'ral flame
The vile assassin, and adult'rous dame. Pope.
Useful, we grant; it serves, what life requires;
But, dreadful too, the dark assassin hires. Pope.

ASSA'SSINATE. n. s [from assassin.] The crime of an assassin; murder.

Were not all assassinates and popular insurrections wrongfully chastised, if the meanness of the offenders indemnified them from punishment? Pope.

To ASSA'SSINATE. v. a. [from assassin.]

1. To murder by violence.

Help, neighbours, my house is broken open by force; and I am ravished, and like to be assassinated.
Dryden.
What could provoke thy madness,
To assassinate so great, so brave a man? Philips.

2. To way-lay; to take by treachery. This meaning is perhaps peculiar to Milton.

Such usage, as your honourable lords
Afford me, assassinated and betray'd;
Who durst not, with your whole united pow'rs,
In fight withstand one single and unarm'd. Milton.

ASSASSINA'TION. n. s. [from assassinate.] The act of assassinating; murder by violence.

It were done quickly; if th' assassination
Could trammel up the consequence. Shakesp.
The duke finish'd his course by a wicked assassination. Clarendon.

ASSASSINA'TOR. n. s. [from assassinate.] Murderer; mankiller; the person that kills another by violence.

Theories, built upon narrow foundations, are very hard to be supported against the assaults of opposition. Locke.

5. In law. A violent kind of injury, offered to a man's person. It may be committed by offering of a blow, or by a fearful speech. Cowell.

6. It has upon, before the thing assaulted.

To ASSA'ULT. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack; to invade; to fall upon with violence.

The king granted the Jews, to gather themselves together, and to stand for their life, to destroy all the power, that would assault them.
Esth. viii. 11.
Before the gates, the cries of babes new-born,
Whom fate had from their tender mothers torn,
Assault his ears. Dryden.
New cursed steel, and more accursed gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief bold;
And double death did wretched man invade,
By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd. Dryden.

ASSA'ULTER. n. s [from assault.] One, who violently assaults another.

Neither liking their eloquence, nor fearing their might, we esteemed few swords, in a just defence, able to resist many unjust assaulters. Sidney.

ASSA'Y. n. s. [essaye, Fr. from which, the ancient writers borrowed assay, according to the sound; and the latter, essay, according to the writing; but the senses now differing, they may be considered as two words.]

1. Examination; trial.

This cannot be,
By no assay of reason: 'tis a pageant,
To keep us in false gaze. Shakesp.

2. In law. The examination of measures and weights, used by the clerk of the market. Cowell.

3. The first entrance upon any thing; a taste for trial.

For well he weened, that so glorious bait
Would tempt his guest to take thereof assay.
Fairy Queen.

4. Trial by danger or distress; difficulty; hardship.

She heard with patience all, unto the end;
And strove, to master sorrowful assay. Fairy Qu.
The men he prest but late,
To hard assays unfit, unsure at need;
Yet arm'd to point, in well attempted plate.
Fairfax.
Be sure to find,
What I foretel thee; many a hard assay,
Of dangers, and adversities, and pains,
Ere thou of Israel's sceptre get fast hold. Milton.

To ASSA'Y. v. a. [essayer, Fr.]

1. To make trial of; to make experiment of.

One, that to bounty never cast his mind;
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His baser breast. Spenser.
Gray and Bryan obtained leave of the general, a little to assay them; and so, with some horsemen, charged them home. Hayward.
What unweighed behaviour hath this drunkard picked out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Shakesp.

2. To apply to, as the touchstone in assaying metals.

Whom thus afflicted when sad Eve beheld,
Desolate where she sat; approaching nigh,
Soft words to his fierce passion she assay'd. Milton.

3. To try; to endeavour.

David girded his sword upon his armour; and he assayed to go, for he had not proved it.
1 Sam. xvii. 39.

Your forefathers have asserted the party, which they chose, till death; and died, for its defence. Dryden.

2. To affirm; to declare positively.

3. To claim; to vindicate a title to.

Nor can the groveling mind,
In the dark dungeon of the limbs confin'd,
Assert the native skies, or own its heav'nly kind.
Dryden.

ASSE'RTION. n. s. [from assert.]

1. The act of asserting.

2. Position advanced.

If any affirm, the earth doth move; and will not believe with us, it standeth still; because he hath probable reasons for it, and I no infallible sense or reason against it; I will not quarrel with his assertion. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ASSE'RTIVE. adj. [from assert.] Positive; dogmatical; peremptory.

He was not so fond of the principles he undertook to illustrate, as to boast their certainty; proposing them, not in a confident and assertive form, but as probabilities and hypotheses. Glanv.

ASSE'RTOR. n. s. [from assert.] Maintainer; vindicator; supporter; affirmer.

Among th' assertors of free reason's claim,
Our nation's not the least in worth or fame. Dryd.
Faithful asserter of thy country's cause,
Britain with tears shall bathe thy glorious wound.
Prior.

It is an usual piece of art, to undermine the authority of fundamental truths, by pretending to shew how weak the proofs are, which their assertors employ in defence of them. Atterbury.

ASSE'SSMENT. n. s. [from To assess.]

1. The sum, levied on certain property.

2. The act of assessing.

What greater immunity and happiness can there be to a people, than to be liable to no laws, but what they make themselves? To be subject to no contribution, assessment, or any pecuniary levy whatsoever; but what they vote, and voluntarily yield unto themselves? Howel.

ASSE'SSOR. n. s. [assessor, Lat.]

1. The person, that sits by another; generally used of those, who assist the judge.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears;
And lives and crimes, with his assessors, hears:
Round, in his urn, the blended balls he rowls;
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls.
Dryden

2. He, that sits by another, as next in dignity.

To his Son,
Th' assessor of his throne, he thus began. Milton
Twice stronger than his sire, who sat above,
Assessor to the throne of thund'ring Jove. Dryd.

3. He that lays taxes; derived from assess.

A'SSETS. n. s. without the singular, [assez, Fr.] Goods sufficient to discharge that burden, which is cast upon the executor or heir, in satisfying the testators or ancestors debts or legacies. To ASSE'VER. } v. a. [assevero, Lat.]
To ASSE'VERATE. } To affirm with great solemnity, as upon oath.

ASSEVERA'TION. n. s. [from asseverate.] Solemn affirmation, as upon oath.

That which you are persuaded of, ye have it no otherwise than by your own only probable collection; and therefore such bold asseverations, as in him were admirable, should, in your mouths, but argue rashness. Hooker.
Another abuse of the tongue I might add; vehement asseverations upon slight and trivial occasions. Ray on the Creation.
The repetition gives a greater emphasis to the words, and agrees better with the vehemence of the speaker in making his asseveration.
Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

A'SSHEAD. n. s. [from ass and head] One slow of apprehension; a blockhead.

Will you help an asshead, and a coxcomb, and a knave, a thin-faced knave, a gull? Shak. Ham.

ASSIDU'ITY. n. s. [assiduité, Fr. assiduitas, Lat.] Diligence; closeness of application.

I have, with much pains and assiduity, qualified myself for a nomenclator. Addison.
Can he, who has undertaken this, want conviction of the necessity of his utmost vigour and assiduity to acquit himself of it? Rogers.
We observe the address and assiduity they will use to corrupt us. Rogers.

ASSI'DUOUS. adj. [assiduus, Lat.] Constant in application.

And if by pray'r
Incessant I could hope to change the will
Of him who all things can, I would not cease
To weary him with my assiduous cries. Milton.
The most assiduous talebearers, and bitterest revilers, are often half-witted people.
Government of the Tongue.

In summer, you see the hen giving herself greater freedoms, and quitting her care for above two hours together; but in winter, when the rigour of the season would chill the principles of life, and destroy the young one, she grows more assiduous in her attendance, and stays away but half the time. Addison.

Each still renews her little labour,
Nor justles her assiduous neighbour. Prior.

ASSI'DUOUSLY. adv. [from assiduous.] Diligently; continually.

The trade, that obliges artificers to be assiduously conversant with their materials, is that of glass-men. Boyle.

ASSU'RANCE. n. s. [assurance, Fr.]

1. Certain expectation.

Though hope be indeed a lower and lesser thing, than assurance; yet, as to all the purposes of a pious life; prove more useful. South.

What encouragement can be given to goodness, beyond the hopes of heaven, and the assurance of an endless felicity? Tillotson.

2. Secure confidence; trust.

What man is he, that boasts of fleshly might,
And vain assurance of mortality;
Which all so soon, as it doth come to fight
Against spiritual foes, yields by and by. Fairy Q.

3. Freedom from doubt; certain knowledge.

Proof, from the authority of man's judgment, is not able to work that assurance; which doth grow, by a stronger proof. Hooker.

'Tis far off;
And rather like a dream, than an assurance
That my remembrance warrants. Shak. Tempest.

The obedient, and the man of practice, shall outgrow all their doubts and ignorances; till persuasion pass into knowledge, and knowledge advance into assurance. South.

Hath he found, in an evil course, that comfortable assurance of God's favour, and good hopes of his future condition, which a religious life would have given him? Tillotson.

4. Firmness; undoubting steadiness.
Men, whose consideration will relieve our modesty, and give us courage and assurance in the duties of our profession. Rogers.

5. Confidence; want of modesty; exemption from awe or fear.
My behaviour, ill governed, gave you the first comfort; my affection, ill hid, hath given you this last assurance. Sidney.

6. Freedom from vitious shame.
Conversation, when they come into the world, will add to their knowledge and assurance. Locke.

7. Ground of confidence; security; sufficient reason for trust or belief.
The nature of desire itself is no easier to receive belief, than it is hard to ground belief; for as desire is glad to embrace the first shew of comfort, so is desire desirous of perfect assurance. Sidney.
As the conquest was but slight and superficial, so the pope's donation to the Irish submissions were but weak and fickle assurances. Davies on Ireland.
None, of woman born,
Shall harm Macbeth.——
—Then live, Macduff! what need I fear of thee?
But yet I'll make assurance double sure,
And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live. Shakesp.
I must confess, your offer is the best;
And, let your father make her the assurance,
She is your own, else you must pardon me;
If you should die before him, where's her dower? Shakesp.
An assurance, being passed through for a competent fine, hath come back again by reason of some oversight. Bacon.

8. Spirit; intrepidity.
They, like resolute men, stood in the face of the breach, with more assurance, than the wall itself. Knolles.
With all th' assurance, innocence can bring;
Fearless without, because secure within:
Arm'd with my courage, unconcern'd I see
This pomp; a shame to you, a pride to me. Dryden.

9. Sanguineness; readiness to hope.
This is not the grace of hope, but a good natural assurance or confidence; which Aristotle observes young men to be full of, and old men not so inclined to. Hammond.

10. Testimony of credit.
I am a gentleman, of blood and breeding;
And, from some knowledge and assurance of you,
Offer this office. Shakesp. King Lear.
We have as great assurance, that there is a God; as we could expect to have, supposing that he were. Tillotson.

11. Conviction.

To lay their native arms aside,
Their modesty; and ride astride. Hudibras.

I saw a place, where the Rhone is so straitened between two rocks, that a man may stand astride upon both at once. Boyle.

ASTRI'FEROUS. adj. [astrifer, Lat.] Bearing or having stars. Dict.

ASTRI'GEROUS. adj. [astriger, Lat.] Carrying stars. Dict.

To ASTRI'NGE. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To press by contraction; to make the parts draw together.

Tears are caused by a contraction of the spirits of the brain; which contraction, by consequence, astringeth the moisture of the brain, and thereby sendeth tears into the eyes. Bacon.

ASTRI'NGENCY. n. s. [from astringe.] The power of contracting the parts of the body; opposed to the power of relaxation.

Astriction prohibiteth dissolution; as, in medicines, astringents inhibit putrefaction: and, by astringency, some small quantity of oil of vitriol will keep fresh water long from putrefying.
Bacon's Natural History.

Acid, acrid, austere, and bitter substances, by their astringency, create horrour; that is, stimulate the fibres. Arbuthnot.

ASTRI'NGENT. adj. [astringens, Lat.] Binding; contracting; opposed to laxative: it is used sometimes of tastes, which seem to contract the mouth.

Astringent medicines are binding, which act by the asperity of their particles; whereby they corrugate the membranes, and make them draw up closer. Quincy.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures; for it is sweet, and yet astringent. Bacon.

The juice is very astringent, and therefore of slow motion. Bacon's Natural History.

What diminisheth sensible perspiration, encreaseth the insensible; for that reason, a strengthening and astringent diet often conduceth to this purpose. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'STROGRAPHY. n. s. [from ἄστρον and γράφω.] The science of describing the stars. Dict.

A'STROLABE. n. s. [of ἄστρον, and λαμβάνω to take.]

1. An instrument, chiefly used for taking the altitude of the pole, the sun, or stars, at sea.

2. A stereographick projection of the circles of the sphere, upon the plain of some great circle. Chambers.

ASTRO'LOGER. n. s. [astrologus, Lat.] from ἄστρον and λόγος.]

1. One, that (supposing the influences of the stars to have a causal power) professes to foretel or discover events, depending on those influences.

Not unlike that, which astrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aspect the one to the other. Wotton.

A happy genius is the gift of nature: it depends on the influence of the stars, say the astrologers; on the organs of the body, say the naturalists; it is the particular gift of heaven, say the divines, both christians and heathens. Dryden.

Astrologers, that future fates foreshew. Pope.

I never heard a finer satire against lawyers, than that of astrologers; when they pretend, by rules of art, to tell when a suit will end, and whether to the advantage of the plaintiff or defendant. Swift.

2. It was anciently used for one, that understood or explained the motions of the planets, without including prediction.

A worthy astrologer, by perspective glasses, hath found in the stars many things, unknown to the ancients. Raleigh.

ASTROLO'GIAN. n. s. [from astrology.] The same with astrologer.

The twelve houses of heaven, in the form which astrologians use. Camden.

The stars (they say) cannot dispose,
No more than can the astrologian. Hudibras.

ASTROLO'GICAL. } adj. [from astro-
ASTROLO'GICK. } logy.]

1. Professing astrology.

Some seem a little astrological; as, when they warn us from places of malign influence. Wotton.

No astrologick wizard honour gains,
Who has not oft been banish'd, or in chains. Dryden.

2. Relating to astrology.

Astrological prayers seem to me, to be built on as good reason, as the predictions. Stillingfleet.

The poetical fables are more ancient, than the astrological influences; that were not known to the Greeks, till after Alexander the Great. Bentley.

ASTROLO'GICALLY. adv. [from astrology.] In an astrological manner.

To ASTRO'LOGIZE. v. n. [from astrology.] To practise astrology.

ASTRO'LOGY. n. s. [astrologia, Lat.] The practice of foretelling things, by the knowledge of the stars; an art now generally exploded, as irrational and false.

I know, the learned think of the art of astrology, that the stars do not force the actions or wills of men. Swift.

ASTRO'NOMER. n. s. [from ἄστρον a star, and νόμος a rule or law.] One that studies the celestial motions, and the rules by which they are governed.

The motions of factions under kings ought to be like the motions (as the astronomers speak of) in the inferiour orbs. Bacon.

Astronomers no longer doubt, of the motion of the planets about the sun. Locke.

The old and new astronomers in vain
Attempt the heav'nly motions to explain. Blackmore.

ASTRONO'MICAL. } adj. [from astrono-
ASTRONO'MICK. } my.] Belonging to astronomy.

Our forefathers, marking certain mutations to happen in the sun's progress through the zodiack, they registrate and set them down in their astronomical canons. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Can he not pass an astronomick line,
Or dreads the sun th' imaginary sign;
That he should ne'er advance, to either pole?
Blackmore

ASTRONO'MICALLY. adv. [from astronomical.] In an astronomical manner.

ASTRO'NOMY. n. s. [ἀστρονομία, from ἄστρον a star, and νόμος a law or rule.] A mixed mathematical science; teaching the knowledge of the celestial bodies, their magnitudes, motions, distances, periods, eclipses, and order. Pythagoras taught, that the earth and planets turn round the sun, which stands immoveable in the centre. From the time of Pythagoras, astronomy sunk into neglect; till it was revived by the Ptolemys, kings of Egypt; and the Saracens brought it from Africa to Spain, and restored this science to Europe. Chambers.

To this must be added the understanding of the globes, and the principles of geometry and astronomy. Cowley.

A'STROSCOPY. n. s. [ἄστρον a star, and σκοπέω to view.] Observation of the stars. Dict.

ASTRO-THEOLOGY. n. s. [from astrum a star, and theologia divinity.] Divinity founded on the observation of the celestial bodies.

That the diurnal and annual revolutions are the motions of the terraqueous globe, not of the sun, I shew in the preface of my Astro-Theology.
Derham's Physico-Theology.

ASU'NDER. adv. [a-ynbpan, Sax.] Apart; separately; not together.

Two indirect lines; the further that they are drawn out, the further they go asunder.
Spenser on Ireland.

Sense thinks the planets spheres not much asunder;
What tells us then, their distance is so far? Davies.

Greedy hope, to find
His wish and best advantage, us asunder.
Paradise Lost.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,
Seeks hid advantage to betray us worse;
Which, when asunder, will not prove too hard;
For both together are each other's guard. Dryden.

Borne far asunder by the tides of men,
Like adamant and steel they meet again.
Dryden's Fables.

All this metallick matter (both that, which continued asunder and in single corpuscles; and that, which was amassed and concreted into nodules) subsided. Woodward's Natural History.

ASY'LUM. n. s. [Lat. ἄσυλον, from a not, and σύλον pillage.] A place, out of which he that has fled to it, may not be taken; a sanctuary; a refuge; a place of retreat and security.

So sacred was the church to some, that it had the right of an asylum or sanctuary. Ayliffe's Parer.

ASY'MMETRY. n. s. [from a without, and συμμέτρεια symmetry.]

1. Contrariety to symmetry; disproportion.

The asymmetries of the brain, as well as the deformities of the legs or face, may be rectified in time. Grew.

2. This term is sometimes used in mathematicks, for what is more usually called incommensurability; when between two quantities there is no common measure.

A'SYMPTOTE. n. s. [from a, priv. συν with, and πίπτω to fall; which never meet; incoincident.] Asymptotes are right lines, which approach nearer and nearer to some curve; but which, though they and their curve were infinitely continued, would never meet; and may be conceived as tangents to their curves at an infinite distance. Chambers.

Asymptote lines, though they may approach still nearer together, till they are nearer than the least assignable distance, yet, being still produced infinitely, will never meet. Grew.

ASYMPTO'TICAL. adj. [from asymptote.] Curves are said to be asymptotical, when they continually approach, without a possibility of meeting.

ASY'NDETON. n. s. [ἀσύνδετον, of a, priv. and συνδέω to bind together.] A figure in grammar, when a conjunction copulative is omitted in a sentence; as, in veni, vidi, vici, & is left out.

AT. prep. [æt, Saxon.]

This custom continued among many, to say their prayers at fountains. Stillingfleet.

2. At, before a word signifying time, notes the coexistence of the time with the event; the word time is sometimes included in the adjective; we commonly say at a minute, at an hour, on a day, in a month.

We thought it, at the very first, a sign of cold affection. Hooker.

How frequent to desert him, and at last
To heap ingratitude on worthiest deeds. Milton.

At the same time, that the storm beats upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another. Addison.

We made no efforts at all, where we could have most weakened the common enemy; and, at the same time, enriched ourselves. Swift.

3. At, before a causal word, signifies nearly the same as with; nothing, that the event accompanies, or immediately succeeds, the action of the cause.

At his touch,
Such sanctity hath Heav'n giv'n his hand,
They presently amend. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

O, sir, when he shall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already;
Ev'n at this news, he dies. Shakesp. King John.

Much at the sight was Adam in his heart
Dismay'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

High o'er their heads, a mould'ring rock is plac'd;
That promises a fall, and shakes at ev'ry blast. Dryden.

4. At, before a superlative adjective, implies in the state; as, at best, in the state of most perfection, &c.

Consider any man, as to his personal powers; they are not great: for, at greatest, they must still be limited. South.

We bring into the world with us a poor, needy, uncertain life, short at the longest, and unquiet at the best. Temple.

5. At, before a person, is seldom used otherwise than ludicrously; as, he longed to be at him; that is, to attack him.

6. At, before a substantive, sometimes signifies the particular condition or circumstances of the person; as, at peace, in a state of peace.

Under pardon,
You are much more at task, for want of wisdom;
Than prais'd for harmless mildness. Shakesp.

It bringeth the treasure of a realm into a few hands: for, the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties; at the end of the game, most of the money will be in the box. Bacon.

Hence walk'd the fiend at large, in spacious field. Milton.

The rest, for whom no lot is yet decreed,
May run in pastures, and at pleasure feed.
Dryden's Virgil.

Deserted, at his utmost need,
By those his former bounty fed. Dryd. St. Cæcilia.

What hinder'd either, in their native soil
At ease to reap the harvest of their toil.
Dryden's Fables.

Wise men are sometimes over-borne, when they are taken at a disadvantage. Collier of Confidence.

These have been the maxims, they have been guided by: take these from them, and they are perfectly at a loss; their compass and pole-star then are gone, and their understanding is perfectly at a nonplus. Locke.

One man manages four horses at once, and leaps from the back of another at full speed.
Pope's Essay on Homer's Battles.

They will not let me be at quiet, in my bed; but pursue me, to my very dreams. Swift.

7. At, before a substantive, sometimes marks employment or attention.

We find some arrived to that sottishness, as to own roundly, what they would be at. South.

How d'ye find yourself? says the doctor to his patient. A little while after, he is at it again; with a Pray, how d'ye find your body.
L'Estrange.

But she (who well enough knew what,
Before he spoke he would be at)
Pretended not to apprehend. Hudibras.

The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope.

8. At is sometimes the same, with furnished with; after the French a.

Infuse his breast with magnanimity;
And make him, naked, foil a man at arms.
Shakespeare.

9. At sometimes notes the place, where any thing is or acts.

Your husband is at hand; I heard his trumpet.
Shakespeare

He, that in tracing the vessels began at the heart, though he thought not at all of a circulation, yet made he the first true step towards the discovery. Grew.

ATHA'NOR. n. s. [a chymical term, borrowed from ἀθάνατος; or, as others think, תנור.] A digesting furnace, to keep heat for some time; so that it may be augmented or diminished at pleasure, by opening or shutting some apertures, made on purpose with sliders over them, called registers. Quincy.

A'THEISM. n. s. [from atheist. It is only of two syllables in poetry.] The disbelief of a God.

God never wrought miracles to convince atheism, because his ordinary works convince it. Bacon.

It is the common interest of mankind, to punish all those, who would seduce men to atheism.
Tillotson.

A'THEIST. n. s. [ἄθεος without God.] One that denies the existence of God.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame,
Ignobly!) to the trains, and to the smiles,
Of these fair atheists. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Though he were really a speculative atheist; yet, if he would but proceed rationally, he could not however be a practical atheist, nor live without God in this world, South.

Atheist, use thine eyes;
And, having view'd the order of the skies,
Think (if thou canst) that matter, blindly hurl'd
Without a guide, should frame this wond'rous world. Creech.

No atheist, as such, can be a true friend, an affectionate relation, or a loyal subject. Bentley.

A'THEIST. adj. Atheistical; denying God.

Nor stood unmindful Abdiel, to annoy
The atheist crew. Milton's Paradise Lost.

ATHEI'STICAL. adj. [from atheist.] Given to atheism; impious.

Vacuum is another principal doctrine of the atomical philosophy. Bentley's Sermons.

A'TOMIST. n. s. [from atom.] One, that holds the atomical philosophy, or doctrine of atoms.

The atomists (who define motion, to be a passage from one place to another) what do they more, than put one synonymous word for another? Locke.

Now can judicious atomists conceive,
Chance to the sun could his just impulse give? Blackmore.

A'TOMY. n. s. An obsolete word for atom.

Drawn with a team of little atomies,
Athwart men's noses, as they be asleep. Shakesp.

To ATO'NE. v. n. [from at one; as the etymologists remark, to be at one is the same as to be in concord. This derivation is much confirmed, by the following passage of Shakespeare; and appears to be the sense, still retained in Scotland.]

1. To agree; to accord.

He and Aufidius can no more atone,
Than violentest contrariety. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

2. To stand, as an equivalent for something; and particularly used of expiatory sacrifices, with the particle for before the thing, for which something else is given.

From a mean stock, the pious Decii came;
Yet such their virtues, that their loss alone,
For Rome and all our legions, did atone. Dryden's Juvenal.

The good intention of a man of weight and worth, or a real friend, seldom atones for the uneasiness, produced by his grave representations. Locke.

Let thy sublime meridian course,
For Mary's setting rays, atone:
Our lustre, with redoubled force,
Must now proceed from thee alone. Prior.

His virgin sword Ægysthus' veins imbrued;
The murd'rer fell, and blood aton'd for blood. Pope.

To ATO'NE. v. a.

1. To reduce to concord.

If any contention arose, he knew none fitter to be their judge, to atone and take up their quarrels, but himself. Drumm.

2. To expiate; to answer for.

Soon should yon boasters cease their haughty strife;
Or each atone his guilty love, with life. Pope.

ATO'NEMENT. n. s. [from atone.]

Our attainments are mean compared with the perfection of the universe. Grew.

2. The act or power of attaining.

The Scripture must be sufficient, to imprint in us the character of all things necessary for the attainment of eternal life. Hooker.

Education, in extent more large, of time shorter, and of attainment more certain. Milton.

Government is an art, above the attainment of an ordinary genius. South.

If the same actions be the instruments, both of acquiring fame, and procuring this happiness; they would nevertheless fail in the attainment of this last end, if they proceeded from a desire of the first. Addison.

The great care of God for our salvation must appear in the concern he expressed for our attainment of it. Rogers.

To ATTA'INT. v. a. [atteinter, Fr.]

1. To disgrace; to cloud with ignominy.

His warlike shield
Was all of diamond, perfect, pure, and clean;
For, so exceeding shone his glistering ray,
That Phœbus' golden face it did attaint;
As, when a cloud his beams doth overlay. Fairy Queen.

2. To attaint, is particularly used for such, as are found guilty of some crime or offence; and especially, of felony or treason. A man is attainted two ways; by appearance, or by process. Attainder by appearance is, by confession, battle, or verdict. Confession is double: one at the bar, before the judges, when the prisoner, upon his indictment read, being asked guilty or not guilty, answers Guilty; never putting himself upon the verdict of the jury: the other is before the coroner, or sanctuary; where he, upon his confession, was (in former times) constrained to abjure the realm; which kind is called attainder by abjuration. Attainder by battle is, when the party appealed; and, choosing to try the truth by combat rather than by jury, is vanquished. Attainder by verdict is, when the prisoner at the bar, answering to the indictment Not Guilty, hath an inquest of life and death passing upon him, and is by the verdict pronounced guilty. Attainder by process is, where a party flies; and is not found, till five times called publickly in the county, and at last outlawed upon his default. Cowell.

Were it not an endless trouble, that no traitor or felon should be attainted, but a parliament must be called? Spenser.

I must offend, before I be attainted. Shakesp.

3. To taint; to corrupt.

My tender youth was never yet attaint
With any passion of inflaming love. Shakesp.

ATTA'INT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing injurious; as illness, weariness. This sense is now obsolete.

Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Under the weary and all-watched night;
But freshly looks, and overbears attaint
With cheerful semblance. Shakesp. Henry V.

2. Stain; spot; taint.

No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of; nor any man an attaint, but he carries some stain of it. Shakesp.

3. [In horsemanship.] A blow or wound on the hinder feet of an horse. Far. Dict.

Attire themselves with blooms. Philips.

ATTI'RE. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Clothes; dress; habit.
It is no more disgrace to Scripture, to have left things free, to be ordered by the church; than for Nature, to have left it to the wit of man, to devise his own attire. Hooker.
After that, the Roman attire grew to be in account, and the gown to be in use among them. Davies on Ireland.
Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Hath cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.
And, in this coarse attire, which I now wear,
With God and with the Muses I confer. Donne.
When lavish nature, with her best attire,
Clothes the gay spring, the season of desire. Waller
I pass their form, and ev'ry charming grace;
But their attire, like liveries of a kind,
All rich and rare, is fresh within my mind. Dryd.
2. [In hunting.] The horns of a buck or stag.
3. [In botany.] The flower of a plant is divided into three parts; the empalement, the foliation, and the attire, which is either florid or semiform. Florid attire, called thrums or suits, as in the flowers of marigold and tansey, consists sometimes of two, but commonly of three parts: the outer part is the floret; the body of which is divided at the top, like the cowslip flower, into five distinct parts. Semiform attire consists of two parts, the chives and spices; one upon each attire. Dict.

ATTI'RER. n. s. [from attire.] One, that attires another; a dresser. Dict.

A'TTITUDE. n. s. [attitude, Fr. from atto, Ital.] The posture or action, in which a statue or painted figure is placed.

ATTO'LLENT. adj. [attollens, Lat.] That, which raises or lifts up.
I shall farther take notice, of the exquisite libration of the attollent and depriment muscles. Derham's Physio-Theology.

ATTO'RNEY. n. s. [attornatus, low Lat. from tour, Fr. Celui quivient à tour d'autrui; qui alterius vices subit.]
1. Such a person, as (by consent, commandment, or request) takes heed, sees, and takes upon him the charge of other men's business, in their absence. Attorney is either general or special. Attorney general is he, that by general authority is appointed to all our affairs or suits; as the attorney general of the king, which is nearly the same with Procurator Cæsaris in the Roman empire: Attorneys general are made, either by the king's letters patent; or by our appointment before justices in Eyre, in open court. Attorney special or particular is he, that is employed in one or more causes, particularly specified. There are also, in respect of the divers courts, attorneys at large, and attorneys special, belonging to this or that court only. Cowell.

Attorneys, in common law, are nearly the same with proctors in the civil law, and solicitors in courts of equity. Attorneys sue out writs or process, or commence, carry on, and defend actions, or other proceedings, in the names of other persons, in the courts of common law. None are admitted to act, without having served a clerkship for five years, taking the proper oath, being enrolled, and examined by the judges. The attorney general pleads within the bar. To him come warrants for making out patents, pardon, &c. and he is the principal manager of all law affairs of the crown. Chambers.

I am a subject,
And challenge law. attorneys are deny'd me;
And therefore personally I lay my claim,
To mine inheritance. Shakesp.

The king's attorney on the contrary,
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions. Shak.

Despairing quacks with curses fled the place;
And vile attorneys, now an useless race. Pope.

2. It was anciently used for those, who did any business for another; now, only in law.

I will attend my husband; it is my office;
And will have no attorney but myself;
And therefore let me have him home. Shakesp.

To ATTO'RNEY. v. a. [from the noun; the verb is now not in use.]

1. To perform by proxy.

Their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attornied with interchange of gifts. Shakesp.

2. To employ as a proxy.

As I was then,
Advertising and holy to your business,
Nor changing heart with habit; I am still Attornied to your service. Shakesp.

ATTO'RNEYSHIP. n. s. [from attorney.] The office of an attorney; proxy; vicarious agency.

But marriage is a matter of more worth,
Than to be dealt in attorneyship. Shakesp.

ATTO'URNMENT. n. s. [attournement, Fr.] A yielding of the tenement to a new lord, or acknowledgment of him to be his lord: for, otherwise, he that buyeth or obtaineth any lands or tenements of another, which are in the occupation of a third, cannot get possession. Cowell.

To ATTRA'CT. v. a. [attraho, attractum, Lat.]

1. To draw to something.

A man should scarce persuade the affections of the loadstone, or that jet and amber attracteth straws and light bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The single atoms, each to other tend;
Attract, attracted to, the next in place,
Form'd and impell'd its neighbour to embrace. Pope.

2. To allure; to invite.

Adorn'd
She was indeed, and lovely, to attract
Thy love; not thy subjection. Milton.

Shew the care of approving all actions so, as may most effectually attract all to this profession. Hammond.

Deign to be lov'd, and ev'ry heart subdue!
What nymph could e'er attract such crowds, as you? Pope.

ATTRA'CT. n. s. [from To attract.] Attraction; the power of drawing: not in use.

Feels darts and charms, attracts and flames,
And woo and contract in their names. Hudibras.

ATTRA'CTICAL. adj. [from attract.] Having the power to draw to it.

Some stones are endued with an electrical or attractical virtue. Ray on the Creation.

ATTRA'CTION. n. s. [from attract.]

1. The power of drawing any thing.

The drawing of amber and jet, and other electrick bodies; and the attraction in gold, of the spirit of quicksilver at distance; and the attraction of heat, at distance; and that of fire, to naphtha; and that of some herbs to water, though at distance; and divers others, we shall handle. Bacon.

Loadstones and touched needles, laid long in quicksilver, have not amitted their attraction. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Attraction may be performed by impulse, or some other means; I use that word, to signify any force, by which bodies tend towards one another. Newton's Opticks.

2. The power of alluring or enticing.

Setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms. Shakesp.

ATTRA'CTIVE. adj. [from attract.]

1. Having the power to draw any thing.

What, if the sun
Be centre to the world; and other stars,
By his attractive virtue and their own
Incited, dance about him various rounds? Milton.

Some, the round earth's cohesion to secure,
For that hard task employ magnetick power:
Remark, say they, the globe; with wonder own
Its nature, like the fam'd attractive stone. Blackmore.

Bodies act by the attractions of gravity, magnetism, and electricity; and these instances make it not improbable, but there may be more attractive powers than these. Newton.

2. Inviting; alluring; enticing.

Happy is Hermia, wheresoe'er she lies,
For she hath blessed and attractive eyes. Shakesp.

I pleas'd, and with attractive graces won,
The most averse, thee chiefly. Milton.

ATTRA'CTIVE. n. s. [from attract.] That, which draws or incites; allurement: except that, attractive is of a good or indifferent sense, and allurement generally bad.

The condition of a servant staves him off to a distance; but the gospel speaks nothing, but attractives and invitation. South.

ATTRA'CTIVELY. adv. [from attractive.] With the power of attracting or drawing.

ATTRA'CTIVENESS. n. s. [from attractive.] The quality of being attractive.

ATTRA'CTOR. n. s. [from attract.] The agent, that attracts; a drawer.

If the straws be in oil, amber draweth them not; oil makes the straws to adhere so, that they cannot rise unto the attractor. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

ATTRA'HENT. n. s. [attrahens, Lat.] That, which draws.

Our eyes will inform us, of the motion of the steel to its attrahent. Glanville's Scepsis.

ATTRECTA'TION. n. s. [attrectatio, Lat.] Frequent handling. Dict.

ATTRI'BUTABLE. adj. [attribuo, Lat.] That, which may be ascribed or attributed; ascribable; imputable.

Much of the origination of the Americans seems to be attributable to the migrations of the Seres. Hale.

To ATTRI'BUTE. v. a. [attribuo, Lat.]

1. To ascribe; to give; to yield as due.

To their very bare judgment, somewhat a reasonable man would attribute; notwithstanding the common imbecilities, which are incident unto our nature. Hooker.

We attribute nothing to God, that hath any repugnancy or contradiction in it. Power and wisdom have no repugnancy in them. Tillotson.

2. To impute, as to a cause.

I have observed a campania determine, contrary to appearances, by the caution and conduct of a general, which were attributed to his infirmities. Temple.

The imperfection of telescopes is attributed to spherical glasses; and mathematicians have propounded, to figure them by the conical sections. Newton's Opticks.

A'TTRIBUTE. n. s. [from To attribute.]

1. The thing, attributed to another; as perfection, to the Supreme Being.

Power, light, virtue, wisdom, and goodness, being all but attributes of one simple essence, and of one God; we in all admire, and in part discern. Raleigh.

Your vain poets after did mistake,
Who ev'ry attribute a god did make. Dryden.

All the perfections of God are called his attributes; for he cannot be without them. Watts's Logick.

2. Quality; characteristic disposition.

They must have these three attributes; they must be men of courage, fearing God, and hating covetousness. Bacon.

3. A thing belonging to another; an appendant; adherent.

His sceptre shews the force of temporal pow'r
The attribute to awe and majesty:
But mercy is above this sceptr'd sway;
It is an attribute to God himself. Shakesp.

The sculptor, to distinguish him, gave him what the medallists call his proper attributes, a spear and a shield. Addison.

4. Reputation; honour.

It takes
From our achievements, tho' perform'd at height
The pith and marrow of our attribute. Shakesp.

ATTRIBU'TION. n. s. [from To attribute.] Commendation; qualities ascribed.

If speaking truth,
In this fine age, were not thought flattery;
Such attribution should the Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp,
Should go so general current through the world. Shakesp.

We suffer him, to persuade us we are as gods; and never suspect, these glorious attributions may be no more than flattery. Decay of Piety

ATTRI'TE. adj. [attritus, Lat.] Ground, worn by rubbing.

Or, by collison of two bodies, grind
Their air attrite to fire. Milton.

ATTRI'TENESS. n. s. [from attrite.] The being much worn.

ATTRI'TION. n. s. [attritio, Lat.]

1. The act of wearing things, by rubbing one against another.

This vapour, ascending incessantly out of the abyss, and pervading the strata of gravel and the rest, decays the bones and vegetables lodged in those strata; this fluid, by its continual attrition, fretting the said bodies. Woodward.

The change of the aliment is effected, by attrition of the inward stomach, and dissolvent liquor, assisted with heat. Arbuthnot.

2. The state of being worn.

3. [With divines.] Grief for sin, arising only from the fear of punishment; the lowest degree of repentance.

To ATTU'NE. v. a. [from tune.]

1. To make any thing musical.

Airs, vernal airs,
Breathing the smell of field and grove, attune
The trembling leaves. Milton.

2. To tune one thing to another; as, he attunes his voice to his harp.

ATTU'RNEY. n. s. See ATTORNEY.

ATWE'EN. adv. or prep. [See BETWEEN.] Betwixt; between; in the midst of two things: obsolete.

Her loose long yellow locks (like golden wire,
Sprinkled with pearl, and perling flowers atweeen)
Do, like a golden mantle, her attire. Spenser.

ATWI'XT. prep. [See BETWIXT.] In the middle of two things: obsolete.

But, with outrageous strokes, did him restrain;
And, with his body, barr'd the way atwixt them twain. Fairy Queen.

To AVA'IL. v. a. [from valoir, Fr.; to avail; being nearly the same thing, with faire valoir.]

1. To profit; to turn to profit: with of, before the thing used.

Then shall they seek t' avail themselves of names,
Places, and titles; and with these to join
Secular pow'r. Milton.

Both of them avail themselves of those licences, which Apollo has equally bestowed on them. Dry.

2. To promote; to prosper; to assist.

Mean time he voyag'd, to explore the will
Of Jove, on high Dodona's holy hill;
What means might best his safe return avail. Pope.

To AVA'IL. v. n. To be of use; to be of advantage.

Nor can my strength avail; unless, by thee
Endu'd with force, I gain the victory. Dryden.

When real merit is wanting; it avails nothing, to have been encouraged by the great.
Pope's Preface to his Works.

AVAI'L. n. s. [from To avail.] Profit; advantage; benefit.

For all that else did come, were sure to fail;
Yet would he further none but for avail. Spenser.

I charge thee,
As heav'n shall work in me for thine avail,
To tell me truly. Shakesp.

Truth, light upon this way, is of no more avail to us than errour. Locke.

AVA'ILABLE. adj. [from avail.]

1. Profitable; advantageous.

Mighty is the efficacy of such intercessions, to avert judgments; how much more available then may they be, to secure the continuance of blessings. Atterbury.

All things subject to action, the will does so far incline unto; as reason judges them, more available to our bliss. Hooker.

2. Powerful; in force; valid.

Laws human are available by consent. Hooker.

Drake put one of his men to death, having no authority nor commission available. Raleigh.

AVA'ILABLENESS. n. s. [from available.]

1. Power of promoting the end for which it is used.

We differ, from that supposition of the efficacy, or availableness, or suitableness, of these to the end. Hale.

2. Legal force; validity.

AVA'ILABLY. adv. [from available.]

1. Powerfully; profitably; advantageously.

2. Legally; validly.

To AVA'LE. v. a. [avaler, to let sink, Fr.] To let fall; to depress; to make abject; to sink: a word out of use.

By that th' exalted Phœbus 'gan avale
His weary wain; and now the frosty night
Her mantle black thro' heav'n 'gan overhale. Spens.

He did abase and avale the sovereignty, into more servitude towards that see, than had been among us. Wotton.

To AVA'LE. v. n. To sink.

But, when his latter ebb 'gins to avale,
Huge heaps of mud he leaves. Spenser.

AVA'NT. The front of an army. See VAN.

AVA'NT-GUARD. n. s [avantgarde, Fr.] The van; the first body of an army.

The horsemen might issue forth, without disturbance of the foot; and the avant-guard, without shuffling with the battail or arriere. Hayward.

A'VARICE. n. s. [avarice, Fr. avaritia, Lat.] Covetousness; insatiable desire.

There grows,
In my most ill-compos'd affection, such
A stanchless avarice; that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shakesp.

This avarice of praise in times to come;
Those long inscriptions, crowded on the tomb. Dryden.

Nor love his peace of mind destroys,
Nor wicked avarice of wealth. Dryden

Avarice is insatiable; and so he went, still pushing on for more. L'Estrange.

Be niggards of advice, on no pretence;
For the worst of avarice is that of sense. Pope.

AVARI'CIOUS. adj. [avaricieux, Fr.] Covetous; insatiably desirous.

Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful.
Shakesp. Macbeth.

This speech has been condemned as avaricious; and Eustathius judges it to be spoken artfully.
Broome on the Odyssey.

AVARI'CIOUSNESS. n. s. [from avaricious.] The quality of being avaricious.

AVA'ST. adv. [from basta, Ital. it is enough.] Enough; cease. A word, used among seamen.

AVA'UNT. interject. [avant, Fr.] A word of abhorrence, by which any one is driven away.

O, he is bold, and blushes not at death!
Avaunt, thou hateful villain, get thee gone!
Shakesp.

After this process,
To give her the avaunt! it is a pity,
Would move a monster. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Mistress! dismiss that rabble from your throne!
Avaunt!—Is Aristarchus yet unknown? Dunciad.

A'UBURNE. adj. [from auburn bark, Fr.] Brown; of a tan colour.

Her hair is auburne; mine is perfect yellow.
Shakesp.

His auburne locks on either shoulder flow'd;
Which, to the fun'ral of his friend, he vow'd.
Dryden.

Lo, how the arable with barley grain
Stands thick, o'ershadow'd: these as modern use
Ordains, infus'd, an auburne drink compose;
Wholesome, of deathless fame. Philips.

A'UCTION. n. s. [auctio, Lat.]

1. A manner of sale, in which one person bids after another; till so much is bid, as the seller is content to take.

2. The things sold by auction.

Ask you, why Phrine the whole auction buys?
Phrine foresees a general excise. Pope.

To A'UCTION. v. a. [from auction.] To sell by auction.

A'UCTIONARY. adj. [from auction.] Belonging to an auction.

And much more honest, to be hir'd, and stand
With auctionary hammer in thy hand;
Provoking, to give more, and knocking thrice,
For the old household stuff, or picture's price.
Dryden's Juvenal.

AUCTIONI'ER. n. s. [from auction.] The person, that manages an auction.

A'UCTIVE. adj. [from auctus, Lat.] Of an increasing quality. Dict.

Such is thy audacious wickedness;
Thy lewd, pestiferous, and dissentious pranks.
Shakesp.

Till Jove, no longer patient, took his time,
T' avenge with thunder their audacious crime.
Dryden.

Young students, by a constant habit of disputing, grow impudent and audacious, proud and disdainful. Watts.

AUDA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from audacious.] Boldly; impudently.

An angel shalt thou see;
Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously. Shakesp.

AUDA'CIOUSNESS. n. s. [from audacious.] Impudence.

AUDA'CITY. n. s. [from audax, Lat.] Spirit; boldness; confidence.

Lean, raw-bon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose
They had such courage and audacity?

Great effects come, of industry and perseverance; for audacity doth almost bind and mate the weaker sort of minds. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

For want of that freedom and audacity, necessary in commerce with men, his personal modesty overthrew all his public actions. Tatler.

A'UDIBLE. adj. [audibilis, Lat.]

1. That which may be perceived by hearing.

Visibles work upon a looking-glass, and audibles upon the places of echo; which resemble, in some sort, the cavern of the ear. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Eve (who unseen,
Yet all had heard) with audible lament
Discover'd soon the place of her retire. Milton.

Every sense doth not operate upon fancy, with the same force. The conceits of visibles are clearer and stronger, than those of audibles. Grew.

2. Loud enough, to be heard.

One, leaning over a well twenty-five fathoms deep, and speaking softly, the water returned an audible echo. Bacon.

A'UDIBLENESS. n. s. [from audible.] Capableness of being heard.

A'UDIBLY. adv. [from audible.] In such a manner, as to be heard.

And last, the sum of all, my Father's voice,
Audibly heard from heav'n, pronounc'd me his.
Milton.

A'UDIENCE. n. s. [audience, Fr.]

1. The act of hearing, or attending to any thing.

Now I breathe again,
Aloft the flood; and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will. Shakesp.

Thus far his bold discourse, without controul,
Had audience. Milton.

His look
Drew audience and attention, still as night
Or summer's noon-tide air. Milton.

2. The liberty of speaking granted; a hearing.

Were it reason, to give men audience, pleading for the overthrow of that, which their own deed hath ratified? Hooker.

According to the fair play of the world,
Let me have audience: I am sent to speak,
My holy lord of Milan, from the king. Shakesp.

3. An auditory; persons collected to hear.

Or, if the star of ev'ning and the moon
Haste to thy audience, night with her will bring Silence. Milton.

The hall was filled, with an audience of the greatest eminence for quality and politeness. Addison.

It proclaims the triumphs of goodness in a proper audience, even before the whole race of mankind. Atterbury.

4. The reception of any man, who delivers a solemn message.

In this high temple, on a chair of state,
The seat of audience, old Latinus sate. Dryden.

AU'DIENCE Cou'rt. A court, belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury, of equal authority with the arches court; though inferiour, both in dignity and antiquity. The original of this court was, because the archbishop of Canterbury heard several causes extrajudicially at home in his own palace; which he usually committed to be discussed by men learned in the civil and canon laws, whom he called his auditors: and so in time, it became the power of the man, who is called causarum negotiorumque audientiæ Cantauriensis auditor, seu officialis. Cowell.

A'UDIT. n. s. [from audit he hears, Lat.] A final account.

If they, which are accustomed to weigh all things, shall here sit down to receive our audit; the sum, which truth amounteth to, will appear to be but this. Hooker.

He took my father grossly, full of bread:
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May:
And, how his audit stands, who knows save heav'n?
Hamlet

I can make my audit up; that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakesp.

To A'UDIT. v. a. [from audit.] To take an account finally.

Bishops ordinaries, auditing all accounts, take twelve pence. Ayliffe's Parergon.

I love exact dealing; and let Hocus audit; he knows how the money was disbursed. Arbuthnot.

AUDI'TION. n. s. [auditio Lat.] Hearing.

A'UDITOR. n. s. [auditor, Lat.]

1. A hearer.

Dear cousin, you that were last day so high in the pulpit against lovers, are you now become so mean an auditor? Sidney.

What a play tow'rd? I'll be an auditor;
An actor too, perhaps. Shakesp.

This first doctrine, though admitted by many of his auditors, is expressly against the Epicureans. Bentley.

2. A person employed to take an account ultimately.

If you suspect my husbandry;
Call me, before th' exactest auditors;
And set me on the proof. Shakesp. Timon.

3. In ecclesiastical law.

The archbishop's usage was, to commit the discussing of causes to persons learned in the law, stiled his auditors. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. In the state.

A king's officer; who, yearly examining the accounts of all under-officers accountable, makes up a general book. Cowell.

A'UDITORY. adj. [auditorius, Lat.] That, which has the power of hearing.

Is not hearing performed, by the vibrations of some medium; excited in the auditory nerves, by the tremours of the air; and propagated, through the capillaments of those nerves? Newton.

A'UDITORY. n. s. [auditorium, Lat.]

1. An audience; a collection of persons assembled to hear.

Demades never troubled his head, to bring his auditory to their wits by dry reason. L'Estrange.

Met in the church, I look upon you, as an auditory, fit to be waited on (as you are) by both universities. South.

Several of this auditory were, perhaps, entire strangers to the person, whose death we now lament. Atterbury.

2. A place where lectures are to be heard.

A'UDITRESS. n. s. [from auditor.] The woman, that hears; a she-hearer.

Yet went she not; as, not with such discourse
Delighted; or not capable her ear,
Of what was high: such pleasure she reserv'd,
Adam relating, she sole auditress. Milton.

To AVE'L. v. a. [avello, Lat.] To pull away.

The beaver in chase makes some divulsion of parts; yet are not these parts avelled, to be termed testicles. Brown.

A'VE MA'RY. n. s. [from the first words, of the salutation to the Blessed Virgin, Ave Maria.] A form of worship, repeated by the Romanists, in honour of the Virgin Mary.

All his mind is bent on holiness,
To number Ave Maries on his beads. Shakesp.

A'VENAGE. n. s. [of avena oats, Lat.] A certain quantity of oats, paid to a landlord, instead of some other duties, or as a rent by the tenant. Dict.

To AVE'NGE. v. a. [venger, Fr.]

1. To revenge.

I will avenge me of mine enemies. Isaiah.

They stood, against their enemies; and were avenged, of their adversaries. Wisdom.

I will avenge the blood of Jezreel, upon the house of Jehu. Hosea.

2. To punish.

Till Jove, no longer patient, took his time,
T' avenge with thunder your audacious crime.
Dryden.

AVE'NGEANCE. n. s. [from avenge.] Punishment.

This neglected, fear
Signal avengeance; such, as overtook
A miser. Philips.

AVE'NGEMENT. n. s. [from avenge.] Vengeance; revenge.

That he might work th' avengement for his shame,
On those two caitives, which had bred him blame.
Spenser.

All those great battles (which thou boasts to win
Through strife and bloodshed, and avengement
Now praised) hereafter thou shalt repent.
Fairy Queen.

AVE'NGER. n. s. [from avenge.]

1. Punisher.

That no man go beyond and defraud his brother; because the Lord is the avenger of all such 1 Thess.

Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers: since no place, like this,
Can fit his punishment, or their revenge. Milton.

2. Revenger; taker of vengeance for.

The just avenger of his injured ancestors, the victorious Louis, was darting his thunder. Dryd.

But just disease to luxury succeeds;
And ev'ry death its own avenger breeds. Pope.

AVE'NGERESS. n. s. [from avenger.] A female avenger. Not in use.

There that cruel queen avengeress
Heap on her new waves of weary wretchedness.
Fairy Queen.

AVE'NTURE. n. s. [aventure, Fr.] A mischance, causing a man's death, without felony; as, when he is suddenly drowned or burnt, by any sudden disease falling into the fire or water. See ADVENTURE. Cowell.

A'VENUE. n. s. [avenue, Fr. It is sometime pronounced, with the accent on the second syllable, as Watts observes; but has it generally placed on the first.]

1. A way, by which any place may be entered.

Good guards were set up, at all the avenues of the city; to keep all people, from going out. Clarendon.

Truth is a strong hold, and diligence is laying siege to it: so that it must observe all the avenues and passes to it. South.

2. An alley, or walk of trees, before a house.

To AVE'R. v. a. [averer, Fr. from verum truth, Lat.] To declare positively, or peremptorily.

The reason of the thing is clear;
Would Jove the naked truth aver. Prior.

Then vainly the philosopher avers,
That reason guides our deed, and instinct theirs
How can we justly diff'rent causes frame,
When the effects entirely are the same? Prior.

We may aver, though the power of God be infinite, the capacities of matter are within limits. Bentley.

A'VERAGE. n. s. [averagium, Lat.]

1. In law; that duty or service, which the tenant is to pay to the king or other lord, by his beasts and carriages. Chambers.

2. In navigation; a certain contribution, that merchants proportionably make towards the losses of such, as have their goods cast overboard for the safety of the ship in a tempest; and this contribution seems so called, because it is so proportioned, after the rate of every man's average of goods carried. Cowell.

3. A small duty, which merchants, who send goods in another man's ship, pay to the master thereof for his care of them, over and above the freight. Chambers.

4. A medium; a mean proportion.

AVE'RMENT. n. s. [from aver.]

AVE'RNAT. n. s. A sort of grape. See VINE.

AVERRUNCA'TION. n. s. [from averruncate.] The act of rooting up any thing.

To AVERRU'NCATE. v a. [averrunco, Lat.] To root up; to tear up by the roots.

Sure some mischief will come of it;
Unless, by providential wit
Or force, we averruncate it. Hudibras.

AVERSA'TION. n. s. [from aversor, Lat.]

1. Hatred; abhorrence; turning away with detestation.

Hatred is the passion of defiance; and there is a kind of aversation and hostility, included in its essence. South.

2. It is most properly used with from, before the object of hate.

There was a stiff aversation in my lord of Essex, from applying himself to the earl of Leicester. Wotton.

3. Sometimes with to: less properly.

There is such a general aversation (in human nature) to contempt, that there is scarce any thing more exasperating: I will not deny, but the excess of the aversation may be levelled against pride. Government of the Tongue.

4. Sometimes, very improperly, with towards.

A natural and secret hatred and aversation towards society, in any man, hath somewhat of the savage beast. Bacon.

AVE'RSE. adj. [aversus, Lat.]

1. Malign; not favourable; having such a hatred, as to turn away.

Their courage languish'd, as their hopes decay'd;
And Pallas, now averse, refus'd her aid. Dryden.

2. Not pleased with; unwilling to.

Has thy uncertain bosom ever strove,
With the first tumults of a real love?
Hast thou now dreaded, and now bless'd his sway,
By turns averse and joyful to obey? Prior.

Averse alike, to flatter or offend;
Not free from faults, nor yet too vain to mend. Pope.

3. It has most properly from, before the object of aversion.

Laws politick are never framed, as they should be; unless presuming the will of man to be inwardly obstinate, rebellious, and averse from all obedience unto the sacred laws of his nature. Hooker.

AUTHENTI'CITY. n. s. [from authentick.] Authority; genuineness; the being authentick.

AUTHE'NTICK. adj [authenticus, Lat.] That which has every thing requisite to give it authority; as, an authentick register. It is used in opposition to any thing by which authority is destroyed, as authentick, not counterfeit. It is never used of persons. Genuine; not fictitious.

Thou art wont his great authentick will Interpreter through highest heav'n to bring. Milt.

She joy'd th' authentick news to hear,
Of what she guess'd before with jealous fear. Cowley.

But censure 's to be understood
The authentick mark of the elect,
The publick stamp heav'n sets on all that's great and good. Swift.

AUTHE'NTICKLY. adv. [from authentick.] After an authentick manner.

AUTHE'NTICKNESS. n. s. [from authentick.] The same with authenticity.

AUTHOR. n. s. [auctor, Lat.]

1. The first beginner or mover of any thing; he to whom any thing owes its original.

That law, the author and observer whereof is one only God, to be blessed for ever. Hooker.

The author of that which causeth another thing to be, is author of that thing also which thereby is caused. Hooker.

I'll never
Be such a gosling to obey instinct; but stand
As if a man was author of himself,
And knew no other kin. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
My being gav'st me; whom should I obey
But thee? Milton's Paradise Lost.

But Faunus came from Picus, Picus drew
His birth from Saturn, if records be true.
Thus king Latinus, in the third degree,
Had Saturn author of his family. Dryden.

If the worship of false gods had not blinded the heathen, instead of teaching to worship the sun, and dead heroes, they would have taught us to worship our true Author and benefactor, as their ancestors did under the government of Noah and his sons, before they corrupted themselves. Newton.

2. The efficient; he that effects or produces any thing.

That which is the strength of their amity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Shakespeare.

Now while the tortur'd savage turns around,
And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound;
The wound's great author close at hand provokes
His rage. Dryden's Fables.

From his loins
New authors of dissension spring; from him
Two branches, that in hosting long contend
For sov'reign sway. Philips.

3. The first writer of any thing; distinct from the translator or compiler.

To stand upon every point in particulars, belongeth to the first author of the story. 2 Macc. ii. 30.

An author has the choice of his own thoughts and words, which a translator has not. Dryden.

1. Legal power.

Idle old man,
That still would manage those authorities
That he hath giv'n away! Shakesp. K. Lear.

Adam's sovereignty, that by virtue of being proprietor of the whole world, he had any authority over men, could not have been inherited by any of his children. Locke.

2. Influence; credit.

Power arising from strength, is always in those that are governed, who are many: but authority arising from opinion, is in those that govern, who are few. Temple.

The woods are fitter to give rules than cities, where those that call themselves civil and rational, go out of their way, by the authority of example. Locke.

3. Power; rule.

I know, my lord,
If law, authority, and pow'r deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio. Shakespeare.

But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. 1 Tim. ii. 12

4. Support; justification; countenance.

Dost thou expect th' authority of their voices,
Whose silent wills condemn thee? Ben Jonson.

5. Testimony.

Something I have heard of this, which I would be glad to find by so sweet an authority confirmed. Sidney.

We urge authorities in things that need not, and introduce the testimony of ancient writers, to confirm things evidently believed. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Having been so hardy as to undertake a charge against the philosophy of the schools, I was liable to have been overborne by a torrent of authorities. Glanville's Scepsis.

6. Weight of testimony; credibility; cogency of evidence.

They consider the main consent of all the churches in the whole world, witnessing the sacred authority of scriptures, ever sithence the first publication thereof, even till this present day and hour. Hooker.

AUTHORIZA'TION. n. s. [from authorize.] Establishment by authority.

The obligation of laws arises not from their matter, but from their admission and reception, and authorization in this kingdom. Hale.

To AU'THORIZE. v. a. [autoriser, Fr.]

1. To give authority to any person.

Making herself an impudent suitor, authorizing herself very much, with making us see, that all favour and power depended upon her. Sidney.

So awful, that with honour thou may'st love
Thy mate, who sees, when thou art seen least wise.
Milton's Par. Lost.

I approach thee thus, and gaze
Insatiate; I thus single, nor have fear'd
Thy awful brow, more awful thus retir'd,
Fairest resemblance of thy Maker fair! Milton.

2. Worshipful; in authority; invested with dignity. This sense is obsolete.

Know, then, that some of us are gentlemen,
Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth
Thrust from the company of awful men. Shakesp.

3. Struck with awe; timorous; scrupulous. This sense occurs but rarely.

It is not nature and strict reason, but a weak and awful reverence for antiquity, and the vogue of fallible men. Watts.

A'WFULLY. adv. [from awful.] In a reverential manner.

It will concern a man, to treat this great principle awfully and warily, by still observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids. South.

A'WFULNESS. n. s. [from awful.]

1. The quality of striking with awe; solemnity.

These objects naturally raise seriousness; and night heightens the awfulness of the place, and pours out her supernumerary horrours upon every thing. Addison.

2. The state of being struck with awe: little used.

An help to prayer producing in us reverence and awfulness to the divine majesty of God.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To AWHA'PE. v. a. [This word I have met with only in Spenser, nor can I discover whence it is derived; but imagine, that the Teutonic language had anciently wapen to strike, or some such word, from which weapons, or offensive arms, took their denomination.] To strike; to confound; to terrify.

Ah! my dear gossip, answer'd then the ape,
Deeply do your sad words my wits awhape,
Both for because your grief doth great appear,
And eke because myself am touched near.
Hubberd's Tale.

AWHI'LE. adv. [This word, generally reputed an adverb, is only a while, that is, a time, an interval.] Some time; some space of time.

Stay, stay, I say.
And if you love me, as you say you do,
Let me persuade you to forbear awhile Shakesp

Into this wild abyss the wary fiend
Stood on the brink of hell, and look'd awhile,
Pond'ring his voyage. Milton's Par. Lost

AWK. adj. [A barbarous contraction of the word awkward.] Odd; out of order.

We have heard as arrant jangling in the pulpits, as the steeples, and professors ringing as awk as the bells to give notice of the conflagration.
L'Estrange.

Of thy sharp envy. Shakespeare.

There stood a forest on the mountain's brow,
Which overlook'd the shaded plains below;
No sounding axe presum'd these trees to bite,
Coeval with the world; a venerable sight. Dryd.

AXI'LLA. n. s. [axilla, Lat.] The cavity under the upper part of the arm, called the arm-pit. Quincy.

AXI'LLAR. } adj. [from axilla, Lat.]
A'XILLARY. } Belonging to the arm-pit.

Axillary artery is distributed unto the hand; below the cubit, it divideth into two parts. Brown.

A'XIOM n. s. [axioma, Lat. ἀξίωμα, from ἀξιόω, Gr.]

1. A proposition evident at first sight, that cannot be made plainer by demonstration.

Axioms, or principles more general, are such as this, that the greater good is to be chosen before the lesser. Hooker.

2. An established principle to be granted without new proof.

The axioms of that law, whereby natural agents are guided, have their use in the moral. Hooker.

Their affirmations are no axioms; we esteem thereof as things unsaid, and account them but in list of nothing. Brown.

A'XIS. n. s. [axis, Lat.] The line real or imaginary that passes through any thing, on which it may revolve.

But since they say our earth, from morn to morn,
On its own axis is oblig'd to turn;
That swift rotation must disperse in air
All things which on the rapid orb appear. Blackmore.

It might annually have compassed the sun, and yet never have once turned upon its axis. Bentley.

On their own axis as the planets run,
And make at once their circle round the sun;
So two consistent motions act the soul,
And one regards itself, and one the whole. Pope.

A'XLE. } n. s. [axis, Lat.] The pin
A'XLE-TREE. } which passes through the midst of the wheel, on which the circumvolutions of the wheel are performed.

Venerable Nestor
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecians ears
To his experienc'd tongue. Shakespeare.

The fly sat upon the axle-tree of the chariot-wheel, and said, What a dust do I raise! Bacon.

And the gilded car of day
His glowing axle doth allay
In the steep Atlantick stream. Milton.

He saw a greater sun appear,
Than his bright throne or burning axle-tree could bear. Milton's Christ's Nativity

AY. adv. [perhaps from aio, Lat.]

1. Yes; an adverb of answering affirmatively.

Return you thither?——
—Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed. Shakespeare.

What say'st thou? Wilt thou be of our consort?
Say ay, and be the captain of us all. Shakespeare.

2. It is a word by which the sense is enforced; even; yes, certainly; and more than that.

Remember it; and let it make thee crest-fall'n;
Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride. Shakespeare.

AYE. adv. [apa, Saxon.] Always; to eternity; for ever. It is now rarely used, and only in poetry.

And now in darksome dungeon, wretched thrall
Remedyless for aye he doth him hold. Fairy Queen.

Either prepare to die,
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For aye, austerity and single life. Shakespeare.

The soul, though made in time, survives for aye;
And, though it hath beginning, sees no end. Sir J. Davies.

And hears the muses, in a ring,
Aye round about Jove's altars sing. Milton.

Th' astonish'd mariners aye ply the pump;
No stay, nor rest, till the wide breach is clos'd. Philips.

A'YGREEN. n. s. The same with houseleek; which see. Dict.

A'YRY. n. s. The nest of the hawk.

2. Magnetical Azimuth, is an arch of the horizon contained between the sun's azimuth circle and the magnetical meridian; or it is the apparent distance of the sun from the north or south point of the compass.
3. Azimuth Compass, is an instrument used at sea for finding the sun's magnetick azimuth.
4. Azimuth Dial, is a dial whose stile or gnomon is at right angles to the plane of the horizon.
5. Azimuths, called also vertical circles, are great circles intersecting each other in the zenith and nadir, and cutting the horizon at right angles, in all the points thereof. Chambers.

A'ZURE. adj. [azur, Fr. azurro, Span. lazur, Arab. from lazuli a blue stone.] Blue; faint blue.

Like pomels round of marble clear,
Where azur'd veins well mixt appear. Sidney

The blue of the first order, though very faint and little, may be the colour of some substance; and the azure colour of the skies seems to be this order. Newton.

Thus replies
Minerva, graceful with her azure eyes. Pope.

The sea,
Far through his azure turbulent domain,
Your empire owns. Thomson.

B.

B, THE second letter of the English alphabet, is pronounced as in most other European languages, by pressing the whole length of the lips together, and forcing them open with a strong breath. It has a near affinity, with the other labial letters; and is confounded by the Germans with P, and by the Gascons with V; from which an epigrammatist remarks, that bibere and vivere are in Gascony the same. The Spaniards, in most words, use B or V indifferently.

BAA. n. s. [See the verb.] The cry of a sheep

— Therefore thou art a sheep. ——
Such another proof would make me cry baa.
Shakespeare.

To BAA. v. n. [balo, Lat.] To cry, like a sheep.

Or like a lamb, whose dam away is set,
He treble baas for help, but none can get. Sidney.

To BA'BBLE. v. n. [babbelen, Germ. babiller, Fr.]

1. To prattle, like a child; to prate imperfectly.

My babbling praises I repeat no more;
But hear, rejoice, stand silent, and adore. Prior.

2. To talk idly, or irrationally.

John had conned over a catalogue of hard words; these, he used to babble indifferently, in all companies. Arbuthnot.

Let the silent sanctuary show,
What from the babbling schools we may not know.
Prior.

3. To talk thoughtlessly; to tell secrets.

There is more danger, in a reserved and silent friend, than in a noisy babbling enemy.
L'Estrange.

4. To talk much.

The babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns;
As, if a double hunt were heard at once.
Shakespeare.

And had I pow'r, to give that knowledge birth,
In all the speeches of the babbling earth. Prior.

The babbling echo had descry'd his face;
She, who in other's words her silence breaks.
Addison.

BA'BBLE. n. s. [babil, Fr.] Idle talk; senseless prattle.

This babble shall not henceforth trouble me:
Here is a coil with protestation. Shakesp.
Come, no more!
This is meer moral babble Milton.
With volleys of eternal babble,
And clamour meer unanswerable. Hudibras.
The babble, impertinence, and folly, I have taken notice of in disputes. Glanville.

BA'BBLEMENT. n. s. [from babble.] Senseless prate; empty words.

Deluded all this while, with ragged notions and babblements; while they expected worthy and delightful knowledge. Milton.

BA'BBLER. n. s. [from babble.]

1. An idle talker; an irrational prattler.

We hold our time too precious, to be spent
With such a babbler. Shakespeare.

The apostle had no sooner proposed it, to the masters at Athens; but he himself was ridiculed, as a babbler. Rogers.

2. A teller of secrets.

Utterers of secrets he from thence debarr'd;
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime.
Fairy Queen

Great babblers, or talkers, are not fit for trust.
L'Estrange.

BABE. n. s. [baban, Welsh: babbaerd, Dutch; bambino, Italian.] An infant; a child of either sex.

Those, that do teach your babes,
Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks:
He might have chid me so; for, in good faith,
I am a child to chiding. Shakespeare.

Nor shall Sebastian's formidable name
Be longer us'd, to lull the crying babe. Dryden.

The babe had all, that infant care beguiles;
And early knew his mother, in her smiles.
Dryden.

BA'BERY. n. s. [from babe.] Finery, to please a babe or child.

So have I seen trim books in velvet dight,
With golden leaves and painted babery
Of seely boys, please unacquainted sight. Sidney.

BA'BISH. adj. [from babe.] Childish.

If he be bashful, and will soon blush; they call him a babish and ill brought up thing. Ascham.

BABO'ON. n. s. [babouin, Fr. It is supposed by Skinner, to be the augmentation of babe, and to import a great babe.] A monkey of the largest kind.

You had looked through the grate, like a geminy of baboons. Shakespeare.

He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a baboon. Addison.

BA'BY. n. s. [See BABE.]

1. A child; an infant.

The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum. Shakespeare.

The child must have sugar-plums, rather than make the poor baby cry. Locke.

He must marry, and propagate: the father cannot stay, for the portion; nor the mother, for babes to play with. Locke.

2. A small image, in imitation of a child, which girls play with.

The archduke saw, that Perkin would prove a runnagate, and it was the part of children, to fall out about babies. Bacon.

Since no image can represent the great Creator; never think to honour him, by your foolish puppets, and babies of dirt and clay. Stilling fleet.

BA'CCATED. adj. [baccatus, Lat.] Beset with pearls; having many berries. Dict.

BACCHANA'LIAN. n. s. [from bacchanalia, Lat.] A riotous person; a drunkard.

BA'CCHANALS. n. s. [bacchanalia, Lat.] The drunken feasts and revels of Bacchus, the god of wine.

Ha, my brave emperor! shall we dance now the Egyptian bacchanals, and celebrate our drink?
Shakespeare.

What wild fury was there, in the heathen bacchanals, which we have not seen equalled?
Decay of Piety.

Both extremes were banish'd, from their walls;
Carthusian fasts, and fulsome bacchanals. Pope.

BA'CCHUS BO'LE. n. s. A flower, not tall, but very full and broad-leaved.
Mortimer.

BACCI'FEROUS. adj. [from bacca a berry, and fero to bear, Lat.] Berry-bearing.

Bacciferous trees are of four kinds.

1. Such, as bear a caliculate or naked berry; the flower and calix, both falling off together, and leaving the berry bare; as the sassafras trees.
2. Such, as have a naked monospermous fruit; that is, containing in it only one seed; as the arbutes.
3. Such, as have but polyspermous fruit; that is, containing two or more kernels or seeds within it; as the jesminum, ligustrum.
4. Such, as have their fruit composed of many acini, or round soft balls, set close together like a bunch of grapes; as the uva marina. Ray.

BACCI'VOROUS. adj. [from bacca a berry, and voro to devour, Lat.] Devouring berries. Dict.

BA'CHELOR. n. s. [This is a word of very uncertain etymology; it not being well known, what was its original sense. Junius derives it from βάκηλος foolish; Menage, from bas chevalier a knight of the lowest rank; Spelman, from baculus a staff; Cajas, from buccella an allowance of provision. The most probable derivation seems to be, from bacca laurûs, the berry of a laurel or bay; bachelors being young, are of good hopes, like laurels in the berry. Dr. Lawrence observed, that Menage's etymology is much confirmed by the practice in our universities of calling a Bachelor, Sir. In Latin, baccalaureus.]

1. A man unmarried.

Such separation
Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid. Shakesp.

The haunting of dissolute places, or resort to courtesans, are no more punished in married men, than in bachelors. Bacon.

A true painter naturally delights in the liberty, which belongs to the bachelor's estate Dryden.

Let sinful bachelors their woes deplore;
Full well they merit all they feel, and more.
Pope.

2. A man, who takes his first degrees at the university, in any profession.

Being a boy, new bachelor of arts, I chanced to speak against the pope. Ascham.

I appear before your honour, in behalf of Martinus Scriblerus, bachelor of physic.
Mart. Scriblerus

3. A knight of the lowest order. This is a sense now little used.

BA'CHELORSHIP. n. s. [from bachelor.] The condition of a bachelor.

Her mother, living yet, can testify,
She was the first fruit of my bachelorship. Shakesp.

BACK. n. s. [bac, bæc, Sax. bach, Germ.]

1. The hinder part of the body, from the neck to the thighs.

Part following enter; part remain without,
And mount on others backs, in hopes to share.
Dryden.

2. The outer part of the hand when it is shut: opposed to the palm.

Methought love pitying me, when he saw this,
Gave me your hands, the backs and palms to kiss.
Donne.

3. The outward part of the body; that which requires clothes; opposed to the belly.

Those who, by their ancestors, have been set free from a constant drudgery to their backs and their bellies, should bestow some time on their heads. Locke.

4. The rear: opposed to the van.

He might conclude, that Walter would be upon the king's back, as his majesty was upon his. Clarendon.

5. The place behind.

As the voice goeth round, as well towards the back as towards the front of him that speaketh, so does the echo: for you have many back echoes to the place where you stand. Bacon.

Antheus, Sergestus grave, Cleanthus strong,
And at their backs a mighty Trojan throng,
Dryden.

6. The part of any thing out of sight.

Trees set upon the backs of chimnies do ripen fruit sooner. Bacon's Natural History.

7. The thick part of any tool opposed to the edge; as the back of a knife or sword: whence backsword, or sword with a back; as,

Bull dreaded not old Lewis either at backsword, single faulchion, or cudgel-play. Arbuthnot.

8. To turn the back on one; to forsake him, or neglect him.

At the hour of death, all friendships of the world bid him adieu, and the whole creation turns its back upon him. South.

9. To turn the back; to go away: to be not within the reach of taking cognizance.

His back was no sooner turned, but they returned to their former rebellion. Sir J. Davies.

BACK. adv. [from the noun.]

1. To the place from which one came.

Back you shall not to the house, unless
You undertake that with me. Shakespeare.

He sent many to seek the ship Argo, threatening that if they brought not back Medea, they should suffer in her stead Raleigh's History of the World.

Where they are, and why they came not back,
Is now the labour of my thoughts. Milton.

Back to thy native island might'st thou sail
And leave half-heard the melancholy tale. Pope.

2. Backward; as retreating from the present station.

I've been surpris'd in an unguarded hour,
But must not now go back; the love, that lay
Half smother'd in my breast, has broke through all
Its weak restraints. Addison.

3. Behind; not coming forward.

I thought to promote thee unto great honour; but lo the Lord hath kept thee back from honour. Numb. xxiv. 11.

Constrain the glebe, keep back the hurtful weed. Blackmore.

5. Sick: with of; as, bad of a fever.

BAD. } The preterite of bid.
BADE. }
And for an earnest of greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee Thane of Cawdor. Shakespeare.

BADGE. n. s. [A word of uncertain etymology; derived by Junius from bode or bade a messenger, and supposed to be corrupted from badage, the credential of a messenger; but taken by Skinner and Minshew from bagghe, Dut. a jewel, or bague, Fr. a ring. It seems to come from bajula, to carry, Lat.]

1. A mark or cognizance worn to shew the relation of the wearer to any person or thing.
But on his breast a bloody cross he bore,
The dear resemblance of his dying lord;
For whose sweet sake that glorious badge he wore. Spenser.
The outward splendour of his office, is the badge and the token of that sacred character which he inwardly bears. Atterbury.

2. A token by which one is known.
A savage tygress on her helmet lies;
The famous badge Clarinda us'd to bear. Fairfax.

3. The mark or token of any thing.
There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough, without a badge of bitterness. Shakesp.
Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge. Shakesp.
Let him not bear the badges, of a wreck,
Nor beg with a blue table on his back. Dryden.

To BADGE. v. a [from the noun.] To mark as with a badge.
Your royal father's murder'd——
——Oh, by whom?——
Those of his chamber, as it seem'd had done 't:
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers. Shakespeare.

BA'DGER. n. s. [bedour, Fr. melis, Lat.] An animal that earths in the ground, used to be hunted.
That a brock, or badger, hath legs of one side shorter than the other, is received not only by theorists and unexperienced believers, but most who behold them daily. Brown.

BA'DGER. n. s. [perhaps from the Latin bajulus a carrier; but by Junius derived from the badger, a creature who stows up his provision.] One that buys corn and victuals in one place, and carries it unto another. Cowell.

BA'DGER-LEGGED. [from badger and legged.] Having legs of an unequal length, as the badger is supposed to have.
His body crooked all over, big-bellied, badger-legged, and his complexion swarthy. L'Estrange.

BA'DLY. adv. [from bad.] In a bad manner; not well.
How goes the day with us? O tell me Hubert.—
Badly, I fear. How fares your majesty? Shakesp.

BA'DNESS. n. s. [from bad.] Want of good qualities, either natural or moral; desert; depravity.
It was not your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set a work by a reproveable badness in himself. Shakesp.
There is one convenience in the city, which makes some amends for the badness of the pavement. Addison on Italy.
I did not see how the badness of the weather could be the king's fault? Addison.

To BA'FFLE. v. a. [baffler, Fr.]

1. To elude; to make ineffectual.
They made a shift to think themselves guiltless, in spite of all their sins; to break the precept, and at the same time to baffle the curse. South.
He hath deserved to have the grace withdrawn, which he hath so long baffled and defied. Atterbury.

2. To confound; to defeat with some confusion, as by perplexing or amusing: to baffle is sometimes less than to conquer.
Etruria lost,
He brings to Turnus' aid his baffled host. Dryden.
When the mind has brought itself to close thinking, it may go on roundly. Every abstruse problem, every intricate question, will not baffle, discourage, or break it. Locke.
A foreign potentate trembles at a war with the English nation, ready to employ against him such revenues as shall baffle his designs upon their country. Addison.

BA'FFLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A defeat.
It is the skill of the disputant that keeps off a baffle. South.
The authors having missed of their aims, are fain to retreat with frustration and a baffle. South.

BA'FFLER. n. s. [from baffle.] He that puts to confusion, or defeats.

Experience, that great baffler of speculation, assures us the thing is too possible, and brings, in all ages, matter of fact to confute our suppositions. Government of the Tongue.

BAG. n. s. [belge, Sax. from whence perhaps, by dropping, as is usual, the harsh consonant, came bege, bage, bag.]

1. A sack, or pouch, to put any thing in, as money, corn.

Cousin, away for England; haste before,
And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; their imprison'd angels
Set thou at liberty. Shakespeare.

What is it that opens thy mouth in praises? Is it that thy bags and thy barns are full? South.

Waters were inclosed within the earth, as in a bag. Burnet.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke. Pope.

2. That part of animals in which some particular juices are contained, as the poison of vipers.

The swelling poison of the several sects,
Which, wanting vent, the nation's health infects,
Shall burst its bag. Dryden.

Sing on, sing on, for I can ne'er be cloy'd;
So may thy cows their burden'd bags distend. Dryden.

3. An ornamental purse of silk tied to men's hair.

We saw a young fellow riding towards us full gallop, with a bob wig and black silken bag tied to it. Addison.

4. A term used to signify different quantities of certain commodities; as, a bag of pepper, a bag of hops.

To BAG. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into a bag.

Accordingly he drain'd those marshy grounds,
And bagg'd them in a blue cloud. Dryden.

Hops ought not to be bagged up hot. Mortimer.

2. To load with a bag.

Like a bee, bagg'd with his honey'd venom,
He brings it to your hive. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

To BAG. v. n. To swell like a full bag

The skin seemed much contracted, yet it bagged, and had a porringer full of matter in it. Wiseman.

Two kids that in the valley stray'd
I found by chance, and to my fold convey'd:
They drain two bagging udders every day. Dryd.

BA'GATELLE. n. s. [bagatelle, Fr.] A trifle; a thing of no importance; a word not naturalised.

Heaps of hair rings and cypher'd seals;
Rich trifles, serious bagatelles. Prior.

BA'GGAGE. n. s. [from bag; baggage, Fr.]

1. The furniture and utensils of an army.

The army was an hundred and seventy thousand footmen, and twelve thousand horsemen, beside the baggage. Judith.

Riches are the baggage of virtue; they cannot be spared nor left behind, but they hinder the march. Bacon.

They were probably always in readiness, and carried among the baggage of the army. Addison on Italy.

2. The goods that are to be carried away, as bag and baggage.

Dolabella designed, when his affairs grew desperate in Egypt, to pack up bag and baggage, and sail for Italy. Arbuthnot.

3. A worthless woman; in French bagaste; so called, because such women follow camps.

A spark of indignation did rise in her, not to suffer such a baggage to win away any thing of hers. Sidney.

When this baggage meets with a man who has vanity to credit relations she turns him to account. Spectator.

BA'GNIO. n. s. [bagno, Ital. a bath.] A house for bathing, sweating, and otherwise cleansing the body.

I have known two instances of malignant fevers produced by the hot air of a bagnio. Arbuth. on Air.

BA'GPIPE. n. s. [from bag and pipe; the wind being received in a bag.] A musical instrument, consisting of a leathern bag, which blows up like a foot-ball, by means of a port-vent or little tube fixed to it, and stopped by a valve and three pipes or flutes; the first called the great pipe or drone, and the second the little one, which pass the wind out only at the bottom; the third has a reed, and is played on by compressing the bag under the arm, when full; and opening or stopping the holes, which are eight, with the fingers. The bagpipe takes in the compass of three octaves. Chambers.

No banners but shirts, with some bad bagpipes instead of drum and fife. Sidney.

He heard a bagpipe, and saw a general animated with the sound. Addison's Freeholder.

BAGPI'PER. n. s. [from bagpipe.] One that plays on a bagpipe.

Some that will evermore peep thro' their eyes,
And laugh like parrots, at a bagpiper. Shakesp.

BAGUETTE. n. s. [Fr. a term of architecture.] A little round moulding, less than an astragal; sometimes carved and enriched.

To BAIGNE. v. a. [bagner, Fr.] To drench; to soak: a word out of use.

The women forslow not to baigne them, unless they plead their heels, with a worse perfume than Jugurth found in the dungeon. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

BAIL. n. s. [Of this word the etymologists give many derivations; it seems to come from the French bailler, to put into the hand; to deliver up, as a man delivers himself up in surety.]

Bail is the freeing or setting at liberty one arrested or imprisoned upon action either civil or criminal, under security taken for his appearance. There is both common and special bail; common bail is in actions of small prejudice, or slight proof, called common, because any sureties in that case are taken: whereas, upon causes of greater weight, or apparent speciality, special bail or surety, must be taken. There is a difference between bail and mainprise; for he that is mainprised is at large, until the day of his appearance: but where a man is bailed, he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward and custody for the time; and they may, if they will, keep him in ward or in prison at that time, or otherwise at their will. Cowell.

Worry'd with debts, and past all hopes of bail,
Th' unpity'd wretch lies rotting in a jail. Roscom.

And bribe with presents, or, when presents fail,
They send their prostituted wives for bail. Dryd.

To BAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give bail for another.

Let me be their bail——
They shall be ready at your highness' will,
To answer their suspicion——
Thou shalt not bail them. Shakesp. Titus Andron.

2. To admit to bail.

When they had bailed the twelve bishops who were in the Tower, the house of Commons, in great indignation, caused them immediately to be recommitted to the Tower. Clarendon.

BA'ILABLE. adj. [from bail.] That may be set at liberty by bail or sureties.

BA'ILIFF. n. s. [a word of doubtful etymology in itself, but borrowed by us from baillie, Fr.]

1. A subordinate officer.

Lausanne is under the canton of Berne, governed by a bailiff sent every three years from the senate of Berne. Addison.

2. An officer whose business it is to execute arrests.

It many times happeneth, that, by the undersheriffs and their bailiffs, the owner hath incurred the forfeiture, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process that runneth against him. Bacon.

A bailiff, by mistake, seized you for a debtor, and kept you the whole evening in a spunging-house. Swift.

Swift as a bard the bailiff leaves behind. Pope.

3. An under-steward of a manor.

BA'ILIWICK. n. s. [of baillie, Fr. and pic, Sax.] The place of the jurisdiction of a bailiff within his hundred, or the lord's franchise. It is that liberty which is exempted from the sheriff of the county, over which the lord of the liberty appointeth a bailiff. Cowell.

A proper officer is to walk up and down his bailiwicks. Spenser.

There issued writs to the sheriffs, to return the names of the several land-owners in their several bailiwicks. Hale.

To BAIT. v. a. [batan, Sax. baitzen, Germ.]

1. To put meat upon a hook, in some place to tempt fish, or other animals.

Oh cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
With saints dost bait thy hook! most dangerous
Is that temptation that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Shak. Meas. for Meas.

Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting, give him a show of comfort in his suit, and lead him on with a sure baited delay, till he hath pawned his horses to mine host of the garter. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Many sorts of fishes feed upon insects, as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Ray.

How are the sex improv'd in am'rous arts!
What new-found snares they bait for human hearts! Gay.

2. To give meat to one's self, or horses, on the road.

What so strong,
But, wanting rest, will also want of might?
The sun, that measures heaven all day long,
At night doth bait his steeds the ocean waves among. Spenser.

To BAIT. v. a. [from battre, Fr. to beat.]

1. To attack with violence.

Who seeming sorely chaffed at his band,
As chained bear, whom cruel dogs do bait,
With idle force did fain them to withstand. Fairy Queen.

I will not yield
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet,
And to be baited with the rabble's curse. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. To harass by the help of others; as, we bait a boar with mastiffs, but a bull with bull-dogs.

To BAIT. v. n. To stop at any place for refreshment: perhaps this word is more properly bate, to abate speed.

But our desires tyrannical extortion
Doth force us there to set our chief delightfulness,
Where but a baiting place is all our portion. Sidney.

As one who on his journey baits at noon,
Tho' bent on speed: so here th' archangel paus'd. Milton.

In all our journey from London to his house, we did not so much as bait at a whig inn. Addis. Spec.

To BAIT. v. n. [as an hawk.] To clap the wings; to make an offer of flying; to flutter.

All plum'd like estridges, that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats like images. Shakesp.

Hood my unman'd blood baiting in my cheeks
With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold,
Thinks true love acted simple modesty. Shakep.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
That is, to watch her as we watch those kites
That bait and beat, and will not be obedient.
Shakespeare.

BAIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Meat set to allure fish, or other animals, to a snare.

The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait.
Shakespeare.

2. A temptation; an enticement; allurement.

And that same glorious beauty's idle boast
Is but a bait such wretches to beguile. Spenser.

Taketh therewith the souls of men, as with the baits. Hooker.

Sweet words, I grant, baits and allurements sweet,
But greatest hopes with greatest crosses meet.
Fairfax.

Fruit, like that
Which grew in Paradise, the bait of Eve
Us'd by the tempter. Milton.

Secure from foolish pride's affected state,
And specious flattery's more pernicious bait.
Roscommon.

Her head was bare,
But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knot was tied above:
Sweet negligence! unheeded bait of love. Dryd.

Grant that others could with equal glory
Look down on pleasures, and the baits of sense.
Addison.

3. A refreshment on a journey.

BAIZE. n. s. A kind of coarse open cloth stuff, having a long nap; sometimes frized on one side, and sometimes not frized. This stuff is without wale, being wrought on a loom with two treddles, like flannel. Chambers.

To BAKE. v. a. participle passive, baked or baken. [bæcan, Sax. becken, Germ. supposed by Wachter to come from bec, which, in the Phrygian language, signified bread.]

1. To heat any thing in a close place; generally in an oven.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread. Isaiah.

The difference of prices of bread proceeded from their delicacy in bread, and perhaps something in their manner of baking. Arbuthnot.

2. To harden in the fire.

The work of the fire is a kind of baking; and whatsoever the fire baketh, time doth, in some degree, dissolve Bacon.

3. To harden with heat.

With vehement suns
When dusty summer bakes the crumbling clods,
How pleasant is't, beneath the twisted arch,
To ply the sweet carouse! Philips.

The sun with flaming arrows pierc'd the flood,
And, darting to the bottom, bak'd the mud. Dryd.

To BAKE. v. n.

1. To do the work of baking.

I keep his house, and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds, and d. all myself. Shakespeare.

2. To be heated or baked.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakesp. Macbeth.

BAKED Meats. Meats dressed by the oven.

BA'KER. n. s. [from To bake.] He whose trade is to bake.

In life and health, every man must proceed upon trust, there being no knowing the intention of the cook or baker. South.

BA'LANCE. n. s. [balance, Fr. bilanx, Lat.]

1. One of the six simple powers in mechanicks, used principally for determining the difference of weight in heavy bodies. It is of several forms. Chambers.

2. A pair of scales.

A balance of power, either without or within a state, is best conceived by considering what the nature of a balance is. It supposes three things; first, the part which is held, together with the hand that holds it; and then the two scales, with whatever is weighed therein. Swift.

For when on ground the burden balance lies,
The empty part is lifted up the higher.
Sir J. Davies.

3. A metaphorical balance, or the mind employed in comparing one thing with another.

I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrong our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer:
Griefs heavier than our offences. Shakes. Hen. VI.

4. The act of comparing two things, as by the balance.

Comfort arises not from others being miserable, but from this inference upon the balance, that we suffer only the lot of nature. L'Estrange.

Upon a fair balance of the advantages on either side, it will appear, that the rules of the gospel are more powerful means of conviction than such message. Atterbury

5. The overplus of weight; that quantity by which, of things weighed together, one exceeds the other.

Care being taken, that the exportation exceed in value the importation; and then the balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

6. That which is wanting to make two parts of an account even; as, he stated the account with his correspondent, and paid the balance.

7. Equipoise; as, balance of power. See the second sense.

Love, hope, and joy, fair pleasure's smiling train;
Hate, fear, and grief, the family of pain;
These mix'd with art, and to due bounds confin'd,
Make and maintain the balance of the mind. Pope.

8. The beating part of a watch.

It is but supposing that all watches, whilst the balance beats, think; and it is sufficiently proved, that my watch thought all last night. Locke.

9. [In astronomy.] One of the twelve signs of the zodiack, commonly called Libra.

Or wilt thou warm our summers with thy rays,
And seated near the balance poise the days? Dryd.

To BA'LANCE. v. a. [balancer, Fr.]

1. To weigh in a balance, either real or figurative; to compare by the balance.

If men would but balance the good and the evil of things, they would not venture soul and body for dirty interest. L'Estrange.

2. To regula'e the weight in a balance; to keep in a state of just proportion.

Heav'n that hath plac'd this Island to give law,
To balance Europe, and her states to awe. Waller.

3. To counterpoise; to weigh equal to; to be equipollent; to counteract.

The attraction of the glass is balanced, and rendered ineffectual, by the contrary attraction of the liquor. Newton.

4. To regulate an account, by stating it on both sides.

Judging is balancing an account, and determining on which side the odds lie. Locke.

5. To pay that which is wanting to make the two parts of an account equal.

Give him leave
To balance the account of Blenheim's day. Prior.

Though I am very well satisfied, that it is not in my power to balance accounts with my Maker, I am resolved, however, to turn all my endeavours that way. Addison, Spectator.

To BA'LANCE. v. n. To hesitate; to fluctuate between equal motives, as a balance plays when charged with equal weights.

Were the satisfaction of lust, and the joys of heaven, offered to any one's present possession, he would not balance, or err, in the determination of his choice. Locke.

Since there is nothing that can offend, I see not why you should balance a moment about printing it. Atterbury to Pope.

BA'LANCER. n. s. [from balance.] The person that weighs any thing.

BA'LASS Ruby. n. s. [balas, Fr. supposed to be an Indian term.] A kind of ruby.

Balass ruby is of a crimson colour, with a cast of purple, and seems best to answer the description of the ancients. Woodward on Fossils.

BALCO'NY. n. s. [balcon, Fr. balcone, Ital.] A frame of iron, wood, or stone, before the window of a room.

Then pleasure came, who liking not the fashion,
Began to make balconies, terraces,
Till she had weaken'd all by alteration. Herbert.

When dirty waters from balconies drop,
And dext'rous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop.
Gay.

BALD. adj. [bal, Welsh.]

1. Wanting hair; despoiled of hair by time or sickness.

Neither shall men make themselves bald for them. Jeremiah.

I find it remarked by Marchetti, that the cause of baldness in men is the dryness of the brain, and its shrinking from the skull; he having observed, that in bald persons, under the bald part, there was a vacuity between the skull and the brain. Ray.

He should imitate Cæsar, who, because his head was bald, covered that defect with laurels. Addn.

2. Without natural covering.

Under an oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity. Shakesp.

3. Without the usual covering.

He is set at the upper end o' th' table; but they stand bald before him Shakespeare.

4. Unadorned; inelegant.

Hobbes, in the preface to his own bald translation, begins the praise of Homer when he should have ended it Dryden's Fables, Preface.

And that, though labour'd, line must bald appear,
That brings ungrateful musick to the ear. Creech.

5. Mean; naked; without dignity: without value; bare.

What should the people do with these bald tribunes?
On whom depending, their obedience fails
To th' greater bench. Shakespeare.

6. Bald was used by the northern nations, to signify the same as audax bold; and is still in use. So Baldwin, and by inversion Winbald, is bold conqueror; Ethelbald, nobly bold; Eadbald, happily bold; which are of the same import as Thraseas, Thrasymachus, and Thrasybulus, &c. Gibson.

BA'LDACHIN. n. s. [baldachino, Ital.] A piece of architecture, in form of a canopy, supported with columns, and serving as a covering to an altar. It properly signifies a rich silk, Du Cange, and was a canopy carried over the host. Builder's Dict.

And there corrupting to a wound,
Spreads leprosy and baldness round. Swift.

3. Meanness of writing; inelegance.

BA'LDRICK. n. s. [Of uncertain etymology.]

1. A girdle. By some Dictionaries it is explained a bracelet; but I have not found it in that sense.

Athwart his breast a baldrick brave he ware,
That shin'd, like twinkling stars, with stones most precious rare. Fairy Queen.
A radiant baldrick, o'er his shoulders tied,
Sustain'd the sword that glitter'd at his side. Pope.

2. The zodiack.

That like the twins of Jove they seem'd in sight,
Which deck the baldrick of the heavens bright. Spenser.

BALE. n. s. [balle, Fr.] A bundle or parcel of goods packed up for carriage.]

Armed to point, sought back to turn again;
For light she hated as the deadly bale. Fairy Q.

To BALE. v. a. A word used by the sailors, who bid bale out the water; that is, lave it out, by way of distinction from pumping, Skinner. I believe from bailler, Fr. to deliver from hand to hand.

To BALE. v. n. [emballer, Fr. imballure, Ital.] To make up into a bale.

BA'LEFUL. adj. [from bale.]

1. Full of misery; full of grief; sorrowful; sad; woeful.

Ah, luckless babe! born under cruel star,
And in dead parents baleful ashes bred. Fairy Q.
But when I feel the bitter baleful smart,
Which her fair eyes unwares do work in me,
I think that I a new Pandora see. Spenser.

Roun'd he throws his baleful eyes,
That witness'd huge affliction and dismay,
Mix'd with obdurate pride and stedfast hate. Milt.

2. Full of mischief; destructive.

But when he saw his threat'ning was but vain,
He turn'd about, and search'd his baleful books again. Fairy Queen.
Boiling choler chokes,
By sight of these, our baleful enemies. Shakesp.
Unseen, unfelt, the fiery serpent skims
Betwixt her linen and her naked limbs,
His baleful breath inspiring as he glides. Dryd.
Happy Iërne, whose most wholesome air
Poisons envenom'd spiders, and forbids
The baleful toad and vipers from her shore. Philips.

BA'LEFULLY. adv. [from baleful.] Sorrowfully; mischievously.

BALK. n. s. [balk, Dut. and Germ.] A great beam, such as is used in building; a rafter over an out-house or barn.

To BALK. v. a. [See the noun.]

1. To disappoint; to frustrate; to elude.

Another thing in the grammar schools I see no use of, unless it be to balk young lads in learning languages. Locke.
Every one has a desire to keep up the vigour of his faculties, and not to balk his understanding by what is too hard for it. Locke.
But one may balk his good intent,
And take things otherwise than meant. Prior.
The prices must have been high; for a people so rich would not balk their fancy. Arbuthnot.
Balk'd of his prey, the yelling monster flies,
And fills the city with his hideous cries. Pope.
Is there a variance? enter but his door,
Balk'd are the courts, and contest is no more. Pope.

2. To miss any thing; to leave untouched.

By grisly Pluto he doth swear,
He rent his clothes, and tore his hair;
And as he runneth here and there,
An acorn cup he greeteth;
Which soon he taketh by the stalk,
About his head he lets it walk,
Nor doth he any creature balk,
But lays on all he meeteth. Drayton's Nimphid.

3. To omit, or refuse, any thing.

This was looked for at your hand, and this was balkt. Shakespeare.

4. To heap, as on a ridge. This, or something like this, seems to be intended here.

Ten thousand bold Scots, three and twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood, did Sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains. Shakesp.

BA'LKERS. n. s. [In fishery.] Men who stand on a cliff, or high place on the shore, and give a sign to the men in the fishing-boats, which way the passage or shole of herrings is. Cowell.

The pilchards are pursued by a bigger fish, called a plusher, who leapeth above water, and bewrayeth them to the balker. Carew's Sur. of Corn.

BALL. n. s. [bol, Dan. bol, Dutch.]

Bal, diminutively Belin, the sun, or Apollo, of the Celtæ, was called by the ancient Gauls Abellio. Whatever was round, and in particular the head, was called by the ancients either Bál, or Bel, and likewise Bol and Búl. Among the modern Persians, the head is called Pole; and the Flemings do still call the head Boile. Πῶλος is the head or poll; and πολέω is to turn. Βολος likewise signifies a round ball, whence bowl, and bell, and ball, which the Welsh term bél. By the Scotch also the head is named bhél; whence the English bill is derived, signifying the beak of a bird. Figuratively, the Phrygians and Thurians by βαλλην understood a king. Hence also, in the Syriack dialects, βαάλ, βάλ, and likewise βῶλ, signifies lord, and by this name also the sun; and, in some dialects, Ἥλιος and Ἅλιος, whence Ἅλιος and Ἥλιος, Γήλιος and Βήλιος, and also, in the Celtick diminutive way of expression, Ἕλενος, Γήλενος, and Βήλενος, signified the sun; and Ἑλένη, Γαλένη, and Βαλένη, the moon. Among the Teutonicks, hol and heil have the same meaning; whence the adjective holig, or heilig, is derived, and signifies divine or holy; and the aspiration being changed into s, the Romans form their Sol. Barter.

1. Any thing made in a round form, or approaching to round.

Worms with many feet round themselves into balls under logs of timber, but not in the timber. Bacon.
Nor arms they wear, nor swords and bucklers wield,
But whirl from leathern strings huge balls of lead. Dryden.
Like a ball of snow tumbling down a hill, he gathered strength as he passed. Howell.
Still unripen'd in the dewy mines,
Within the ball a trembling water shines,
That through the crystal darts. Addison.
Such of those corpuscles as happened to combine into one mass, formed the metallick and mineral balls, or nodules, which we find. Woodward.

2. A round thing to play with, either with the hand or foot, or a racket.

Balls to the stars, and thralls to fortune's reign,
Turn'd from themselves, infected with their cage,
Where death is fear'd and life his held with pain. Sidney.
Those I have seen play at ball, grow extremely earnest who should have the ball. Sidney.

3. A small round thing, with some particular mark, by which votes are given, or lots cast.

Let lots decide it.
For every number'd captive put a ball
Into an urn; three only black be there,
The rest, all white, are safe. Dryden.
Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rowls,
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden.

4. A globe; as, the ball of the earth.

Julius and Antony, those lords of all,
Low at her feet present the conquer'd ball. Granville.
Ye gods, what justice rules the ball?
Freedom and arts together fall. Pope.

5. A globe borne as an ensign of sovereignty.

Hear the tragedy of a young man, that by right ought to hold the ball of a kingdom: but, by fortune, is made himself a ball, tossed from misery to misery, from place to place. Bacon.

6. Any part of the body that approaches to roundness; as, the lower and swelling part of the thumb; the apple of the eye.

Be subject to no sight but mine; invisible
To every eye ball else. Shakespeare.
To make a stern countenance, let your brow bend so, that it may almost touch the ball of the eye. Peacham.

7. The skin spread over a hollow piece of wood, stuffed with hair or wool, which the printers dip in ink, to spread it on the letters.

BALL. n. s. [bal, Fr. from balare, low Lat. from βαλλίζειν to dance.] An entertainment of dancing, at which the preparations are made at the expense of some particular person.

If golden sconces are not on the walls
To light the costly suppers and the balls Dryd.
He would make no extraordinary figure at a ball; but I can assure the ladies, for their consolation, that he has writ better verses on the sex than any man. Swift.

BA'LLAD. n. s. [balade, Fr.] A song.

Ballad once signified a solemn and sacred song, as well as trivial, when Solomon's Song was called the ballad of ballads; but now it is applied to nothing but trifling verse. Watts.

An' I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, may a cup of sack be my poison. Shakespeare.

Like the sweet ballad, this amusing lay
Too long detains the lover on his way. Gay.

To BA'LLAD. v. n. [from the noun.] To make or sing ballads.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like strumpets, and scall'd rhimers
Ballad us out o' tune. Shakespeare.

BA'LLAD-SINGER. n. s. [from ballad and sing.] One whose employment is to sing ballads in the streets.

No sooner 'gan he raise his tuneful song,
But lads and lasses round about him throng,
Not ballad-singer, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet, and loud. Gay.

BA'LLAST. n. s. [ballaste, Dutch.]

1. Something put at the bottom of the ship, to keep it steady to the centre of gravity.

There must be middle counsellors to keep things steady; for without that ballast, the ship will roul too much. Bacon.

As for the ascent of a submarine vessel, this may be easily contrived, if there be some great weight at the bottom of the ship, being part of its ballast; which, by some cord within, may be loosened from it. Wilkins.

As, when empty barks on billows float,
With sandy ballast sailors trim the boat;
So bees bear gravel stones, whose poising weight
Steers through the whistling winds their steady flight Dryden.

2. That which is used to make any thing steady.

Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?
His lading little, and his ballast less. Swift.

To BA'LLAST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put weight at the bottom of a ship, in order to keep her steady.

If this be so ballasted, as to be of equal weight with the like magnitude of water, it will be moveable. Wilkins.

2. To keep any thing steady.

While thus to ballast love I thought,
And so more steddily t' have gone,
I saw I had love's pinnace overfraught. Donne.

Now you have given me virtue for my guide,
And with true honour ballasted my pride. Dryd.

BALLE'TTE. n. s. [ballette, Fr.] A dance in which some history is represented.

BA'LLIARDS. n. s. [from ball, and yard, or stick to push it with.] A play at which a ball is driven by the end of a stick: now corruptly called billiads.

With dice, with cards, with billiards, far unfit,
With shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit. Spens.

BALL'ON. } n. s. [ballon, Fr.]
BALLO'ON. }

1. A large round short-necked vessel used in chymistry.

2. [In architecture.] A ball or globe placed on the top of a pillar.

3. [In fireworks.] A ball of pasteboard, stuffed with combustible matter, which, when fired, mounts to a considerable height in the air, and then bursts into bright sparks of fire, resembling stars.

BA'LLOT. n. s. [ballote, Fr.]

1. A little ball or ticket used in giving votes, being put privately into a box or urn.

2. The act of voting by ballot.

To BA'LLOT. v. n. [ballotter, Fr.] To choose by ballot, that is, by putting little balls or tickets, with particular marks, privately in a box; by counting which, it is known what is the result of the poll, without any discovery by whom each vote was given.

No competition arriving to a sufficient number of balls, they fell to ballot some others. Wotton.

Giving their votes by balloting, they lie under no awe. Swift.

BALLOTA'TION. n. s. [from ballot.] The act of voting by ballot.

The election is intricate and curious, consisting of ten several ballotations. Wotton.

BALM. n. s. [baume, Fr. balsamum, Lat.]

1. The sap or juice of a shrub remarkably odoriferous.

Balm trickles through the bleeding veins
Of happy shrubs, in Idumean plains. Dryden.

2. Any valuable or fragrant ointment.

Thy place is fill'd, thy sceptre wrung from thee;
Thy balm wash'd off wherewith thou wast anointed. Shakespeare.

3. Any thing that sooths or mitigates pain.

You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms apply'd to you. Shakespeare.

Your praise's argument, balm of your age;
Dearest and best. Shakespeare.

A tender smile, our sorrow's only balm. Young.

BALM. } n. s. [melissa, Lat.] The BALM Mint. } name of a plant.

The species are, 1. Garden balm. 2. Garden balm, with yellow variegated flowers. 3. Stinking Roman balm, with softer hairy leaves. Miller.

BALM of Gilead.

1. The juice drawn from the balsam tree, by making incissions in its bark. Its colour is first white, soon after green; but, when it comes to be old, it is of the colour of honey. The smell of it is agreeable, and very penetrating; the taste of it bitter, sharp, and astringent. As little issues from the plant by incision, the balm sold by the merchants is made of the wood and green branches of the tree, distilled by fire, which is generally adulterated with turpentine. Calmet.

It seems to me, that the zori of Gilead, which we render in our Bible by the word balm, was not the same with the balsam of Mecca, but only a better sort of turpentine, then in use for the cure of wounds and other diseases. Prideaux's Connec.

2. A plant remarkable for the strong balsamick scent which its leaves emit, upon being bruised; whence some have supposed, erroneously, that the balm of Gilead was taken from this plant. Miller.

To BALM. v. a. [from balm.]

1. To anoint with balm, or with any thing medicinal.

Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood. Shakespeare.

2. To sooth; to mitigate; to assuage.

Opprest nature sleeps:
This rest might yet have balm'd thy senses. Shak.

BA'LMY. adj. [from balm.]

1. Having the qualities of balm.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid,
In balmy sweat, which with his beams the sun
Soon dry'd. Milton.

2. Producing balm.

Let India boast her groves, nor envy we
The weeping amber, and the balmy tree. Pope.

3. Soothing; soft; mild.

Come, Desdemona! 'tis the soldiers life
To have their balmy slumbers wak'd with strife. Shakespeare.

Such visions hourly pass before my sight,
Which from my eyes their balmy slumbers fright. Dryden.

4. Fragrant; odoriferous.

Those rich perfumes which from the happy shore
The winds upon their balmy wings convey'd,
Whose guilty sweetness first the world betray'd. Dryden.

First Eurus to the rising morn is sent,
The regions of the balmy continent. Dryden.

5. Mitigating: assuasive.

Oh balmy breath, that dost almost persuade Justice to break her sword! Shakespeare.

BA'LNEARY. n. s. [balnearium, Lat.] A bathing-room.

The balnearies, and bathing-places, he exposeth unto the summer setting. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

BALNEA'TION. n. s. [from balneum, Lat. a bath.] The act of bathing.

As the head may be disturbed by the skin, it may the same way be relieved, as is observable in balneations, and fomentations of that part. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

BA'LNEATORY. adj. [balnearius, Lat.] Belonging to a bath or stove.

BA'LOTADE. n. s. The leap of an horse, so that when his fore-feet are in the air, he shews nothing but the shoes of his hinder-feet, without yerking out. A balotade differs from a capriole; for when a horse works at caprioles, he yerks out his hinder legs with all his force. Farrier's Dict.

BA'LSAM. n. s. [balsamum, Lat.] Ointment; unguent; an unctuous application thicker than oil, and softer than salve.

Christ's blood our balsam, if that cure us here,
Him, when our judge, we shall not find severe. Denham.

BA'LSAM Apple. [momordica, Lat.] An annual Indian plant.

BA'LSAM Tree.

This is a shrub which scarce grows taller than the pomegranate tree; the blossoms are like small stars, very fragrant; whence spring out little pointed pods, inclosing a fruit like an almond, called carpobalsamum, as the wood is called xylobalsamum, and the juice opobalsamum. Calmet.

BALSA'MICAL. } adj. [from balsam.] Having BALSA'MICK. } the qualities of balsam; unctuous; mitigating; soft; mild; oily.

If there be a wound in my leg, the vital energy of my soul thrusts out the balsamical humour of my blood to heal it. Hale.

The aliment of such as have fresh wounds ought to be such as keeps the humours from putrefaction, and renders them oily and balsamick. Arbuth.

BA'LUSTER. n. s. [according to Du Cange, from balaustrium, low Lat. a bathing-place.] A small column or pilaster, from an inch and three quarters to four inches square or diameter. Their dimensions and forms are various; they are frequently adorned with mouldings; they are placed with rails on stairs, and in the fronts of galleries in churches.

This should first have been planched over, and railed about with balusters. Carew.

BA'LUSTRADE. n. s. [from baluster.] An assemblage of one or more rows of little turned pillars, called balusters, fixed upon a terrace, or the top of a building, for separating one part from another.

BAM, BEAM, being initials in the name of any place, usually imply it to have been woody; from the Sax. beam, which we use in the same sense to this day. Gibs.

BAMBOO'. n. s. An Indian plant of the reed kind. It has several shoots much larger than our ordinary reeds, which are knotty, and separated from space to space by joints. The bamboo is much larger than the sugar-cane.

To BAMBO'OZLE. v. a. [a cant word not used in pure or in grave writings.] To deceive; to impose upon; to confound.

After Nick had bamboozled about the money,
John called for counters. Arbuthnot.

BAMBO'OZLER. n. s. [from bamboozle.] A tricking fellow; a cheat.

There are a set of fellows they call banterers and bamboozlers, that play such tricks. Arbuthnot.

BAN. n. s. [ban. Teut. a publick proclamation, as of proscription, interdiction, excommunication, publick sale.]

1. Publick notice given of any thing, whereby any thing is publickly commanded or forbidden. This word we use especially in the publishing matrimonial contracts in the church, before marriage, to the end that if any man can say against the intention of the parties, either in respect of kindred or otherwise, they may take their exception in time. And, in the canon law, bannu sunt vroclamationes sponsi & sponsæ in ecclesiis fieri solitae. Cowell.

I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,
And I her husband contradict your bans. Shakesp.
To draw her neck into the bans. Hudibras.

2. A curse; excommunication.

Thou mixture rank of midnight weeds collected,
With Hecate's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

A great oversight it was of St. Peter that he did not accurse Nero, whereby the pope might have got all; yet what need of such a ban, since friar Vincent could tell Atabulipa, that kingdoms were the pope's? Raleigh.

3. Interdiction.

Bold deed to eye
The sacred fruit, sacred to abstinence,
Much more to taste it, under ban to touch. Milt.

4. Ban of the Empire; a publick censure by which the privileges of any German prince are suspended.

He proceeded so far by treaty, that he was proffered to have the imperial ban taken off Altapinus, upon submission. Howell.

To BAN. v. a. [bannen, Dutch, to curse.] To curse; to execrate.

Shall we think that it baneth the work which they leave behind them, or taketh away the use thereof? Hooker.

It is uncertain whether this word, in the foregoing sense, is to be deduced from ban to curse, or bane to poison.

In thy closet pent up, rue my shame,
And ban our enemies, both mine and thine. Shak.
Before these Moors went a Numidian priest bellowing out charms, and casting scrowls of paper on each side, wherein he cursed and banned the Christians. Knolles.

BANA'NA Tree. A species of plantain.

BAND. n. s. [bende, Dutch; band, Sax.]

1. A tie; a bandage; that by which one thing is joined to another.

You shall find the band, that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very strangler of their amity. Shakesp.

2. A chain by which any animal is kept in restraint. This is now usually spelt, less properly, bond.

So wild a beast, so tame ytaught to be,
And buxom to his bands, is joy to see. Hub. Tale.
Since you deny him entrance, he demands
His wife, whom cruelly you hold in bands. Dryd.

3. Any means of union or connexion between persons.

Here's eight that must take hands,
To join in Hymen's bands. Shakesp.

4. Something worn about the neck; a neckcloth. It is now restrained to a neckcloth of particular form, worn by clergymen, lawyers, and students in colleges.

For his mind I do not care;
That's a toy that I could spare:
Let his title be but great,
His cloaths rich, and band sit neat. Ben Jonson.
He took his lodging at the mansion-house of a taylor's widow, who washes, and can clear-starch his bands. Addison.

5. Any thing bound round another.

In old statutes of stone in cellars, the feet of them being bound with leaden bands, it appeared that the lead did swell. Bacon.

6. [In architecture.] Any flat low member or moulding, called also fascia, face, or plinth.

A Roman sworder, and banditto slave,
Murder'd sweet Tully. Shakesp.

BA'NDOG. n. s. [from ban or band, and dog. The original of this word is very doubtful. Caius, De Canibus Britannicis, derives it from band, that is, a dog chained up. Skinner inclines to deduce it from bana a murderer. May it not come from ban a curse, as we say a curst cur; or rather from baund, swelled or large, a Danish word; from whence, in some counties, they call a great nut a ban-nut?] A kind of large dog

The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screech-owls cry, and bandogs howl.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

Or privy, or pert, if any bin,
We have great bandogs will tear their skin. Spens.

1. A kind of shell fish that grow upon timber that lies in the sea.
2. A bird like a goose, fabulously supposed to grow on trees.

It is beyond even an atheist's credulity and impudence, to affirm, that the first men might grow upon trees, as the story goes about barnacles; or might be the lice of some vast prodigious animals, whose species is now extinct. Bentley.

And from the most refin'd of saints
As naturally grow miscreants,
As barnacles turn Soland geese
In th' islands of the Orcades Hudibras.

3. An instrument made commonly of iron for the use of farriers, to hold a horse by the nose, to hinder him from struggling when an incision is made. Farr. Dict.

BARO'METER. n. s. [from βάρος weight, and μέτρον measure.] A machine for measuring the weight of the atmosphere, and the variations in it, in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather. It differs from the baroscope, which only shews that the air is heavier at one time than another, without specifying the difference. The barometer is founded upon the Torricellian experiment, so called from Torricelli, the inventor of it, at Florence, in 1643. It is a glass tube filled with mercury, horizontally sealed at one end; the other open, and immerged in a basin of stagnant mercury: so that, as the weight of the atmosphere diminishes, the mercury in the tube will descend, and, as it increases, the mercury will ascend; the column of mercury suspended in the tube being always equal to the weight of the incumbent atmosphere.

The measuring the heights of mountains, and finding the elevation of places above the level of the sea, hath been much promoted by barometrical experiments, founded upon that essential property of the air, its gravity or pressure. As the column of mercury in the barometer is counterpoised by a column of air of equal weight, so whatever causes make the air heavier or lighter, the pressure of it will be thereby increased or lessened, and of consequence the mercury will rise or fall. Harris.

Gravity is another property of air, whereby it counterpoises a column of mercury from twenty-seven inches and one-half to thirty and one-half, the gravity of the atmosphere varying one-tenth, which are its utmost limits: so that the exact specifick gravity of the air can be determined when the barometer stands at thirty inches, with a moderate heat of the weather. Arbuthnot on Diet.

BAROME'TRICAL. adj. [from barometer.] Relating to the barometer.

He is very accurate in making barometrical and thermometrical instruments. Derh. Physico-Theol.

BA'RON. n. s. [The etymology of this word is very uncertain. Baro, among the Romans, signified a brave warriour, or a brutal man; and, from the first of these significations, Menage derives baron, as a term of military dignity.—Others suppose it originally to signify only a man, in which sense baron, or varon, is still used by the Spaniards; and, to confirm this conjecture, our law yet uses baron and femme, husband and wife. Others deduce it from ber, an old Gaulish word, signifying commander; others from the Hebrew בבר, of the same import. Some think it a contraction of par homme, or peer, which seems least probable.]

1. A degree of nobility, next to a viscount. It may be probably thought, that anciently, in England, all those were called barons, that had such signiories as we now call court barons: and it is said, that, after the Conquest, all such came to the parliament, and sat as nobles in the upper house. But when, by experience, it appeared that the parliament was too much crowded with such multitudes, it became a custom, that none should come but such as the king, for their extraordinary wisdom or quality, thought good to call by writ which writ ran hac vice tantum. After that, men seeing that this state of nobility was but casual, and depending merely on the prince's pleasure, obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male; and these were called barons by letters patent, or by creation, whose posterity are now those barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create more at his pleasure. It is nevertheless thought, that there are yet barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent, and that they may be discerned by their titles; the barons by writ being those that, to the title of lord, have their own surnames annexed; whereas the barons by letters patent are named by their baronies. These barons, which were first by writ, may now justly also be called barons by prescription; for that they have continued barons, in themselves and their ancestors, beyond the memory of man. There are also barons by tenure, as the bishops of the land, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their bishopricks, have always had place in the upper house of parliament, and are called lords spiritual.
2. Baron is an officer, as barons of the exchequer to the king: of these the principal is called lord chief baron, and the three others are his assistants, between the king and his subjects, in causes of justice belonging to the exchequer.
3. There are also barons of the cinque ports; two to each of the seven towns, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rye, Rumney, Hithe, Dover, and Sandwich, that have places in the lower house of parliament. Cowell.

They that bear
The cloth of state above, are four barons
Of the cinque ports. Shakesp.

4. Baron is used for the husband in relation to his wife. Cowell.

BA'RONESS. n. s. [baronessa, Ital. baronissa, Lat.] A baron's lady.

BA'RONET. n. s. [of baron and et, diminutive termination.] The lowest degree of honour that is hereditary: it is below a baron, and above a knight; and has the precedency of all other knights, except the knights of the garter. It was first founded by king James I. A. D. 1611. Cowell. But it appears by the following passage that the term was in use before, though in another sense.

King Edward III. being boarded and crossed by the clergy, was advised to direct out his writs to certain gentlemen of the best abilities, entitling them therein barons in the next parliament. By which means he had so many barons in his parliament, as were able to weigh down the clergy; which barons were not afterwards lords, but baronets, as sundry of them do yet retain the name. Spenser.

BA'RONY. n. s. [baronnie, Fr. beonny, Sax.] That honour or lordship that gives title to a baron. Such are not only the fees of temporal barons, but of bishops also. Cowell

BA'ROSCOPE. n. s. [βάρος and σκοπέω.] An instrument to shew the weight of the atmosphere. See BAROMETER.

If there was always a calm, the equilibrium could only be changed by the contents; where the winds are not variable, the alterations of the baroscope are very small. Arbuthnot.

BA'RRACAN. n. s. [bouracan, or barracan, Fr.] A strong thick kind of camelot.

BA'RRACK. n. s. [barracca. Span.]

BA'RRENNESS. n. s. [from barren.]

1. Want of offspring; want of the power of procreation.

I pray'd for children, and thought barrenness
In wedlock a reproach. Milton.

No more be mention'd then of violence
Against ourselves; and wilful barrenness,
That cuts us off from hope. Milton.

2. Unfruitfulness; sterility; infertility.

Within the self-same-hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value, through the diversity of their fertility or barrenness. Bacon.

3. Want of invention; want of the power of producing any thing new.

The adventures of Ulysses are imitated in the Æneis; though the accidents are not the same, which would have argued him of a total barrenness of invention. Dryden.

4. Want of matter; scantiness.

The importunity of our adversaries hath constrained us longer to dwell than the barrenness of so poor a cause could have seemed either to require or to admit. Hooker.

5. [In theology.] Aridity; want of emotion or sensibility.

The greatest saints sometimes are fervent, and sometimes feel a barrenness of devotion. Taylor.

BA'RRENWORT. n. s. [epimedium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BA'RRFUL. adj. [from bar and full.] Full of obstructions.

A barrful strife!
Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife. Shakespeare.

BA'RRICADE. n. s. [barricade, Fr.]

1. A fortification, made in haste, of trees, earth, waggons, or any thing else, to keep off an attack.
2. Any stop; bar; obstruction.

There must be such a barricade, as would greatly annoy, or absolutely stop, the currents of the atmosphere. Derham.

To BARRICA'DE. v. a. [barricader, Fr.]

1. To stop up a passage.

Now all the pavement sounds with trampling feet,
And the mixt hurry barricades the street;
Entangled here, the waggons lengthen'd team. Gay.

2. To hinder by stoppage.

A new volcano, continually discharging that matter, which being till then barricaded up and imprisoned in the bowels of the earth, was the occasion of very great and frequent calamities. Woodward.

BARRICA'DO. n. s. [barricada, Span.] A fortification; a bar; any thing fixed to hinder entrance.

The access was by a neck of land, between the sea on one part, and the harbour water, or inner sea, on the other; fortified clean over with a strong rampier and barricado. Bacon.

To BARRICA'DO. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to bar; to stop up.

Fast we found, fast shut
The dismal gates, and barricado'd strong! Milton.

He had not time to barricado the doors; so that the enemy entered. Clarendon.

The truth of causes we find so obliterated, that it seems almost barricaded from any intellectual approach. Harvey.

BARRIER. n. s. [barriere, Fr. It is sometimes pronounced with the accent upon the last syllable, but it is placed more properly on the first]

1. A barricade; an entrenchment.

Safe in the love of heav'n, an ocean flows
Around our realm, a barrier from the foes. Pope.

2. A fortification, or strong place, as on the frontiers of a country.

The queen is guarantee of the Dutch, having possession of the barrier, and the revenues thereof, before a peace. Swift

3. A stop; an obstruction.

If you value yourself as a man of learning, you are building a most impassable barrier against improvement. Watts.

4. A bar to mark the limits of any place.

For justs, and tourneys, and barriers, the glories of them are chiefly in the chariots, wherein the challengers make their entries. Bacon

Pris'ners to the pillar bound,
At either barrier plac'd; nor, captives made,
Be freed, or arm'd anew. Dryden

5. A boundary; a limit.

But wave whate'er to Cadmus may belong,
And fix, O muse, the barrier of thy song
At Oedipus. Pope's Statius

How instinct varies in the groveling swine,
Compar'd, half reas'ning elephant! with thine.
'Twixt that and reason what a nice barrier!
For ever sep'rate, yet for ever near. Pope.

BA'RRISTER. n. s. [from bar.] A person qualified to plead causes, called an advocate or licentiate in other countries and courts. Outer barristers are pleaders without the bar, to distinguish them from inner barristers; such are the benchers, or those who have been readers, the counsel of the king, queen, and princes, who are admitted to plead within the bar. A counsellor at law. Blount. Cham.

BARROW. n. s. [beɒɒe, Sax. supposed by Skinner to come from bear.] Any kind of carriage moved by the hand; as, a hand-barrow, a frame of boards, with handles at each end, carried between two men; a wheel-barrow, that which one man pushes forward by raising on one wheel.

Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal, and thrown into the Thames? Shakesp.

No barrow's wheel
Shall mark thy stocking with a miry trace. Gay.

BA'RROW. n. s. [beɒȝ, Sax.] A hog; whence barrow grease, or hog's lard.

BARROW, whether in the beginning or end of names of places, signifies a grove; from beaɒe, which the Saxons used in the same sense. Gibson.

BARROW is likewise used in Cornwall for a hillock, under which, in old times, bodies have been buried.

To BA'RTER. v. n. [baratter, Fr. to trick in traffick; from barat craft, fraud.] To traffick by exchanging one commodity for another, in opposition to purchasing with money.

As if they scorn'd to trade and barter,
By giving or by taking quarter. Hudibras.

A man has not every thing growing upon his soil, and therefore is willing to barter with his neighbour. Collier

To BA'RTER. v. a.

1. To give any thing in exchange for something else.

For him was I exchang'd and ransom'd;
But with a baser man of arms by far
Once, in contempt, they would have barter'd me. Shakesp.

Then as thou wilt dispose the rest,
To those who, at the market rate,
Can barter honour for estate. Prior.

I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods, like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.

2. Sometimes it is used with the particle away before the thing given.

If they will barter away their time, methinks they should at least have some ease in Exchange. Decay of Piety.

He also bartered away plums, that would have rotted in a week, for nuts that would last good for his eating a whole year. Locke.

BA'RTER. n. s. [from the verb.] The act or practice of trafficking by exchange of commodities; sometimes the thing given in exchange.

From England they may be furnished with such things as they may want, and in exchange or barter send other things with which they may abound. Ba.

He who corrupteth English with foreign words, is as wise as ladies that change plate for china; for which the laudable traffick of old clothes is much the fairest barter. Felton.

BA'RTERER. n. s. [from barter.] He that trafficks by exchange of commodities.

BA'RTERY. n. s. [from barter.] Exchange of commodities.

BA'RTON. n. s. The demesne lands of a manour; the manour-house itself; and sometimes the out-houses. Blount.

BASE. adj. [bas, Fr. basso, Ital. baxo, Span. bassus, low Latin; βαϛις.]

1. Mean; vile; worthless: of things.

The harvest white plumb is a base plumb, and the white date plumb are no very good plumbs. Bac.

Pyrcicus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things, as earthen pitchers, a scullery; whereupon he was surnamed Rupographus. Peacham.

2. Of mean spirit; disengenuous; illiberal; ungenerous; low; without dignity of sentiment: of persons.

Since the perfections are such in the party I love, as the feeling of them cannot com unto any unnoble heart; shall that heart, lifted up to such a height, be counted base? Sidney.

It is base in his adversaries thus to dwell upon the excesses of a passion. Atterbury.

3. Of low station; of mean account; without dignity of rank; without honour.

If the lords and chief men degenerate, what shall be hoped of the peasants and baser people? Spenser on Irel.

If that rebellion
Came, like itself, in base and abject routs,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here. Shakesp.

It could not else be, I should prove so base
To sue and be denied such common grace. Shakesp.

And I will yet be more vile than this, and will be base in mine own sight. 2 Sam.

Insurrections of base people are commonly more furious in their beginnings. Bacon.

He, whose mind
Is virtuous, is alone of noble kind;
Though poor in fortune, of celestial race;
And he commits the crime who calls him base. Dryd.

4. Base-born; born out of wedlock, and, by consequence, of no honourable birth; illegitimate.

Why bastard? wherefore base?
When my dimensions are as well compact
As honest madam's issue. Shakesp.

This young lord lost his life with his father in the field, and with them a base son. Camden's Rem.

5. Applied to metals without value. It is used in this sense of all metal except gold and silver.

A guinea is pure gold, if it has nothing but gold in it, without any alloy or baser metal. Watts.

6. Applied to sounds; deep, grave. It is more frequently written bass, though the comparative baser seems to require base.

In pipes, the lower the note holes be, and the further from the mouth of the pipe, the more base sound they yield. Bacon.

BASE-BORN. adj. Born out of wedlock.

But see thy base-born child, thy babe of shame,
Who, left by thee, upon our parish came. Gay.

BASE-COURT. n. s. [bas cour, Fr.] Lower court; not the chief court that leads to the house; the back-yard; the farm-yard.

My lord, in the base-court he doth attend,
To speak with you. Shakesp

BASE-MINDED. adj. Meanspirited; worthless.

It signifieth, as it seemeth, no more than abject, base-minded, false-hearted, coward, or nidget. Camden's Rem

BASE-VIOL. n. s. [usually written bass-viol.] An instrument which is used in concerts for the base sound.

At the first grin he cast every human feature out of his countenance, at the second he became the head of a base-viol. Addison.

BASE. n. s. [bas, Fr. basis, Lat.]

1. The bottom of any thing: commonly used for the lower part of a building, or column.

What if it tempt thee tow'rd the flood, my lord?
Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
That beetles o'er his base into the sea? Shakesp.

Firm Doric pillars found your solid base;
The fair Corinthian crowns the higher space. Dry.

And all below is strength, and all above is grace,
Columns of polish'd marble, firmly set
On golden bases, are his legs and feet. Prior.

2. The pedestal of a statue.

Men of weak abilities in great place, are like little statues set on great bases, made the less by their advancement. Bacon.

Mercury was patron of flocks, and the ancients placed a ram at the base of his images. Broome.

3. That part of any ornament which hangs down as housings.

Phalastus was all in white, having his bases and caparison embroidered. Sidney.

4. The broad part of any body; as, the bottom of a cone.

5. Stockings, or perhaps the armour for the legs [from bas, Fr.]

Nor shall it e'er be said that wight,
With gauntlet blue and bases white,
And round blunt truncheon by his side,
So great a man at arms defy'd. Hudibras.

6. The place from which racers or tilters run: the bottom of the field; the carcer, the starting-post.

He said; to their appointed base they went;
With beating heart th' expecting sign receive,
And, starting all at once, the barrier leave. Dryd.

7. The string that gives a base sound.

At thy well-sharpen'd thumb, from shore to shore,
The trebles squeak for fear, the bases roar. Dryd.

8. An old rustick play, written by Skinner bays, and in some counties called prison bars.

He with two striplings (lads more like to run
The country base, than to commit such slaughter)
Made good the passage. Shakesp.

To BASE. v. a. [baiser, Fr.] To embase; to make less valuable by admixture of meaner metals.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals, which we cannot base: as, whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height. Bacon.

BA'SELY. adv. [from base.]

1. In a base manner; meanly; dishonourably.

The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers. Shakesp.

A lieutenant basely gave it up, as soon as Essex in his passage demanded it. Clarendon.

With broken vows his fame he will not stain,
With conquest basely bought, and with inglorious gain. Dryden.

2. In bastardy.

These two Mitylene brethren, basely born, crept out of a small galliot unto the majesty of great kings. Knolles.

BA'SENESS. n. s. [from base.]

1. Meanness; vileness; badness.

Such is the power of that sweet passion,
That it all sordid baseness doth expel. Spenser.

Your soul's above the baseness of distrust,
Nothing but love could make you so unjust. Dryd.

When a man's folly must be spread open before the angels, and all his baseness ript up before those pure spirits, this will be a double hell. South.

2. Vileness of metal.

We alleged the fraudulent obtaining his patent, the baseness of his metal, and the prodigious sum to be coined. Swift.

3. Bastardy; illegitimacy of birth.

Why braud they us
With base? with baseness? bastardy? Shakesp.

4. Deepness of sound.

The just and measured proportion of the air percussed towards the baseness or trebleness of tones, is one of the greatest secrets in the contemplation of sounds. Bacon.

To BASH. v. n. [probably from base] To be ashamed; to be confounded with shame.

His countenance was bold, and bashed not
For Guyon's looks, but scornful eye-glance at him shot. Spenser.

BASHA'W. n. s. [sometimes written bussa.] A title of honour and command among the Turks; the viceroy of a province; the general of an army.
The Turks made an expedition into Persia: and, because of the straits of the mountains, the bashaw consulted which way they should get in. Ba.

BA'SHFUL. adj. [This word, with all those of the same race, are of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines them derived from base or mean; Minshew, from verbaesen, Dut. to strike with astonishment; Junius, from βάσις, which he finds in Hesychius to signify shame. The conjecture of Minshew seems most probable.]
1. Modest; shamefaced.
I never tempted her with word too large;
But, as a brother to his sister shew'd
Bashful sincerity, and comely love. Shakesp.
2. Sheepish; vitiously modest.
He looked with an almost bashful kind of modesty, as if he feared the eyes of man. Sidney.
Hence, bashful cunning!
And prompt me, plain and holy innocence. Shak.

4. To sew slightly. [baster, Fr. to stitch.]

BASTINA'DE. } n. s. [bastonnade. Fr.]
BASTINA'DO. }

1. The act of beating with a cudgel; the blow given with a cudgel.

But this courtesy was worse than a bastinado to Zelmane; so with rageful eyes she bade him defend himself. Sidney.

And all those harsh and rugged sounds
Of bastinados, cuts, and wounds. Hudibras.

2. It is sometimes taken for a Turkish punishment, of beating an offender on the soles of his feet.

To BASTINA'DE. } v. a. [from the noun;
To BASTINA'DO. } bastonner, Fr.] To beat; to treat with the bastinado.

Nick seized the longer end of the cudgel, and with it began to bastinado old Lewis, who had slunk into a corner, waiting the event of a squabble. Arbuthnot.

BA'STION. n. s. [bastion, Fr.] A huge mass of earth, usually faced with sods, sometimes with brick, rarely with stone, standing out from a rampart, of which it is a principal part, and was anciently called a bulwark. Harris.

Toward: but how? ay there's the question,
Fierce the assault, unarm'd the bastion. Prior.

BAT. n. s. [bat, Sax. This word seems to have given rise to a great number of words in many languages; as, battre, Fr. to beat; baton, battle, beat, batty, and others. It probably signified a weapon that did execution by its weight, in opposition to a sharp edge; whence whirlbat and brickbat.] A heavy stick or club.

A handsome bat he held,
On which he leaned, as one far in eld. Spenser.

They were fried in arm chairs, and their bones broken with bats. Hakewill.

BAT. n. s. [vespertilio, the etymology unknown.] An animal having the body of a mouse and the wings of a bird; not with feathers, but with a sort of skin which is extended. It lays no eggs, but brings forth its young alive, and suckles them. It never grows tame, feeds upon flies, insects, and fatty substances, such as candles, oil, and cheese; and appears only in the summer evenings, when the weather is fine. Calmet.

When owls do cry,
On the bat's back I do fly. Shakesp.

But then grew reason dark; that fair star no more
Could the fair forms of good and truth discern;
Bats they became who eagles were before;
And this they got by their desire to learn Davies.

Some animals are placed in the middle betwixt two kinds, as bats, which have something of birds and beasts. Locke.

Where swallows in the winter season keep,
And how the drowsy bat and dormouse sleep. Gay.

BAT-FOWLING. n. s. [from bat and fowl.] A particular manner of birdcatching in the night-time, while they are at roost upon perches, trees, or hedges. They light torches or straw, and then beat the bushes: upon which the birds, flying to the flames, are caught either with nets, or otherwise.

You would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing. We should so, and then go a bat-fowling Shakesp.

Bodies lighted at night by fire, must have a brighter lustre than by day; as sacking of cities bat fowling. Peacham.

BA'TABLE. adj. [from bate.] Disputable.

Batable ground seems to be the ground heretofore in question, whether it belonged to England or Scotland, lying between both kingdoms. Cowell.

BATCH. n. s. [from bake.]

1. The quantity of bread baked at a time.

The joiner puts the boards into ovens after the batch is drawn, or lays them in a warm stable. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Any quantity of any thing made at once, so as to have the same qualities.

Except he were of the same meal and batch. Ben Jonson.

BA'TCHELOR. See BACHELOR.

BATE. n. s. [perhaps contracted from debate.] Strife; contention; as, a make bate.

To BATE. v. a. [contracted from abate.]

1. To lessen any thing; to retrench.

Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key,
With bated breath, and whisp'ring humbleness,
Say this? Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

Nor, envious at the sight, will I forbear
My plenteous bowl, nor bate my plenteous cheer. Dryden.

2. To sink the price.

When the landholder's rent falls, he must either bate the labourer's wages, or not employ, or not pay him. Locke.

3. To lessen a demand.

Bate me some, and I will pay you some, and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely. Shakesp. Henry IV.

4. To cut off; to take away.

Bate but the last, and 'tis what I would say. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

To BATE. v. n.

1. To grow less.

Bardolph, am not I fallen away vilely since this last election? Do I not bate? Do I not dwindle? Why my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown. Shakesp. Henry IV.

2. To remit: with of before the thing.

Abate thy speed, and I will bate of mine. Dryden.

BATE seems to have been once the preterite of bite, as Shakespeare uses biting faulchion; unless, in the following lines, it may be rather deduced from beat.

Yet there the steel staid not, but inly bate
Deep in his flesh, and open'd wide a red flood gate.
Spenser.

BA'TEFUL. adj. [from bate and full.] Contentious.

He knew her haunt, and haunted in the same,
And taught his sheep her sheep in food to thwart;
Which soon as it did bateful question frame,
He might on knees confess his guilty part. Sidney.

BA'TEMENT. n. s. [from abatement.] Diminution: a term only used among artificers.

To abate, is to waste a piece of stuff; instead of asking how much was cut off, carpenters ask what batement that piece of stuff had.
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

BATH. n. s. [baδ, Saxon.]

1. A bath is either hot or cold, either of art or nature. Artificial baths have been in great esteem with the ancients, especially in complaints to be relieved by revulsion, as inveterate headaches, by opening the pores of the feet, and also in cutaneous cases. But the modern practice has greatest recourse to the natural baths; most of which abound with a mineral sulphur, as appears from their turning silver and copper blackish. The cold baths are the most convenient springs, or reservatories, of cold water to wash in, which the ancients had in great esteem; and the present age can produce abundance of noble cures performed by them. Quincy.

Why may not the cold bath, into which they plunged themselves, have had some share in their cure? Addison's Spectator.

2. A state in which great outward heat is applied to the body, for the mitigation of pain, or any other purpose.

In the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Sleep,
The birth of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds. Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. In chymistry, it generally signifies a vessel of water, in which another is placed that requires a softer heat than the naked fire. Balneum Mariæ is a mistake for balneum maris, a sea or water bath. A sand heat is sometimes called balneum siccum, or cinereum. Quincy.

We see that the water of things distilled in water, which they called the bath, differeth not much from the water of things distilled by fire.
Bacon's Natural History.

4. A sort of Hebrew measure, containing the tenth part of an homer, or seven gallons and four pints, as a measure for things liquid; and three pecks and three pints, as a measure for things dry. Calmet.

Ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, and the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah. Isaiah v. 10.

To BATHE. v. a. [baδian, Saxon.]

1. To wash, as in a bath.

Others on silver lakes and rivers bath'd
Their downy breasts. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Chancing to bathe himself in the river Cydnus, through the excessive coldness of these waters, he fell sick, near unto death, for three days. South.

2. To supple or soften by the outward application of warm liquors.

Bathe them, and keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters and lenitive bolnses. Wiseman. Sur.

I'll bathe your wounds in tears for my offence.
Dryden.

3. To wash any thing.

Phœnician Dido stood,
Fresh from her wound, her bosom bath'd in blood.
Dryd.

Mars could in mutual blood the centaurs bathe,
And Jove himself give way to Cinthia's wrath.
Dryden.

To BATHE. v. n. To be in the water, or in any resemblance of a bath.

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
I cannot tell. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling regions of thick ribbed ice. Shakesp.

The gallants dancing by the river side,
They bathe in summer, and in winter slide. Waller.

But bathe, and, in imperial robes array'd,
Pay due devotions. Pope's Odyssey.

BA'TING, or ABA'TING. prep. [from bate, or abate. This word, though a participle in itself, seems often used as a preposition.] Except.

The king, your brother, could not choose an advocate,
Whom I would sooner lean on any subject,
Bating that only one, his love, than you. Rowe.

If we consider children, we have little reason to think that they bring many ideas with them, bating, perhaps, some faint ideas of hunger and thirst
Locke

BA'TLET. n. s. [from bat.] A square piece of wood, with a handle, used in beating linen when taken out of the buck.

I remember the kissing of her batlet, and the cow's dugs that her pretty chopt hands had milked. Shakespeare

BATO'ON. n. s. [baston, or bâton, Fr. formerly spelt baston.]

1. A staff or club.

We came close to the shore, and offered to land; but straightways we saw divers of the people with bastons in their hands, as it were, forbidding us to land. Bacon's New Atalantis.

That does not make a man the worse,
Although his shoulders with batoon
Be claw'd and cudgell'd to some tune. Hudibras.

2. A truncheon or marshal's staff; a badge of military honour.

BA'TTAILOUS. adj. [from battaille, Fr.] Having the appearance of a battle; warlike; with a military appearance.

He started up, and did himself prepare
In sun-bright arms and battailous array. Fairfax.

The French came foremost, battailous and bold.
Fairfax.

A fiery region, stretch'd
In battailous aspect, and nearer view
Bristled with upright beams innumerable
Of rigid spears and helmets throng'd. Milton.

BATTA'LIA. n. s. battaglia, Ital.]

1. The order of battle.

Next morning the king put his army into battalia. Clarendon.

2. The main body of an army in array, distinguished from the wings.

BATTA'LION. n. s. [bataillon, Fr.]

1. A division of an army; a troop; a body of forces. It is now confined to the infantry, and the number is uncertain, but generally from five to eight hundred men. Some regiments consist of one battalion, and others are divided into two, three, or more.

When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battal'ons. Shakesp. Hamlet.

In this battalion there were two officers, called Thersites and Pandarus Tatler.

The pierc'd battalions disunited fall
In heaps on heaps: one fate o'erwhelms them all.
Pope.

2. An army. This sense is not now in use.

Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.
—Why, our battalion trebles that account. Shak.

To BA'TTEN. v. a. [a word of doubtful etymology.]

1. To fatten, or make fat; to feed plenteously.

We drove afield,
Batt'ning our flocks with the fresh dews of night.
Milton.

2. To fertilize.

The meadows here, with batt'ning ooze enrich'd,
Give spirit to the grass; three cubits high
The jointed herbage shoots. Philips.

To BA'TTEN. v. n. To grow fat; to live in indulgence.

Follow your function, go and batten on cold bits.
Shakesp.

Burnish'd and batt'ning on their food, to show
The diligence of careful herds below. Dryden.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and batten on his sleep. Dryden.

As at full length the pamper'd monarch lay,
Batt'ning in ease, and slumb'ring life away. Garth

Tway mice, full blythe and amicable,
Batten beside erle Robert's table. Prior

While paddling ducks the standing lake desire,
Or batt'ning hogs roll in the sinking mire.
Gay's Pastorals.

BA'TTEN. n. s. A word used only by workmen.

A batten is a scantling of wood, two, three, or four inches broad, seldom above one thick, and the length unlimited. Moxon.

To BA'TTER. v. a. [battre, to beat, Fr.]

1. To beat; to beat down; to shatter: frequently used of walls thrown down by artillery, or of the violence of engines of war.

To appoint battering rams against the gates, to cast a mount, and to build a fort Ezekiel.

These haughty words of hers
Have batter'd me like roaring cannon shot,
And made me almost yield upon my knees.
Shakesp.

Britannia there, the fort in vain
Had batter'd been with golden rain:
Thunder itself had fail'd to pass. Waller.

Be then the naval stores the nation's care,
New ships to build, and batter'd to repair. Dryden.

2. To wear with beating.

Crowds to the castle mounted up the street,
Batt'ring the pavement with their coursers feet.
Dryden.

If you have a silver saucepan for the kitchen use, let me advise you to batter it well; this will shew constant good housekeeping.
Swift's Directions to the Cook.

3. Applied to persons, to wear out with service.

The batter'd veteran strumpets here
Pretend at least to bring a modest ear. Southern.

   'Gainst sort of reason, it to overthrow. Fairy Q.
   Earthly minds, like mud walls, resist the strongest batteries. Locke.
2. The instruments with which a town is battered, placed in order for action; a line of cannon.
   Where is best place to make our batt'ry next?—I think at the north gate. Shakesp. Henry VI.
   It plants this reasoning and that argument, this consequence and that distinction, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way and passage into the obstinate inclosed truth. South.
   See, and revere th' artillery of heav'n,
   Drawn by the gale, or by the tempest driven:
   A dreadful fire the floating batt'ries make,
   O'erturn the mountain, and the forest shake.
   Blackmore.
3. The frame, or raised work, upon which cannons are mounted.
4. [In law.] A violent striking of any man. In an action against a striker, one may be found guilty of the assault, yet acquitted of the battery. There may therefore be assault without battery; but battery always implies an assault. Chambers.
   Why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action and battery? Shakesp.
   Sir, quo' the lawyer, not to flatter ye,
   You have as good and fair a battery
   As heart can wish, and need not shame
   The proudest man alive to claim. Hudibras.

BA'TTISH. adj. [from bat.] Resembling a bat.

BAY. adj. [badius, Lat.]

A bay horse is what is inclining to a chesnut; and this colour is various, either a light bay or a dark bay, according as it is less or more deep. There are also coloured horses, that are called dappled bays. All bay horses are commonly called brown by the common people.

All bay horses have black manes, which distinguish them from the sorrel, that have red or white manes.

There are light bays and gilded bays, which are somewhat of a yellowish colour. The chesnut bay is that which comes nearest to the colour of the chesnut. Farrier's Dict.

My lord, you gave good words the other day of a bay courser I rode on. 'Tis yours because you liked it. Shakesp.

Poor Tom! proud of heart to ride on a bay trotting horse over four inch'd bridges. Shakesp.

His colour grey,
For beauty dappled, or the brightest bay. Dryd.

BAY. n. s. [baye, Dutch.]

1. An opening into the land, where the water is shut in on all sides, except at the entrance.

A reverend Syracusan merchant,
Who put unluckily into this bay. Shakesp.

We have also some works in the midst of the sea, and some bays upon the shore for some works, wherein is required the air and vapour of the sea. Bacon.

Hail, sacred solitude! from this calm bay
I view the world's tempestuous sea. Roscommon.

Here in a royal bed the waters sleep,
When tir'd at sea, within this bay they creep. Dryd.

Some of your have bay. Dryden.

2. A pond head raised to keep in store of water for driving a mill.

BAY. n. s. [abboi, Fr. signifies the last extremity; as, Innocence est aux abbois. Boileau. Innocence is in the utmost distress. It is taken from abboi, the barking of a dog at hand, and thence signified the condition of a stag when the hounds were almost upon him.]

1. The state of any thing surrounded by enemies, and obliged to face them by an impossibility of escape.

This ship, for fifteen hours, sate like a stag among hounds at the bay, and was sieged and fought with, in turn, by fifteen great ships.
Bacon's War with Spain.

Fair liberty, pursued and meant a prey
To lawless power, here turn'd, and stood at bay.
Denham.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Embolden'd by despair, he stood at bay;
Resolv'd on death, he dissipates his fears,
And bounds aloft against the pointed spears. Dryd.

2. Some writers, perhaps mistaking the meaning, have used bay as referred to the assailant, for distance beyond which no approach could be made.

All, fir'd with noble emulation, strive;
And with a storm of darts to distance drive
The Trojan chief; who, held at bay, from far
On his Vulcanian orb sustain'd the war. Dryden.

We have now, for ten years together, turned the whole force and expence of the war, where the enemy was best able to hold us at a bay. Swift.

BAY. n. s. In architecture, a term used to signify the magnitude of a building; as, if a barn consists of a floor and two heads, where they lay corn, they call it a barn of two bays. These bays are from fourteen to twenty feet long, and floors from ten to twelve broad, and usually twenty feet long, which is the breadth of the barn. Builder's Dict.

If this law hold in Vienna ten years, I'll rent the fairest house in it after threepence a bay. Shakesp.

There may be kept one thousand bushels in each bay, there being sixteen bays, each eighteen feet long, about seventeen wide, or three hundred square feet in each bay. Mortimer.

BAY Tree. [laurus, Lat.] The tree, as is generally thought, which is translated laurel, and of which honorary garlands were anciently made.

I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. Psalms.

BAY. n. s. A poetical name for an honorary crown or garland, bestowed as a prize for any kind of victory or excellence.

Beneath his reign shall Eusden wear the bays. Pope.

To BAY. v. n. [abboyer, Fr.]

1. To bark as a dog at a thief, or at the game which he pursues.

And all the while she stood upon the ground,
The wakeful dogs did never cease to bay. Fairy Q.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursued the visionary maid;
She rent the heav'n with loud laments, imploring aid. Dryden's Fables.

2. [From bay, an inclosed place.] To encompass about; to shut in.

We are at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies. Shakesp.

To BAY. v. a. To follow with barking; to bark at.

I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in the wood of Crete they bay'd the boar
With hounds of Sparta. Shakesp.

If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welch Baying him at the heels. Shakesp.

BAY Salt. Salt made of sea water, which receives its consistence from the heat of the sun, and is so called from its brown colour. By letting the sea water into square pits or basons, its surface being struck and agitated by the rays of the sun, it thickens at first imperceptibly, and becomes covered over with a slight crust, which hardening by the continuance of the heat, is wholly converted into salt. The water in this condition is scalding hot, and the crystallization is perfected in eight, ten, or at most fifteen days. Chamb.

All eruptions of air, though small and slight, give sound, which we call crackling, puffing, spitting, &c. as in bay salt and bay leaves, cast into fire. Bacon.

BAY Window. A window jutting outward, and therefore forming a kind of bay or hollow in the room.

It hath bay windows transparent as barricadoes. Shakesp.

BAY Yarn. A denomination sometimes used promiscuously with woollen yarn. Chamb.

BA'YARD. n. s. [from bay.] A bay horse.

Blind bayard moves the mill. Philips

BA'YONET. n. s [bayonette, Fr.] A short sword or dagger fixed at the end of a musket, by which the foot hold off the horse.

One of the black spots is long and slender, and resembles a dagger or bayonet. Woodward.

BAYZE. See BAIZE.

BDE'LLIUM. n. s. [βδελλιον; בדלה] An aromatick gum brought from the Levant, used as a medicine, and a perfume. Bdellium is mentioned both by the ancient naturalists, and in Scripture; but it is doubtful whether any of these be the same with the modern kind. Chamb.

This bdellium is a tree of the bigness of an olive, whereof Arabia hath great plenty, which yieldeth a certain gum, sweet to smell to, but bitter in taste, called also bdellium. The Hebrews take the loadstone for bdellium. Raleigh.

To BE. v. n. [This word is so remarkably irregular, that it is necessary to set down many of its terminations.

Present. I am, thou art, he is, we are, &c.
eom, eapt, ip. apon, Sax.

Preter. I was, thou wast or wert, he was, we were, &c.
pæf, pæpe, pap, pæpon, Sax.

The conjunctive mood.

I be, thou beest, he be, we be, &c.
beo, bipt, beo, beon, Sax.]

Seventy senators died
By their proscriptions, Cicero being one. Shakesp.
He hath to-night been in unusual pleasure. Shakesp.
Be what thou hop'st to be, or what thou art,
Resign to death, it is not worth enjoying. Shakesp.
Be but about
To say she is a goodly lady, and
The justice of your hearts will add thereto,
'Tis pity she is not honest, honourable. Shakesp.
Let them shew the former things what they be that we may consider them. Isaiah.
Therefore be sure,
Thou, when the bridegroom with his feastful friends
Passes to bliss at the mid hour of night,
Hast gain'd thy entrance, virgin wise and pure. Milton.
It is not easy to discern what such men would be at. Stillingfleet.
To say a man has a clear idea of quantity, without knowing how great it is, is to say, he has the clear idea of the number of the sands, who knows not how many they be. Locke.

2. It is the auxiliary verb by which the verb passive is formed.

The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees
Is left this vault to brag of. Shakesp.

3. To exist; to have existence.

The times have been,
That when the brains were out the man would die. Macbeth.
Here cease, ye pow'rs, and let your vengeance end,
Troy is no more, and can no more offend. Dryden.
All th' impossibilities, which poets
Count to extravagance of loose description,
Shall sooner be. Rowe.
To be, contents his natural desire;
He asks no angel's wing, nor seraph's fire. Pope.

4. To have something by appointment or rule.

If all political power be derived only from Adam, and be to descend only to his successive heirs, by the ordinance of God, and divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government. Locke.

5. Let BE. Do not meddle with; leave untouched.

Let be, said he, my prey. Dryden.

BEACH. n. s. The shore, particularly that part that is dashed by the waves; the strand.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice. Shakesp. King Lear.
Deep to the rocks of hell the gather'd beach
They fasten'd, and the mole immense wrought on
Over the f aming deep. Milton.
They find the washed amber further out upon the beaches and shores, where it has been longer exposed. Woodward.

BE'ACHED. adj. [from beach.] Exposed to the waves.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which, once a day, with his embossed froth
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shakesp.

BE'ACHY. adj. [from beach.] Having beaches.

The beachy girdle of the ocean
Too wide for Neptune's hips. Shakesp.

BE'ACON. n. s. [beacon, Sax. from becn a signal, and becnan, whence beckon, to make a signal.]

1. Something raised on an eminence, to be fired on the approach of an enemy, to alarm the country.

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;
As two broad beacons set in open fields
Send forth their flames. Fairy Queen.
Modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wise. Shakesp.
The king seemed to account of Perkin as a May-game; yet had given order for the watching of beacons upon the coasts, and erecting more where they stood too thin. Bacon.
No flaming beacons cast their blaze afar,
The dreadful signal of invasive war. Gay.

2. Marks erected, or lights made in the night, to direct navigators in their courses, and warn them from rocks, shallows, and sandbanks.

BEAD. n. s. [beabe prayer, Saxon.]

1. Small globes or balls of glass or pearl, or other substance, strung upon a thread, and used by the Romanists to count their prayers; from whence the phrase to tell beads, or to be at one's beads, is to be at prayer.

That aged dame, the lady of the place,
Who all this while was busy at her beads. Fairy Queen.
Thy voice I seem in every hymn to hear,
With ev'ry bead I drop too soft a tear. Pope.

2. Little balls worn about the neck for ornament.

With scarfs and fans, and double charge of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all such knav'ry. Shakesp.

3. Any globular bodies.

Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow. Shakesp.
Several yellow lumps of amber, almost like beads, with one side flat, had fastened themselves to the bottom. Boyle.

BEAD Tree. [azedarach.] A plant.

BE'ADLE. n. s. [bybel, Sax. a messenger; bedeau, Fr. bedel, Span. bedelle, Dutch.]

1. A messenger or servitor belonging to a court. Cowell.

2. A petty officer in parishes, whose business it is to punish petty offenders.

A dog's obey'd in office.
Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand:
Why dost thou lash that whore? Shakesp.
They ought to be taken care of in this condition, either by the beadle or the magistrate. Spectator.
Their common loves a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

BE'ADROLL. n. s. [from bead and roll.] A catalogue of those who are to be mentioned at prayers.

The king, for the better credit of his espials abroad, did use to have them cursed by name amongst the beadroll of the king's enemies. Bacon's Henry VII.

BE'ADSMAN. n. s. [from bead and man.] A man employed in praying, generally in praying for another.

An holy hospital,
In which seven beadsmen, that had vowed all
Their life to service of high heaven's king. Fairy Queen.
In thy danger,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer;
For I will be thy beadsman, Valentine. Shakesp.

BE'AGLE. n. s. [bigle, Fr.] A small hound with which hares are hunted.

The rest were various huntings.
The graceful goddess was array'd in green;
About her feet were little beagles seen,
That watch'd with upward eyes the motions of their queen. Dryden's Fables.
To plains with well-bred beagles we repair,
And trace the mazes of the circling hare. Pope.

BEAK. n. s. [bec, Fr. pig, Welsh.]

1. The bill or horny mouth of a bird.

His royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloys his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
He saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing. Milton's Paradise Reg.
The magpye, lighting on the stock,
Good chatt'ring with incessant din,
And with her beak gave many a knock. Swift.

2. A piece of brass like a beak, fixed at the end of the ancient gallies, with which they pierced their enemies. It can now be used only for the fore part of a ship.

With boiling pitch, another near at hand,
From friendly Sweden brought, the seams instops;
Which well laid o'er, the salt sea waves withstand,
And shake them from the rising beak in drops. Dryden.

3. A beak is a little shoe, at the toe about an inch long, turned up and fastened in upon the fore-part of the hoof. Farrier's Dict.

4. Any thing ending in a point like a beak; as, the spout of a cup; a prominence of land.

BEAM. n. s. [beam, Sax. a tree.]

1. The main piece of timber that supports the house.

A beam is the largest piece of wood in a building, which always lies cross the building or the walls, serving to support the principal rafters of the roof, and into which the feet of the principal rafters are framed. No building has less than two beams, one at each head Into these, the girders of the garret floor are also framed; and, if the building be of timber, the teazel-tenons of the posts are framed. The proportions of beams, in or near London, are fixed by act of parliament. A beam, fifteen feet long, must be seven inches on one side its square, and five on the other; if it be sixteen feet long, one side must be eight inches, the other six; and so proportionable to their lengths. Builder's Dict.
The building of living creatures is like the building of a timber house; the walls and other parts have columns and beams, but the roof is tile, or lead, or stone. Bacon.
He heav'd, with more than human force, to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team,
And rais'd from thence he reach'd the neighb'ring beam. Dryden.

2. Any large and long piece of timber: a beam must have more length than thickness, by which it is distinguished from a block.

But Lycus, swifter,
Springs to the walls, and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find. Dryden's Æneid.

3. That part of a balance at the ends of which the scales are suspended.

Poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. Shakesp.

If the length of the sides in the balance, and the weights at the ends, be both equal, the beam will be in horizontal situation: but if either the weights alone be equal, or the distances alone, the beam will accordingly decline. Wilkins.

4. The horn of a stag.

And taught the woods to echo to the stream
His dreadful challenge, and his clashing beam. Denham.

5. The pole of a chariot; that piece of wood which runs between the horses.

Juturna heard, and, seiz'd with mortal fear,
Forc'd from the beam her brother's charioteer. Dryden.

Look you lay home to him;
Tell him his pranks have been too broad to bear with. Shakesp.

Bear with me then, if lawful what I ask. Milton.

BEAR. n. s. [bera, Saxon; ursus, Lat.]

1. A rough savage animal.

Some have falsely reported, that bears bring their young into the world shapeless, and that their dams lick them into form. The dams go no longer than thirty days, and generally produce five young ones. In the winter, they lie hid and asleep, the male forty days, and the female four months; and so soundly for the first fourteen days, that blows will not wake them. In the sleepy season, they are said to have no nourishment but from licking their feet. This animal has naturally an hideous look, but when enraged it is terrible; and, as rough and stupid as it seems to be, it is capable of discipline; it leaps, dances, and plays a thousand little tricks at the sound of a trumpet. They abound in Poland. In the remote northern countries the species is white. Calmet.

Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,
Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me.——
——Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shak.
Thou'dst shun a bear;
But if thy flight lay tow'rd the raging sea,
Thou'dst meet the bear i' th' mouth. Shakesp.

2. The name of two constellations, called the greater and lesser bear; in the tail of the lesser bear, is the pole-star.

1. To make happy; to bless with the completion of celestial enjoyment.

The use of spiritual conference is unimaginable and unspeakable, especially if free and unrestrained, bearing an image of that conversation which is among angels and beatified saints. Hammond.

We shall know him to be the fullest good, the nearest to us, and the most certain; and consequently, the most beatifying of all others. Brown.

I wish I had the wings of an angel, to have ascended into Paradise, and to have beheld the forms of those beatified spirits, from which I might have copied my archangel. Dryden.

2. To settle the character of any person, by a publick acknowledgement that he is received in heaven, though he is not invested with the dignity of a saint.

Over against this church stands an hospital, erected by a shoemaker, who has been beatified, though never sainted. Addison.

BE'ATING. n. s. [from beat.] Correction; punishment by blows.

Playwright, convict of public wrongs to men,
Takes private beatings, and begins again. Ben Jonson.

BEA'TITUDE. n. s. [beatitudo, Lat.]

1. Blessedness; felicity; happiness: commonly used of the joys of heaven.

The end of that government, and of all men's aims is agreed to be beatitude, that is, his being completely well. Digby.

This is the image and little representation of heaven; it is beatitude in picture. Taylor.

He set out the felicity of his heaven, by the delights of sense; slightly passing over the accomplishment of the soul, and the beatitude of that part which earth and visibilities too weakly affect. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. A declaration of blessedness made by our Saviour to particular virtues.

BEAU. n. s. [beau, Fr. It is sounded like bo, and has often the French plural beaux, sounded as boes.] A man of dress; a man whose great care is to deck his person.

What will not beaux attempt to please the fair. Dryden.

The water nymphs are too unkind
To Vill'roy; are the land nymphs so?
And fly they all, at once combin'd
To shame a general, and a beaux? Prior.

You will become the delight of nine ladies in ten, and the envy of ninety-nine beaux in a hundred. Swift.

BE'AVER. n. s. [bievre, Fr. fiber, Lat.]

1. An animal, otherwise named the castor, amphibious, and remarkable for his art in building his habitation; of which many wonderful accounts are delivered by travellers. His skin is very valuable on account of the fur.

The beaver being hunted, biteth off his stones, knowing that for them only his life is sought. Hakewill.

They placed this invention upon the beaver, for the sagacity and wisdom of that animal; indeed from its artifice in building. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. A hat of the best kind, so called from being made of the fur of beaver.

You see a smart rhetorician turning his hat, moulding it into different cocks, examining the lining and the button during his harangue: a deaf man would think he was cheapening a beaver, when he is talking of the fate of a nation. Addison.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares. Gay.

3. The part of a helmet that covers the face. [baviere, Fr.]

His dreadful hideous head,
Close couched on the beaver, seem'd to throw
From flaming mouth bright sparkles fiery red. Spenser

Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps. Shakesp.

He was slain upon a course at tilt, the splinters of the staff going in at his beaver. Bacon.

BE'AVERED. adj. [from beaver.] Covered with a beaver, wearing a beaver.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears,
Dropping with infants blood, and mothers tears. Pope.

BEAU'ISH. adj. [from beau.] Befitting a beau; foppish.

BEAU'TEOUS. adj. [from beauty.] Fair; elegant in form; pleasing to the sight; beautiful. This word is chiefly poetical.

I can, Petruchio, help thee to a wife,
With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous. Shakesp.

Alas! not hoping to subdue,
I only to the flight aspir'd;
To keep the beauteous foe in view,
Was all the glory I desir'd. Prior.

BEAU'TEOUSLY. adv. [from beauteous.]
In a beauteous manner; in a manner pleasing to the sight; beautifully.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beauteously; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed. Taylor.

BEAU'TEOUSNESS. n. s. [from beauteous.]
The state or quality of being beauteous; beauty.

From less virtue, and less beauteousness,
The gentiles fram'd them gods and goddesses. Donne.

BEAU'TIFUL. adj. [from beauty and full.]
Fair; having the qualities that constitute beauty.

He stole away, and took by strong hand all the beautiful women in his time. Raleigh.

The most important part of painting, is to know what is most beautiful in nature, and most proper for that art; that which is the most beautiful, is the most noble subject: so, in poetry, tragedy is more beautiful than comedy, because the persons are greater whom the poet instructs, and consequently the instructions of more benefit to mankind. Dryd.

Beautiful looks are rul'd by fickle minds,
And summer seas are turn'd by sudden winds. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULLY. adv. [from beautiful.]
In a beautiful manner.

No longer shall the boddice, aptly lac'd
From thy full bosom to thy slender waist,
That air and harmony of shape express,
Fine by degrees, and beautifully less. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULNESS. n. s. [from beautiful.]
The quality of being beautiful; beauty; excellence of form.

To* BEAU'TIFY. v. a. [from beauty.] To adorn; to embellish; to deck; to grace; to add beauty to.

Never was sorrow more sweetly set forth; their faces seeming rather to beautify their sorrow, than their sorrow to cloud the beauty of their faces. Hayward.

Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs and return,
Captive to thee and to thy Roman yoke? Shakesp.

These were not created to beautify the earth alone, but for the use of man and beast. Raleigh.

How all conspire to grace
Th' extended earth, and beautify her face. Blackmore.

There is charity and justice; and the one serves to heighten and beautify the other. Atterbury.

To* BEAU'TIFY. v. n. To grow beautiful; To advance in beauty.

It must be a prospect pleasing to God himself, to see his creation for ever beautifying in his eyes, and drawing nearer to him by greater degrees of resemblance. Addison

BEAUTY. n. s. [beauté, Fr.]

1. That assemblage of graces, or proportion of parts, which pleases the eye.

Beauty consists of a certain composition of colour and figure, causing delight in the beholder Locke.

Your beauty was the cause of that effect,
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep —
If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakesp.

Beauty is best in a body that hath rather dignity of presence than beauty of aspect. The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit, and study for the most part rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express. Bacon.

Of the beauty of the eye I shall say little, leaving that to poets and orators that it is a very pleasant and lovely object to behold, if we consider the figure, colours, splendour of it, is the least I can say. Ray.

He view'd their twining branches with delight,
And prais'd the beauty of the pleasing sight. Pope.

2. A particular grace, feature, or ornament.

The ancient pieces are beautiful, because they resemble the beauties of nature; and nature will ever be beautiful, which resembles those beauties of antiquity. Dryden.

Wherever you place a patch, you destroy a beauty. Addison.

3. Any thing more eminently excellent than the rest of that, with which it is united.

This gave me an occasion of looking backward on some beauties of my author in his former books. Dryden.

With incredible pains have I endeavoured to copy the several beauties of the ancient and modern historians. Arbuthnot.

4. A beautiful person.

Remember that Pelican conqueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east
He slightly view'd, and slightly overpass'd. Milt.

What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
Can he, who kill'd thy brother, live for thee? Dryden.

To BEAU'TY. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn; to beautify; to embellish: not in use.

The harlot's cheek, beautied with plast'ring art,
Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,
Than is my deed to your most painted word. Shakesp.

BEAU'TY-SPOT. n. s. [from beauty and spot.] A spot placed to direct the eye to something else, or to heighten some beauty; a foil; a patch.

The filthiness of swine makes them the beauty-spot of the animal creation. Grew.

BECAFI'CO. n. s. [becafigo, Span.] A bird like a nightingale, feeding on figs and grapes; a fig-pecker. Pineda.

The robin redbreast, till of late, had rest,
And children sacred held a martin's nest;
Till becaficos sold so dev'lish dear,
To one that was, or would have been, a peer. Pope.

To BECA'LM. v. a. [from calm.]

1. To still the elements.

The moon shone clear on the becalmed flood. Dryden.

2. To keep a ship from motion.

A man becalmed at sea, out of sight of land, in a fair day may look on the sun, or sea, or ship, a whole hour, and perceive no motion. Locke.

3. To quiet the mind.

Soft whisp'ring airs, and the lark's matin song,
Then woo to musing, and becalm the mind
Perplex'd with irksome thoughts. Philips.

Banish his sorrows, and becalm his soul
With easy dreams. Addison.

Perhaps prosperity becalm'd his breast;
Perhaps the wind just shifted from the east. Pope.

4. To becalm and to calm differ in this, that to calm is to stop motion, and to becalm is to withhold from motion.

BECA'ME. The preterite of become; which see.

BECA'USE. conjunct. [from by and cause.]

1. For this reason that; on this account that; for this cause that. It makes the first part of an illative proposition, either expressly or by implication, and is answered by therefore; as, I fled because I was afraid; which is the same with, because I was afraid, therefore I fled.

How great soever the sins of any person are, Christ died for him, because he died for all; and he died for those sins, because he died for all sins: only he must reform. Hammond.

Men do not so generally agree in the sense of these as of the other, because the interests, and lusts, and passions of men are more concerned in the one than the other. Tillotson.

2. It has, in some sort, the force of a preposition; but, because it is compounded of a noun, has of after it.

Infancy demands aliment, such as lengthens fibres without breaking, because of the state of accretion. Arbuthnot.

To BECHA'NCE. v. n. [from be and chance.] To befal; to happen to: a word proper, but now in little use.

My sons, God knows what has bechanced them. Shakesp.

All happiness bechance to thee at Milan. Shak.

BE'CHICKS. n. s [βηχικα, of βηξ a cough.] Medicines proper for relieving coughs. Dict.

To BECK. v. n. [beacn, Sax. bec, Fr. head.] To make a sign with the head.

To BECK. v. a. To call or guide, as by a motion of the head.

Bell, book, and candle, shall not drive me back,
When gold and silver beck me to come on. Shak.

Oh this false soul of Egypt, this gay charm,
Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd them home. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

BECK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sign with the head; a nod.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles. Milton.

2. A nod of command.

Neither the lusty kind shewed any roughness, nor the easier any idleness; but still like a well-obeyed master, whose beck is enough for discipline. Sidney

Then forthwith to him takes a chosen band
Of spirits, likest to himself in guile,
To be at hand, and at his beck appear. Milton.

The menial fair, that round her wait,
At Helen's beck prepare the room of state. Pope.

To BE'CKON. v. n. To make a sign without words.

Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people. Acts, xix. 33.

When he had raised my thoughts by those transporting airs, he beckoned to me, and, by the waving of his hand, directed me to approach. Addison.

Sudden you mount, you beckon from the skies;
Clouds interpose, waves roar, and winds arise! Pope.

To BECKON. v. a. [from beck, or beacn, Sax. a sign.] To make a sign to.

With her two crooked hands she signs did make,
And beckon'd him. Fairy Queen.

It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone. Shakesp.

With this his distant friends he beckons near,
Provokes their duty, and prevents their fear. Dryden.

To BECLI'P. v. a. [of be clyppan, Sax.] To embrace. Dict.

To BECO'ME. v. n. pret. I became; comp. pret. I have become. [from by and come.]

1. To enter into some state or condition, by a change from some other.

The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. Genesis, ii. 7.

And unto the Jews I became a Jew, that I might gain the Jews. 1 Corinth. ix. 20.

A smaller pear grafted upon a stock that beareth a greater pear, will become great. Bacon.

My voice thou oft hast heard, and hast not fear'd,
But still rejoic'd; how is it now become
So dreadful to thee? Milton.

So the least faults, if mix'd with fairest deed,
Of future ill become the fatal seed. Prior.

2. To become of. To be the fate of; to be the end of; to be the subsequent or final condition of. It is observable, that this word is never, or very seldom, used but with what, either indefinite or interrogative.

What is then become of so huge a multitude, as would have overspread a great part of the continent. Raleigh.

Perplex'd with thoughts, what would become
Of me, and all mankind? Milton.

The first hints of the circulation of the blood were taken from a common person's wondering what became of all the blood that issued out of the heart. Grauut.

What will become of me then? for, when he is free, he will infallibly accuse me. Dryd.

What became of this thoughtful busy creature, when removed from this world, has amazed the vulgar, and puzzled the wise. Rogers.

3. In the following passage, the phrase, where is he become, is used for, what has become of him?

I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakesp.

To BECO'ME. v. a. [from be or by, and cpemen Sax. to please.]

1. Applied to persons, to appear in a manner suitable to something.

If I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up. Shakesp.

Why would I be a queen? because my face
Would wear the title with a better grace;
If I became it not, yet it would be Part of your duty then to flatter me. Dryd.

2. Applied to things, to be suitable to the person; to befit; to be congruous to the appearance, or character, or circumstances, in such a manner as to add grace; to be graceful.

She to her sire made humble reverence,
And bowed low, that her right well became,
And added grace unto her excellence. Fairy Q.

I would I had some flowers o' th' spring that might Become your time of day; and your's and your's,
That wear upon your virgin branches yet
Your maidenheads growing. Shakesp.

Yet be sad, good brothers;
For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you.
Shakesp

Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shakesp.

Wicherly was of my opinion, or rather I of his; for it becomes me so to speak of so excellent a poet. Dryden

He utterly rejected their fables concerning their gods, as not becoming good men, much less those which were worshipped for gods. Stillingfleet.

BECO'MING. particip. adj. [from become.] That which pleases by an elegant propriety; graceful. It is sometimes used with the particle of; but generally without any government of the following words.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white
To make up my delight,
No odd becoming graces,
Black eyes, or little know not what in faces.
Sucklings.

Their discourses are such as belong to their age, their calling, and their breeding; such as are becoming of them, and of them only. Dryd.

Yet some becoming boldness I may use;
I've well deserv'd, nor will he now refuse. Dryd.
Make their pupils repeat the action, that they may correct what is constrained in it, till it be perfected into an habitual and becoming easiness. Locke.

BECO'MING. n. s. [from become.] Ornament. A word not now in use.

Sir, forgive me,
Since my becomings kill me when they not
Eye well to you. Shakesp.

BECO'MINGLY. adv. [from becoming.] After a becoming or proper manner.

BECO'MINGNESS. n. s. [from becoming. See To BECOME.] Decency; elegant congruity; propriety.

Nor is the majesty of the divine government greater in its extent, than the becomingness hereof is in its manner and form. Grew.

BED. n. s. [bed, Sax.]

1. Something made to sleep on.

Lying not erect, but hollow, which is in the making of the bed; or with the legs gathered up, which is in the posture of the body, is the more wholesome. Bacon.

Rigour now is gone to bed,
And Advice with scrupulous head. Milton.

Those houses then were caves, or homely sheds,
With twining oziers fenc'd, and moss their beds. Dryden.

2. Lodging; the convenience of a place to sleep in.

On my knees I beg,
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food. Shakesp.

Herbs will be tenderer and fairer, if you take them out of beds, when they are newly come up, and remove them into pots, with better earth. Bacon.

5. The channel of a river, or any hollow.

So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low
Down sunk a hollow bottom, broad, and deep,
Capacious bed of waters. Milton.

The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is supposed to be the bed of the Tiber. We may be sure, when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sacked by a barbarous enemy, that they would take care to bestow such of their riches that way, as could best bear the water. Addison.

6. The place where any thing is generated, or reposited.

See hoary Albula's infected tide
O'er the warm bed of smoaking sulphur glide. Addison.

7. A layer; a stratum; a body spread over another.

I see no reason, but the surface of the land should be as regular as that of the water, in the first production of it: and the strata, or beds within, lie as even. Burnet.

8. To bring to BED. To deliver of a child. It is often used with the particle of; as, she was brought to bed of a daughter.

Ten months after Florimel happen'd to wed,
And was brought in a laudable manner to bed. Prior.

To BEDRE'NCH. v. a. [from be and drench.] To drench; to soak; to saturate with moisture.

Far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land.
Shakesp.

BE'DRID. adj. [from bed and ride.] Confined to the bed by age or sickness.

Norway, uncle of young Fontinbras,
Who, impotent and bedrid, scarcely hears
Of this his nephew's purpose. Shakesp.

Lies he not bedrid? and, again, does nothing,
But what he did, being childish? Shakesp.

Now, as a myriad
Of ants durst th' emperor's lov'd snake invade;
The crawling galleys, sea-gulls, finny chips,
Might brave our pinnaces, our bedrid ships. Donne.

Hanging old men, who were bedrid, because they would not discover where their money was.
Clarendon.

Infirm persons, when they come to be so weak as to be fixed to their beds, hold out many years; some have lain bedrid twenty years. Ray.

And thus the hard and stubborn race of man
From animated rock and flint began. Blackm.
From Nimrod first the savage chace began:
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

5. To take rise; to commence.

Judgment must begin at the house of God.
1 Peter.
The song begun from Jove. Dryden.
All began,
All ends, in love of God and love of man. Pope.

6. To come into act.

Now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden.

To BEGI'N. v. a.

1. To do the first act of any thing; to pass from not doing to doing, by the first act.

Ye nymphs of Solyma, begin the song. Pope.
They have been awaked, by these awful scenes, to begin religion; and, afterwards, their virtue has improved itself into more refined principles, by divine grace. Watts.

2. To trace from any thing, as the first ground.

The apostle begins our knowledge in the creatures, which leads us to the knowledge of God. Locke.

3. To begin with. To enter upon; to fall to work upon.

A lesson which requires so much time to learn, had need be early begun with.
Government of the Tongue.

BEGI'NNER. n. s. [from begin.]

1 He that gives the first cause, or original, to any thing.

Thus heaping crime on crime, and grief on grief,
To loss of love adjoining loss of friend,
I meant to purge both with a third mischief,
And, in my woe's beginner, it to end. Spenser.
Socrates maketh Ignatius, the bishop of Antioch, the first beginner thereof, even under the apostles themselves. Hooker.

2. An unexperienced attempter; one in his rudiments; a young practitioner.

Palladius, behaving himself nothing like a beginner, brought the honour to the Iberian side. Sidney.
They are, to beginners, an easy and familiar introduction; a mighty augmentation of all virtue and knowledge in such as are entered before. Hooker.
I have taken a list of several hundred words in a sermon of a new beginner, which not one hearer could possibly understand. Swift.

BEGI'NNING. n. s. [from begin.]

1. The first original or cause.

Wherever we place the beginning of motion, whether from the head or the heart, the body moves and acts by a consent of all its parts. Swift.

2. The entrance into act, or being.

In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. Genesis.

3. The state in which any thing first is.

Youth, what man's age is like to be, doth show;
We may our end by our beginning know. Denham.

4. The rudiments, or first grounds or materials.

By viewing nature, nature's handmaid, art,
Makes mighty things from small beginnings grow:
Thus fishes first to shipping did impart,
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow.
Dryden.
The understanding is passive; and whether or not it will have these beginnings, and materials of knowledge, is not in its own power. Locke.

5. The first part of any thing.

The causes and designs of an action, are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Broome.

To BEGI'RD. v. a. I begirt, or begirded; I have begirt. [from be and gird.]

1. To bind with a girdle.

2. To surround; to encircle; to encompass.

Begird th' Almighty throne,
Beseeching, or besieging. Milton.
Or should she, confident
As sitting queen adorn'd on beauty's throne,
Descend, with all her winning charms begirt,
T' enamour. Milton.
At home surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud:
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears;
His very state acknowledging his fears. Prior.

3. To shut in with a siege; to beleaguer; to block up.

It was so closely begirt before the king's march into the west, that the council humbly desired his majesty, that he would relieve it. Clarendon.

To BEGI'RT. v. a [This is, I think, only a corruption of begird; perhaps by the printer.] To begird. See BEGIRD.

And, Lentulus, begirt you Pompey's house,
To seize his sons alive, for they are they Must make our peace with him. Ben Jonson.

BEGLERBEG. n. s. [Turkish.] The chief governour of a province among the Turks.

To BEGNA'W. v. a. [from be and gnaw.] To bite; to eat away; to corrode; to nibble.

His horse is stark spoiled with the staggers, begnawn with the bots, waid in the back, and shoulder-shotten. Shakesp.
The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul.
Shakesp. Richard III.

BEGO'NE. interject. [only a coalition of the words be gone.] Go away; hence; haste away.

Begone! the goddess cries with stern disdain,
Begone! nor dare the hallow'd stream to stain.
She fled, for ever banish'd from the train. Addis.

BEGO'T. } The participle passive of
BEGO'TTEN. } the verb beget.

Remember that thou wast begot of them. Ecclus.
The first he met, Antiphates the brave,
But base begotten on a Theban slave. Dryd.

To BEGRE'ASE. v. a. [from be and grease.] To soil or dawb with unctuous or fat matter.

To BEGRIME. v. a. [from be and grime. See GRIME and GRIM.] To soil with dirt deep impressed; to soil in such a manner that the natural hue cannot easily be recovered.

Her name, that was as fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd, and black
As my own face. Shakesp.

To BEGUI'LE. v. a. [from be and guile.]

1. To impose upon; to delude; to cheat.

This I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. Colossians.
The serpent me beguil'd, and I did eat. Milton.
Whosoever sees a man, who would have beguil'd and imposed upon him by making him believe a lye, he may truly say, that is the man, who would have ruined me. South.

2. To deceive; to evade.

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Tis yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will. Shakesp.

3. To deceive pleasingly; to amuse.

Sweet, leave me here awhile;
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Shakesp.
With these sometimes she doth her time beguile;
These do by fits her phantasy possess. Sir J. Davies.

BEGU'N. The participle passive of begin.

But thou, bright morning star, thou rising sun,
Which in these latter times hast brought to light
Those myste'ies, that since the world begun
Lay hid in darkness and eternal night. Sir J. Dav.

BEHA'LF. n. s. [This word Skinner derives from half, and interprets it, for my half; as, for my part. It seems to be rather corrupted from behoof, profit; the pronunciation degenerating easily to behafe; which, in imitation of other words so sounded, was written, by those who knew not the etymology, behalf.]

1. Favour; cause favoured: we say in behalf, but for the sake.

He was in confidence with those who designed the destruction of Strafford; against whom he had contracted some prejudice, in the behalf of his nation. Clarendon.
Were but my heart as naked to thy view,
Marcus would see it bleed in his behalf. Addison.
Never was any nation blessed with more frequent interpositions of divine providence in its behalf. Atterbury.

2. Vindication; support.

He might, in his presence, defy all Arcadian knights, in the behalf of his mistress's beauty. Sidney.
Lest the fiend,
Or in behalf of man, or to invade
Vacant possession, some new trouble raise. Milt.
Others believe that, by the two Fortunes, were meant prosperity or affliction; and produce, in their behalf, an ancient monument. Addis. on Italy.

To BEHA'VE. v. a. [from be and have.]

1. To carry; to conduct: used almost always with the reciprocal pronoun.

We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you. Thess.
Manifest signs came from heaven unto those that behaved themselves manfully. 2 Maccabees.
To their wills wedded, to their errours slaves,
No man like them, they think, himself behaves.
Denham.
We so live, and so act, as if we were secure of the final issue and event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.

2. It seems formerly to have had the sense of, to govern; to subdue; to discipline; but this is not now used.

But who his limbs with labours, and his mind
Behaves with cares, cannot so easy miss. Fairy Q.
With such sober and unnoted passion
He did behave his anger ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an argument. Shakesp.

To BEHA'VE. v. n. To act; to conduct one's self. It is taken either in a good or a bad sense; as, he behaved well or ill.

BEHA'VIOUR. n. s. [from behave.]

1. Manner of behaving one's self, whether good or bad; manners; carriage, with respect to propriety.

Mopsa, curious in any thing but her own good behaviour, followed Zelmane. Sidney.

2. External appearance with respect to grace.

He marked, in Dora's dancing, good grace and handsome behaviour. Sidney.

3. Gesture; manner of action, adapted to particular occasions.

Well witnessing the most submissive behaviour that a thralled heart could express. Sidney.
When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

One man sees how much another man is a fool, when he dedicates his behaviour to love. Shakesp.
And he changed his behaviour before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands. 1 Samuel.

4. Elegance of manners; gracefulness.
The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit; and study, for the most part, rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.
He who adviseth the philosopher, altogether devoted to the Muses, sometimes to offer sacrifice to the altars of the Graces, thought knowledge imperfect without behaviour. Wotton.

5. Conduct; general practice; course of life.
To him, who hath a prospect of the state that attends men after this life, depending on their behaviour here, the measures of good and evil are changed. Locke.

6. To be upon one's behaviour. A familiar phrase, noting such a state as requires great caution; a state in which a failure in behaviour will have bad consequences.
Tyrants themselves are upon their behaviour to a superiour power. L'Estrange.

To BEHE'AD, v. a. [from be and head.] To deprive of the head; to kill by cutting off the head.
His beheading he underwent with all christian magnanimity. Clarendon.
On each side they fly,
By chains connext, and, with destructive sweep,
Behead whole troops at once Philips
Mary, queen of Scots, was beheaded in the reign of queen Elizabeth. Addison

BEHE'LD. participle passive from behold; which see.
All hail! ye virgin daughters of the main!
Ye streams, beyond my hopes beheld again! Pope.

BE'HEMOTH. n. s. Behemoth, in Hebrew, signifies beasts in general, particularly the larger kind, fit for service. But Job speaks of an animal behemoth, and describes its properties. Bochart has taken much care to make it the hippopotamus, or river horse. Sanctius thinks it is an ox. The Fathers suppose the devil to be meant by it. But we agree with the generality of interpreters, that it is the elephant. Calmet.
Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox. Job.
Behold! in planted mail
Behemoth rears his head. Thomson.

BE'HEN. } n. s. Valerian roots. Also a
BEN. } fruit resembling the tamarisk, from which perfumers extract an oil. Dict.

BEHE'ST. n. s. [from be and hest; hæf, Saxon.] Command; precept; mandate.
Her tender youth had obediently lived under her parents behests, without framing, out of her own will, the forechoosing of any thing. Sidney.
Such joy he had their stubborn hearts to quell,
And sturdy courage tame with dreadful awe,
That his behest they fear'd as a proud tyrant's law,
Spenser.
I, messenger from everlasting Jove,
In his great name thus his behest do tell. Fairfax.
To visit oft those happy tribes,
On high behests his angels to and fro
Pass'd frequent. Milton.
In heav'n God ever blest, and his divine
Behests obey, worthiest to be obey'd! Milton.

To BEHI'GHT. v. a. pret. behot, part. behight. [from hatan to promise, Sax.]
1. To promise: this word is obsolete.
Sir Guyon, mindful of his vow y'plight,
Up rose from drowsy couch, and him addrest
Unto the journey which he had behight. Fairy Q.
2. To entrust; to commit.
That most glorious house that glist'reth bright,
Whereof the keys are to thy hand behight
By wise Fidelia. Fairy Queen.
3. Perhaps to call; to name; hight being often put, in old authors, for named, or was named.

BEHI'ND. prep. [hindan, Saxon.]
1. At the back of another.
Acontes hasted with harquebusiers, which he had caused his horsemen to take behind them upon their horses. Knolles.

Piety and virtue are not only delightful for the present, but they leave peace and contentment behind them Tillotson.
6. Remaining after the death of those to whom it belonged.
What he gave me to publish, was but a small part of what he left behind him. Pope.
7. At a distance from something going before.
Such is the swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves our sense behind. Dryden.
8. Inferiour to another; having the posteriour place with regard to excellence.
After the overthrow of this first house of God, a second was erected, but with so great odds, that they wept, which beheld how much this latter came behind it. Hooker.
9. On the other side of something.
From light retir'd behind his daughter's bed,
He, for approaching sleep, compos'd his head. Dry.

BEHI'ND. adv.
1. Out of sight; not yet produced to view; remaining.
We cannot be sure that we have all the particulars before us; and that there is no evidence behind, and yet unseen, that may cast the probability on the other side. Locke.
2. Most of the former senses may become adverbial, by suppressing the accusative case; as, I left my money behind, or behind me.

BEHI'NDHAND. adv. [from behind and hand.]
1. In a state in which rent or profit, or any advantage, is anticipated, so that less is to be received, or more performed, than the natural or just proportion.
Your trade would suffer, if your being behindhand has made the natural use so high, that your tradesman cannot live upon his labour. Locke.
2. Not upon equal terms, with regard to forwardness. In this sense it is followed by with.
Consider, whether it is not better to be half a year behindhand with the fashionable part of the world, than to strain beyond his circumstances. Spectator.
3. Shakespeare uses it as an adjective, but licentiously, for backward; tardy.
And these thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behindhand slackness. Shakesp.

To BEHOLD, v. a. pret. I beheld, I have beheld or beholden. [behealdan, Saxon.] To view; to see; to look upon: to behold is to see, in an emphatical or intensive sense.
Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears. Ezekiel.
When Thessalians on horseback were beheld afar off, while their horses watered, while their heads were depressed, they were conceived by the spectators to be one animal. Brown's Vulg. Err.
Man looks aloft, and, with erected eyes,
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden.
At this the former tale again he told,
With thund'ring tone, and dreadful to behold. Dryd.
The Saviour comes, by ancient bards foretold!
Hear him, ye deaf; and all ye blind behold! Pope.

BEHO'LD. interject. [from the verb.] See; lo: a word by which attention is excited, or admiration noted.
Behold! I am with thee, and will keep thee. Gen.
When out of hope behold her! not far off,
Such as I saw her in my dream, adorn'd
With what all earth or heaven could bestow,
To make her amiable. Milton.

BEHO'LDEN. particip. adj. [gehouden, Dutch; that is, held in obligation. It is very corruptly written beholding.] Obliged; bound in gratitude: with the particle to.
Horns, which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for. Shakesp
Little are we beholden to your love,
And little look'd for at your helping hands. Shaks.
I found you next, in respect of bond both of near alliance, and particularly of communication in studies: wherein I must acknowledge myself beholden to you. Bacon.
I think myself mightily beholden to you for the reprehension you then gave us. Addison.
We, who see men under the awe of justice, cannot conceive what savage creatures they would be without it; and how much beholden we are to that wise contrivance. Atterb.

BEHO'LDER. n. s. [from behold.] Spectator; he that looks upon any thing.
Was this the face,
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink? Shak.
These beasts among,
Beholders rude, and shallow to discern
Half what in thee is fair, one man except,
Who sees thee? Milton.
Things of wonder give no less delight
To the wise Maker's than beholder's sight. Denham.
The justling chiefs in rude encounters join,
Each fair beholder trembling for her knight.
Granville.
The charitable foundations, in the church of Rome, exceed all the demands of charity; and raise envy, rather than compassion, in the breasts of beholders. Atterbury.

BEHO'LDING. adj. [corrupted from beholden.] Obliged See BEHOLDEN.

BEHO'LDING. n. s. Obligation.
Love to virtue, and not to any particular beholdings, hath expressed this my testimony. Carew

BEHO'LDINGNESS, n. s. [from beholding, mistaken for beholden.] The state of being obliged.

In this my debt I seem'd loth to confess,
In that I shunn'd beholdingness. Donne.

BEHO'OF. n. s. [from behoove.] That which behooves; that which is advantageous profit; advantage.
Her majesty may alter any thing of those laws, for her own behoof, and for the good of the people. Spenser.
No mean recompence it brings
To your behoof: if I that region lost,
All usurpation thence expell'd, reduce
To her original darkness, and your sway. Milton.
Wert thou some star, which from the ruin'd roof

Of shak'd Olympus by mischance didst fall;
Which careful Jove, in nature's true behoof,
Took up, and in fit place did reinstate. Milton.

Because it was for the behoof of the animal, that, upon any sudden accident, it might be awakened, there were no shuts or stopples made for the ears. Ray.

It would be of no behoof, for the settleing of government, unless there were a way taught, how to know the person to whom belonged this power and dominion. Locke.

To BEHOOVE. v. n. [behopan, Saxon, it is a duty.] To be fit; to be meet: either with respect to duty, necessity, or convenience. It is used only impersonally with it.

For better examination of their quality, it behooveth the very foundation and root, the highest well-spring and fountain of them, to be discovered. Hooker.

He did so prudently temper his passions, as that none of them made him wanting in the offices of life, which it behooved or became him to perform. Atterbury.

But should you lure the monarch of the brook,
Behooves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson.

BEHO'OVEFUL. adj. [from behoof.] Useful; profitable; advantageous. This word is somewhat antiquated.

It is very behooveful in this country of Ireland, where there are waste deserts full of grass, that the same should be eaten down. Spenser.

Laws are many times full of imperfections; and that which is supposed behooveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker.

Madam, we have cull'd such necessaries
As are behooveful for our state to-morrow. Shak.

It may be most behooveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly: so it is as requisite, in matters of judgment, punishment, and censure, that the same be transacted privately. Clarendon.

BEHO'OVEFULLY. adv. [from behooveful.] Profitably; usefully.

Tell us of more weighty dislikes than these, and that may more behoovefully import the reformation. Spenser.

BEHO'T. [preterite, as it seems, of behight, to promise.]

With sharp intended sting so rude him smote,
That to the earth him drove as striken dead,
Ne living wight would have him life behot. FairyQ.

BE'ING. particip. [from be.]

Those, who have their hope in another life, look upon themselves as being on their passage through this. Atterb.

BE'ING. n. s. [from be.]

1. Existence: opposed to nonentity.

Of him all things have both received their first being, and their continuance to be that which they are. Hooker.

Yet is not God the author of her ill,
Tho' author of her being, and being there. Davies.

There is none but he,
Whose being I do fear: and under him
My genius is rebuked. Shakesp. Macb.

Thee, Father, first they sung, omnipotent,
Immutable, immortal, infinite,
Eternal king! Thee, Author of all being,
Fountain of light! Milton's Par. Lost.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being; raising us from nothing to be an excellent creation. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Consider every thing as not yet in being, then examine, if it must needs have been at all, or what other ways it might have been. Bentley.

2. A particular state or condition.

Those happy spirits which, ordained by fate,
For future being and new bodies wait. Dryden.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;
Or who could suffer being here below? Pope

As now your own, our beings were of old,
And once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould. Pope.

3. The person existing.

Ah fair, yet false! ah being form'd to cheat
By seeming kindness, mixt with deep deceit! Dryd

It is folly to seek the approbation of any being, besides the supreme; because no other being can make a right judgment of us, and because we can procure no considerable advantage from the approbation of any other being. Addison, Spect.

BE'ING, conjunc. [from be.] Since. Dict.

BE IT SO. A phrase of anticipation, suppose it be so; or of permission, let it be so.

And not bely'd his mighty father's name.
Dryden's Æneid.

In the dispute whate'er I said,
My heart was by my tongue bely'd;
And in my looks you might have read
How much I argued on your side. Prior.

5. To fill with lies. This seems to be its meaning here.

'Tis slander, whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

BELIE'F. n. s. [from believe.]

1. Credit given to something, which we know not of ourselves, on account of the authority by which it is delivered.

Those comforts that shall never cease,
Future in hope, but present in belief. Wotton.
Faith is a firm belief of the whole word of God, of his gospel, commands, threats, and promises. Wake.

2. The theological virtue of faith, or firm confidence of the truths of religion.

No man can attain belief by the bare contemplation of heaven and earth; for that they neither are sufficient to give us as much as the least spark of light concerning the very principal mysteries of our faith. Hooker.

3. Religion; the body of tenets held by the professors of faith.

In the heat of general persecution, whereunto christian belief was subject upon the first promulgation, it much confirmed the weaker minds, when relation was made how God had been glorified through the sufferings of martyrs. Hooker.

4. Persuasion; opinion.

He can, I know, but doubt to think he will;
Yet hope would fain subscribe, and tempts belief. Milton.

All treaties are grounded upon the belief, that states will be found in their honour and observance of treaties. Temple.

5. The thing believed; the object of belief.

Superstitious prophecies are not only the belief of fools, but the talk sometimes of wise men. Bacon.

6. Creed; a form containing the articles of faith.

3. With the particle in, to hold as an object of faith.

Believe in the Lord your God, so shall you be established. 2 Chron.

4. With the particle upon, to trust; to place full confidence in; to rest upon with faith.

To them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. John.

5. I believe, is sometimes used as a way of slightly noting some want of certainty or exactness.

Though they are, I believe, as high as most steeples in England, yet a person, in his drink, fell down, without any other hurt than the breaking of an arm. Addison on Italy.

BELI'EVER. n. s. [from believe.]

1. He that believes, or gives credit.

Discipline began to enter into conflict with churches, which, in extremity, had been believers of it. Hooker.

2. A professor of Christianity.

Infidels themselves did discern, in matters of life, when believers did well, when otherwise. Hooker.
If he which writeth do that which is forcible, how should he which readeth be thought to do that, which, in itself, is of no force to work belief, and to save believers? Hooker.
Mysteries held by us have no power, pomp, or wealth, but have been maintained by the universal body of true believers, from the days of the apostles, and will be to the resurrection; neither will the gates of hell prevail against them. Swift.

BELI'EVINGLY. adv. [from To believe.] After a believing manner.

BELI'KE. adv. [from like, as by likelihood.]

1. Probably; likely; perhaps.

2. It is sometimes used in a sense of irony, as it may be supposed

We think, belike, that he will accept what the meanest of them would disdain. Hooker.
God appointed the sea to one of them, and the land to the other, because they were so great, that the sea could not hold them both; or else, belike, if the sea had been large enough, we might have gone a fishing for elephants. Brerew. on Lang.

BELI'VE. adv. [bilve, Sax. probably from bi and lyre, in the sense of vivacity, speed, quickness.] Speedily; quickly: a word out of use.

By that same way the direful dames do drive
Their mournful chariot, fill'd with rusty blood,
And down to Pluto's house are come belive.
Fairy Queen

BELL. n. s. [bel, Saxon; supposed, by Skinner, to come from pelvis, Lat. a basin. See BALL.]

1. A vessel, or hollow body of cast metal, formed to make a noise by the act of a clapper, hammer, or some other instrument striking against it. Bells are in the towers of churches, to call the congregation together.

Your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you to hear with reverence. Shakesp.
Get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself,
And bid the merry bells ring to thy ear,
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead.
Shakesp.
Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty.
Holder's Elements of Speech.
He has no one necessary attention to any thing but the bell, which calls to prayers twice a-day.
Addison, Spectator

2. It is used for any thing in the form of a bell, as the cups of flowers.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I,
In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakesp. Tempest.
The humming bees, that hunt the golden dew,
In summer's heat on tops of lilies feed,
And creep within their bells to suck the balmy seed. Dryden.

3. A small hollow globe of metal perforated, and containing in it a solid ball; which, when it is shaken, by bounding against the sides, gives a sound.

The dull fat captain, with a hound's deep throat,
Would bellow out a laugh in a base note. Dryden.
This gentleman is accustomed to roar and bellow so terribly loud, that he frightens us. Tatler.

4. To roar as the sea in a storm, or as the wind; to make any continued noise, that may cause terrour.

Till, at the last, he heard a dread sound,
Which thro' the wood loud bellowing did rebound.
Spenser.
The rising rivers float the nether ground,
And rocks the bellowing voice of boiling seas rebound. Dryden.

BE'LLOWS. n. s. [bilg, Sax. perhaps it is corrupted from bellies, the wind being contained in the hollow, or belly. It has no singular; for we usually say, a pair of bellows; but Dryden has used bellows as a singular.]

1. The instrument used to blow the fire.

Since sighs, into my inward furnace turn'd,
For bellows serve to kindle more the fire Sidney
One, with great bellows, gather'd filling air,
And with forc'd wind the fuel did enflame.
Fairy Queen.
The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke. Dryd.
The lungs, as bellows, supply a force of breath; and the aspera arteria is as the nose of bellows, to collect and convey the breath. Holder.

2. In the following passage it is singular.

Thou neither like a bellows, swell'st thy face,
As if thou wert to blow the burning mass
Of melting ore. Dryden.

BE'LLUINE. adj. [belluinus, Lat.] Beastly; belonging to a beast; savage; brutal.

BENCH. n. s. [benc, Sax. banc. Fr.]

1. A seat, distinguished from a stool by its greater length.

The seats and benches shone of ivory,
An hundred nymphs sat side by side about. Spenser.

All Rome is pleas'd when Statius will rehearse,
And longing crowds expect the promis'd verse;
His lofty numbers with so great a gust
They hear, and swallow with such eager lust:
But while the common suffrage crown'd his cause,
And broke the benches with their loud applause,
His muse had starv'd, had not a piece unread,
And by a player bought, supply'd her bread. Dryden.

2. A seat of justice; the seat where judges sit.

To pluck down justice from your awful bench;
To trip the course of law. Shakesp.

Cyriac, whose grandsire on the royal bench
Of British Themis, with no mean applause,
Pronounc'd, and in his volumes taught our laws,
Which others at their bar so often wrench. Milton.

3. The persons sitting on a bench; as, the whole bench voted the same way.

Fools to popular praise aspire
Of public speeches, which worse fools admire;
While, from both benches, with redoubled sounds,
Th' applause of lords and commoners abounds. Dryden.

To BENCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with benches.

'Twas bench'd with turf, and goodly to be seen,
The thick young grass arose in fresher green. Dryden.

2. To seat upon a bench.

His cupbearer, whom I from meaner form
Have bench'd, and rear'd to worship. Shakesp.

BE'NCHER. n. s. [from bench.] Those gentlemen of the inns of court are called benchers, who have been readers; they being admitted to plead within the bar, are also called inner barristers. The benchers being the seniors of the house, are intrusted with its government and direction, and out of them is a treasurer yearly chosen. Blount. Chamber.

I was taking a walk in the gardens of Lincoln's Inn; a favour that is indulged me by several benchers, who are grown old with me. Tatler.

7. To bend the brow. To knit the brow; to frown.

Some have been seen to bite their pen, scratch their head, bend their brows, bite their lips, beat the board, and tear their paper. Camden.

To BEND. v. n.

1. To be incurvated.
2. To lean or jut over.

There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully on the confined deep. Shakesp.

3. To resolve; to determine: in this sense the participle is commonly used.

Not so, for once, indulg'd they sweep the main,
Deaf to the call, or, hearing, hear in vain;
But, bent on mischief, bear the waves before.
Dryden.

While good, and anxious for his friend,
He's still severely bent against himself;
Renouncing sleep, and rest, and food, and ease
Addison.

A state of slavery, which they are bent upon with so much eagerness and obstinacy. Addison.

He is every where bent on instruction, and avoids all manner of digressions. Addison.

BE'NDER. n. s. [from To bend.]

1. The person who bends.
2. The instrument with which any thing is bent.

These bows, being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender, or rack, that are used to others.
Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

BE'NDWITH. n. s. An herb. Dict.

BENE'APED. adj. [from neap.] A ship is said to be beneaped, when the water does not flow high enough to bring her off the ground, over a bar, or out of a dock. Dict.

BENE'ATH. prep. [beneoð, Sax. beneden, Dutch.]

1. Under; lower in place: opposed to above.

Their woolly fleeces, as the rites requir'd,
He laid beneath him, and to rest retir'd. Dryden.

Ages to come might Ormond's picture know;
And palms for thee beneath his laurels grow. Prior.

2. Under, as overborne or overwhelmed by some pressure.

Our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds, and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds. Shakesp.

And oft on rocks their tender wings they tear,
And sink beneath the burdens which they bear.
Dryden.

3. Lower in rank, excellence, or dignity.

We have reason to be persuaded, that there are far more species of creatures above us, than there are beneath. Locke.

4. Unworthy of; unbeseeming; not equal to.

He will do nothing that is beneath his high station, nor omit doing any thing which becomes it.
Atterbury.

BENE'ATH. adv.

1. In a lower place; under.

Hell's horrid mansions, and the realms of death.
Yalden.

BE'NEDICT. adj. [benedictus, Lat.] Having mild and salubrious qualities: an old physical term.

It is not a small thing won in physick, if you can make rhubarb, and other medicines that are benedict, as strong purges as those that are not without some malignity. Bacon.

BENEDI'CTION. n. s. [benedictio, Lat.]

1. Blessing; a decretory pronunciation of happiness.

A sov'reign shame so bows him; his unkindness,
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his dog-hearted daughters. Shakesp.

From him will raise
A mighty nation; and upon him show'r
His benediction so, that, in his seed,
All nations shall be blest. Milton.

2. The advantage conferred by blessing.

Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity is the blessing of the New; which carrieth the greater benediction, and the clearer revelation of God's favour. Bacon.

3. Acknowledgments for blessings received; thanks.

Could he less expect
Than glory and benediction, that is, thanks?
Milton.

Such ingenious and industrious persons are delighted in searching out natural rarities; reflecting upon the Creator of them his due praises and benedictions. Ray.

4. The form of instituting an abbot.

What consecration is to a bishop, that benediction is to an abbot; but in a different way: for a bishop is not properly such, till consecration; but an abbot, being elected and confirmed, is properly such before benediction. Ayliffe.

BENEFA'CTION. n. s. [from benefacio, Lat.]

1. The act of conferring a benefit.
2. The benefit conferred: which is the more usual sense.

One part of the benefactions, was the expression of a generous and grateful mind. Atterbury.

BENEFA'CTOR. n. s. [from benefacio, Lat.] He that confers a benefit; frequently he that contributes to some public charity: it is used with of, but oftener with to, before the person benefited.

Then swell with pride, and must be titled gods,
Great benefactors of mankind, deliverers,
Worship'd with temple, priest, and sacrifice.
Milton.

From that preface he took his hint, though he had the baseness not to acknowledge his benefactor. Dryden.

I cannot but look upon the writer as my benefactor, if he conveys to me an improvement of my understanding. Addison.

Whoever makes ill returns to his benefactor, must needs be a common enemy to mankind.
Swift.

BENEFA'CTRESS. n. s. [from benefactor.] A woman who confers a benefit.

BENEFICE. n. s. [from beneficium, Lat.] Advantage conferred on another. This word is generally taken for all ecclesiastical livings, be they dignities or others. Cowell.

And of the priest eftsoons 'gan to enquire,
How to a benefice he might aspire Spenser.

Much to himself he thought, but little spoke,
And, undepriv'd, his benefice forsook. Dryd.

BE'NEFICED. adj. [from benefice.] Possessed of a benefice, or church preferment.

The usual rate between the beneficed man and the religious person, was one moiety of the benefice. Ayliffe.

BENEFICENCE. n. s. [from beneficent.] The practice of doing good; active goodness.

You could not extend your beneficence to so many persons; yet you have lost as few days as Aurelius. Dryden.

Love and charity extends our beneficence to the miseries of our brethren. Rogers

BENEFICENT. adj. [from beneficus, beneficentior, Lat.] Kind; doing good. It differs from benign, as the act from the disposition; beneficence being kindness, or benignity exerted in action.

Such a creature could not have his origination from any less than the most wise and beneficent being, the great God. Hale.

But Phœbus, thou, to man beneficent,
Delight'st in building cities. Prior.

BENEFI'CIAL. adj. [from beneficium, Lat.]

1. Advantageous; conferring benefits; profitable; useful: with to before the person benefited.

Not any thing is made to be beneficial to him, but all things for him, to shew beneficence and grace in them. Hooker.

This supposition grants the opinion to conduce to order in the world, consequently to be very beneficial to mankind. Tillotson.

The war, which would have been most beneficial to us, and destructive to the enemy, was neglected.
Swift.

Are the present revolutions in circular orbs more beneficial than the other would be? Bentley.

2. Helpful; medicinal.

In the first access of such a disease, any deobstruent, without much acrimony, is beneficial.
Arbuthnot.

BENEFI'CIAL. n. s. An old word for a benefice.

For that the groundwork is, and end of all,
How to obtain a beneficial. Spenser.

BENEFI'CIALLY. adv. [from beneficial.] Advantageously; profitably; helpfully.

BENEFI'CIALNESS. n. s. [from beneficial.] Usefulness; profit; helpfulness.

Though the knowledge of these objects be commendable for their contentation and curiosity, yet they do not commend their knowledge to us, upon the account of their usefulness and beneficialness.
Hale.

BENEFI'CIARY. adj. [from benefice.] Holding something in subordination to another; having a dependent and secondary possession, without sovereign power.

The duke of Parma was tempted by no less promise, than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the seignory in chief of the pope. Bacon.

BENEFICIARY. n. s. He that is in possession of a benefice.

A benefice is either said to be a benefice with the cure of souls, or otherwise. In the first case, if it be annexed to another benefice, the beneficiary is obliged to serve the parish church in his own proper person. Ayliffe.

BE'NEFIT. n. s. [beneficium, Lat.]

1. A kindness; a favour conferred; an act of love.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms. Shakesp.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits. Psalms.

Offer'd life
Neglect not, and the benefit embrace
By faith, not void of works. Milton.

2. Advantage; profit; use.

The creature abateth his strength for the benefit of such as put their trust in thee. Wisdom.

3. In law.

Benefit of clergy is an ancient liberty of the church. When a priest, or one within orders, is arraigned of felony before a secular judge, he may pray his clergy; that is, pray to be delivered to his ordinary, to purge himself of the offence objected to him: and this might be done in case of murder. The ancient law, in this point of clergy, is much altered; for clerks are no more delivered to their ordinaries to be purged, but now every man, though not within orders, is put to read at the bar, being found guilty, and convicted of such felony as this benefit is granted for; and so burnt in the hand, and set free for the first time, if the ordinary's commissioner, or deputy, standing by, do say, Legit ut clericus; or, otherwise, suffereth death for his transgression. Cowell.

To BE'NEFIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To do good to; to advantage.

What course I mean to hold,
Shall nothing benefit your knowledge. Shakesp.

He was so far from benefiting trade, that he did it a great injury, and brought Rome in danger of a famine. Arbuthnot.

To BE'NEFIT. v. n. To gain advantage; to make improvement.

To tell you therefore what I have benefited herein, among old renowned authors, I shall spare. Milton.

BENE'MPT. adj. [See NEMPT.] Named; marked out: an obsolete word.

Much greater gifts for guerdon thou shalt gain,
Than kid or cosset, which I thee benempt;
Then up I say. Spenser.

To BENE'T. v. a. [from net.] To ensnare; to surround as with toils.

Being thus benetted round with villains,
Ere I could mark the prologue, to my bane
They had begun the play. Shakesp.

BENE'VOLENCE. n. s. [benevolentia, Lat.]

1. Disposition to do good; kindness; charity; good will.

Grasp the whole worlds of reason, life and sense,
In one close system of benevolence. Pope.

2. The good done; the charity given.

3. A kind of tax.

This tax, called a benevolence, was devised by Edward IV. for which he sustained much envy. It was abolished by Richard III. Bacon

BENEVOLENT. adj. [benevolens, benevolentia, Lat.] Kind; having good will, or kind inclinations.

Thou good old man, benevolent as wise. Pope.

Nature all
Is blooming and benevolent like thee. Thomson.

To BENI'GHT. v. a. [from night.]

1. To involve in darkness; to darken; to shrowd with the shades of night.

He that has light within his own clear breast
May sit i' th' centre, and enjoy bright day;
But he that hides a dark soul, and foul thoughts,
Benighted walks under the mid-day sun;
Himself is his own dungeon. Milton.

Those bright stars that did adorn our hemisphere, as those dark shades that did benight it, vanish. Boyle.

A storm begins, the raging waves run high,
The clouds look heavy, and benight the sky. Garth.

The miserable race of men, that live
Benighted half the year, benumb'd with frosts,
Under the polar Bear. Philips.

2. To surprise with the coming on of night.

Being benighted, the sight of a candle, I saw a good way off, directed me to a young shepherd's house. Sidney.

Here some benighted angel, in his way,
Might ease his wings; and, seeing heav'n appear
In its best work of mercy, think it there. Dryd.

3. To debar from intellectual light; to cloud with ignorance.

But what so long in vain, and yet unknown
By poor mankind's benighted wit is sought,
Shall in this age to Britain first be shown. Dryd

BENI'GN. adj. [benignus, Lat. It is pronounced without the g, as if written benine; but the g is preserved in benignity.]

1. Kind; generous; liberal; actually good. See BENEFICENT.

This turn hath made amends! Thou hast fulfill'd
Thy words, Creator bounteous and benign!
Giver of all things fair. Milton.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign. Milton.

We owe more to Heav'n, than to the sword,
The wish'd return of so benign a lord. Waller.

What Heav'n bestows upon the earth, in kind influences and benign aspects, is paid it back in sacrifice and adoration. South.

They who delight in the suffering of inferiour creatures, will not be very compassionate or benign. Locke.

Diff'rent are thy names,
As thy kind hand has founded many cities,
Or dealt benign thy various gifts to men. Prior.

2. Wholesome; not malignant.

These salts are of a benign mild nature, in healthy persons; but, in others, retain their original qualities, which they discover in cachexies. Arbuthnot.

BENIGN Disease, is when all the usual symptoms appear in the small-pox, or any acute disease, favourably, and without any irregularities, or unexpected changes. Quincy.

BENI'GNITY. n. s. [from benign.]

1. Graciousness; goodness.

It is true, that his mercy will forgive offenders, or his benignity co-operate to their conversion. Brown.

Although he enjoys the good that is done him, he is unconcerned to value the benignity of him that does it. South.

2. Actual kindness.

He which useth the benefit of any special benignity, may enjoy it with good conscience. Hooker.

The king was desirous to establish peace rather by benignity than blood. Hayward.

3. Salubrity; wholesome quality; friendliness to vital nature.

Bones receive a quicker agglutination in sanguine than in cholerick bodies, by reason of the benignity of the serum, which sendeth out better matter for a callus. Wiseman.

BENI'GNLY. adv. [from benign.] Favourably; kindly; graciously.

'Tis amazement more than love,
Which her radiant eyes do move;
If less splendour wait on thine,
Yet they so benignly shine,
I would turn my dazzled sight
To behold their milder light. Waller.

Oh, truly good, and truly great!
For glorious as he rose, benignly so he set. Prior.

BE'NISON. n. s. [benir to bless; benissons, Fr.] Blessing; benediction: not now used, unless ludicrously.

We have no such daughter; nor shall ever see
That face of hers again; therefore, begone
Without our grace, our love, our benison. Shakesp.

Unmuffle, ye fair stars, and thou, fair moon,
That wont'st to love the traveller's benison. Milton.

BE'NNET. n. s. An herb; the same with avens.

BENT. n. s. [from the verb To bend.]

Strike gently, and hold your rod at a bent a little. Walton.

2. Degree of flexure.

There are divers subtle inquiries concerning the strength required to the bending of bows; the force they have in the discharge, according to the several bents; and the strength required to be in the string of them. Wilkins.

3. Declivity.

A mountain stood,
Threat'ning from high, and overlook'd the wood;
Beneath the low'ring brow, and on a bent,
The temple stood of Mars armipotent. Dryd.

4. Utmost power, as of a bent bow.

Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent. Shakesp.

We both obey,
And here give up ourselves, in the full bent,
To lay our service freely at your feet. Shakesp.

5. Application of the mind; strain of the mental powers.

The understanding should be brought to the knotty parts of knowledge, that try the strength of thought, and a full bent of the mind, by insensible degrees. Locke.

6. Inclination; disposition towards something.

O who does know the bent of women's fantasy!
Spenser.

To your own bents dispose you; you'll be found
Be you beneath the sky. Shakesp.

He knew the strong bent of the country towards the house of York. Bacon

Soon inclin'd t' admit delight,
The bent of nature! Milton.

The golden age was first; when man, yet new,
No rule but uncorrupted reason knew;
And, with a native bent, did good pursue. Dryd.

Let there be propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same sedulity and indefatigable industry. South.

'Tis odds but the scale turns at last on nature's side, and the evidence of one or two senses gives way to the united bent and tendency of all the five. Atterbury.

7. Determination; fixed purpose.

Their unbelief we may not impute into insufficiency in the mean which is used, but to the wilful bent of their obstinate hearts against it. Hooker

Yet we saw them forced to give way to the bent and current humour of the people, in favour of their ancient and lawful government. Temple

8. Turn of the temper, or disposition; shape, or fashion, superinduced by art.

Not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at. Shakesp.
Two of them have the very bent of honour. Shakesp.
Then thy straight rule set virtue in my sight,
The crooked line reforming by the right;
My reason took the bent of thy command,
Was form'd and polish'd by thy skilful hand. Dryden.

9. Tendency; flexion; particular direction.

The exercising the understanding in the several ways of reasoning, teacheth the mind suppleness, to apply itself more dexterously to bents and turns of the matter, in all its researches. Locke.

10. A stalk of grass, called bent-grass.

His spear, a bent both stiff and strong,
And well near of two inches long;
The pile was of a horse-fly's tongue,
Whose sharpness nought revers'd. Drayt. Nymph.
Then the flowers of the vines; it is a little dust, like the dust of a bent, which grows upon the cluster, in the first coming forth. Bacon's Essays.
June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass-green, upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair. Peacham.

BE'NTING Time. [from bent.] The time when pigeons feed on bents before peas are ripe.

Bare benting times, and moulting months, may come,
When, lagging late, they cannot reach their home. Dryden.

I sought no homage from the race that write;
I kept, like Asian monarchs, from their sight:
Poems I heeded, now berhym'd so long,
No more than thou, great George! a birthday song. Pope

BERLI'N. n. s. [from Berlin, the city where they were first made.] A coach of a particular form.

Beware of Latin authors all!
Nor think your verses sterling,
Though with a golden pen you scrawl,
And scribble in a berlin. Swift

BERME. n. s. [Fr. in fortification.] A space of ground three, four, or five feet wide, left without, between the foot of the rampart and the side of the mote, to prevent the earth from falling down into the mote; sometimes palisadoed. Harris.

To BE'ROB. v. a. [from rob.] To rob; to plunder; to wrong any, by taking away something from him by stealth or violence. Not used.

She said, Ah dearest lord! what evil star
On you hath frown'd, and pour'd his influence bad,
That of yourself you thus berobbed are? Fairy Q.

BE'RRY. n. s. [beng, Sax. from bean to bear.] Any small fruit, with many seeds or small stones.

She smote the ground, the which straightforth did yield
A fruitful olive tree, with berries spread,
That all the gods admir'd. Spenser.
The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of basest quality. Shakesp.

To BE'RRY. v. n. [from the noun.] To bear berries.

BERRY-BEARING Cedar. [cedrus baccifera, Lat.] The leaves are squamose, somewhat like those of the cypress. The katkins, or male flowers, are produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The fruit is a berry, inclosing three hard seeds in each. The wood is of great use in the Levant, is large timber, and may be thought the shittim-wood mentioned in the Scripture, of which many of the ornaments to the famous temple of Solomon were made. Miller.

BERRY-BEARING Orach. See MULBERRY BLIGHT.

BERT, is the same with our bright; — in the Latin, illustris and clarus. So Ecbert, eternally famous or bright; Sigbert, famous conqueror. And she who was termed by the Germans Bertha, was by the Greeks called Eudoxia, as is observed by Lintprandus. Of the same sort were these, Phædrus, Epiphanius, Photius, Lampridius, Fulgentius, Illustris. Gibson's Camden.

BERTH. n. s. [with sailors.] See BIRTH.

BE'RTRAM. n. s. [pyrethrum, Lat.] A sort of herb, called also bastard pellitory.

BE'RYL. n. s. [beryllus, Lat.] A kind of precious stone.

May thy billows roll ashore
The beryl and the golden ore. Milton.

The beryl of our lapidaries is only a fine sort of cornelian, of a more deep bright red, sometimes with a cast of yellow, and more transparent than the common cornelian. Woodward.

To BESCR'EEN. v. a. [from screen.] To cover with a screen; to shelter; to conceal.

What man art thou, that thus bescreen'd in night,
So stumblest on my counsel? Shakesp.

To BESE'ECH. v. a. pret. I besought, I have besought. [from ꝑecan, Sax. verzoeken, Dutch.]

1. To entreat; to supplicate; to implore; sometimes before a person.

I beseech you, Sir, pardon me; it is only a letter from my brother, that I have not all over-read. Shakesp.

I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds. Philemon, 10.

I, in the anguish of my heart, beseech you
To quit the dreadful purpose of your soul. Addison.

2. To beg; to ask before a thing.

But Eve fell humble, and besought
His peace, and thus proceeded in her plaint, Milton.

Before I come to them, I beseech your patience,
Whilst I speak something to ourselves here present. Spratt.

To BESE'EM. v. n. [beziemen, Dutch,] To become; to be fit; to be decent for.

What form of speech or behaviour, beseemeth us in our prayers to Almighty God? Hooker.

This oversight
Beseems thee not, in whom such virtues spring. Fairfax.

Verona's ancient citizens
Cast by their brave beseeming ornaments. Shakesp.

What thoughts he had, beseems not me to say;
Though some surmise he went to fast and pray. Dryden.

BESE'EN. particip. [from besie, Skinner. This word I have only found in Spenser.] Adapted; adjusted; becoming.

Forth came that ancient lord and aged queen,
Armed in antique robes down to the ground,
And sad habiliments right well beseen. Fairy Q.

To BESE'T. v. a. pret. I beset; I have beset. [beꝑittan, Sax.]

1. To beseige; to hem in; to inclose; as with a siege.

Follow him that's fled;
The thicket is beset, he cannot 'scape. Shakesp.

Now, Cæsar, let thy troops beset our gates,
And bar each avenue——
Cato shall open to himself a passage. Addison.

I know thou look'st on me as on a wretch
Beset with ills, and cover'd with misfortunes. Addison.

2. To waylay; to surround.

Draw forth thy weapon, we're beset with thieves;
Rescue thy mistress. Shakesp.

The only righteous in a world perverse,
And therefore hated, therefore so beset
With foes for daring single to be just. Milton.

True fortitude I take to be the quiet possession of a man's self, and an undisturbed doing his duty, whatever evil besets, or danger lies in his way. Locke.

3. To embarrass; to perplex; to entangle without any means of escape.

Now, daughter Sylvia, you are hard beset. Shakesp.

Thus Adam, sore beset reply'd. Milton.

Sure, or I read her visage much amiss,
Or grief besets her hard. Rowe.

We be in this world beset with sundry uneasinesses, distracted with different desires. Locke.

4. To fall upon; to harass. Not used.

But they him spying, both with greedy force
At once upon him ran, and him beset
With strokes of mortal steel. Fairy Queen.

To BESHRE'W. v. a. [The original of this word is somewhat obscure: as it evidently implies to wish ill, some derive it from heschryen, Germ. to enchant. Topsel, in his Book of Animals, deduces it from the shrew mouse, an animal, says he, so poisonous, that its bite is a severe curse. A shrew likewise signifies a scolding woman; but its origin is not known.]

1. To wish a curse to.

Nay, quoth the cock, but I beshrew us both,
If I believe a saint upon his oath. Dryden's Fab.

2. To happen ill to.

Beshrew thee, cousin, which did'st lead me forth
Of that sweet way I was in to despair. Shakesp.

Now much beshrew my manners, and my pride,
If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied. Shakesp.

BESI'DE. BESI'DES. prep. [from be and side.]

1. At the side of another; near.

Beside the hearse a fruitful palmtree grows,
Ennobled since by this great funeral. Fairfax.

He caused me to sit down beside him. Bacon.

At his right hand, Victory
Sat eagle-wing'd; beside him hung his bow. Milt.

Fair Lavinia fled the fire
Before the gods and stood beside her sire. Dryden.

Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows;
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay.

Now under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
Unheard, unknown,
He makes his moan. Pope.

2. Over and above.

Doubtless, in man there is a nature found,
Beside the senses and above them far. Sir J. Davies.

In brutes, besides the exercise of sensitive perception and imagination, there are lodged instincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty. Hale.

We may be sure there were great numbers of wise and learned men, beside those whose names are in the Christian records, who took care to examine our Saviour's history. Addison on the Christ. Relig.

Precepts of morality, besides the natural corruption of our tempers, are abstracted from ideas of sense. Addison.

3. Not according to, though not contrary; as we say, somethings are beside nature, some are contrary to nature.

The Stoicks did hold a necessary connexion of causes; but they believed, that God doth act præter & contra naturam, besides and against nature. Bramhall.

To say a thing is a chance, as it relates to second causes, signifies no more, than that there are some events beside the knowledge, purpose, expectation, and power of second causes. South.

Providence often disposes of things by a method beside, and above, the discoveries of man's reason. South.

It is beside my present business to enlarge upon this speculation. Locke.

4. Out of; in a state of deviating from.

You are too wilful blame,
And, since your coming here, have done
Enough to put him quite beside his patience. Shak.

Of vagabonds we say,
That they are ne'er beside their way. Hudibras.

These may serve as landmarks, to shew what lies in the direct way of truth, or is quite besides it. Locke.

5. Before a reciprocal pronoun, out of; as, beside himself; out of the order of rational beings; out of his wits.

They be carried beside themselves, to whom the dignity of publick prayer doth not discover somewhat more fitness in men of gravity, than in children. Hooker.

Only be patient, till we have appeas'd
The multitude beside themselves with fear. Shakesp.

Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad. Acts.

BESI'DE. BESI'DES. adv.

1. More than that; over and above.

If Cassio do remain
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly; and, besides, the Moor
May unfold me to him; there stand I in peril. Shakesp.

Besides, you know not, while you here attend,
Th' unworthy fate of your unhappy friend. Dryd.

That man that doth not know those things, which are of necessity for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson.

Some wonder, that the Turk never attacks this treasury. But, besides that he has attempted it formerly with no success, it is certain the Venetians keep too watchful an eye. Addison.

2. Not in this number; out of this class; not included here.

The men said unto Lot, Hast thou here any besides? Genesis.

Outlaws and robbers, who break with all the world besides, must keep faith among themselves. Locke.

All that we feel of it begins and ends
In the small circle of our foes or friends;
To all beside as much an empty shade,
An Eugene living, as a Cæsar dead. Pope.

And dead, as living, 'tis our author's pride
Still to charm those who charm the world beside. Pope.

BESI'DERY. n. s. A species of pear.

To BESI'EGE. v. a. [from siege.] To belaguer; to lay siege to; to beset with armed forces; to endeavour to win a town or fortress, by surrounding it with an army, and forcing the defendants, either by violence or famine to give admission.

BI'AS. n. s. [biais, Fr. said to come from bihay, an old Gaulish word, signifying cross or thwart.

1. The weight lodged on one side of a bowl, which turns it from the straight line.

Madam, we'll play at bowls—
—'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,
And that my fortune runs against the bias. Shak.

2. Any thing which turns a man to a particular course, or gives the direction to his measures.

You have been mistook:
But nature to her bias drew in that. Shakesp.

This is that boasted bias of thy mind,
By which one way to dulness 'tis inclin'd. Dryd.

Mortality influences men's lives, and gives a bias to all their actions. Locke.

Wit and humour, that expose vice and folly furnish useful diversions. Raillery, under such regulations unbends the mind from severer contemplations, without throwing it off from its proper bias. Addison's Freeholder.

Thus nature gives us, let it check our pride,
The virtue nearest to our vice ally'd;
Reason the bias turns to good or ill. Pope.

3. Propension; inclination.

As for the religion of our poet, he seems to have some little bias towards the opinions of Wickliff. Dryden.

To BI'AS. v. a. [from the noun.] To incline to some side; to balance one way; to prejudice.

Were I in no more danger to be misled by ignorance, than I am to be biased by interest, I might give a very perfect account. Locke.

A desire leaning to either side, biases the judgment strangely; by indifference for every thing but truth, you will be excited to examine. Watts.

BI'AS. adv. It seems to be used adverbially in the following passage, conformably to the French mettre une chose de biais, to give any thing a wrong interpretation.

Every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have record, trial did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the aim.
Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

In the following passage it seems to be an adjective. Swelled, as the bowl on the biassed side. This is not used.

Blow till thy bias cheek
Outswell the cholic of puft Aquilon.
Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

BIB. n. s. A small piece of linen put upon the breasts of children over their clothes.
